Mme. Materna has told a German newspaper man in San Francisco all about the performance the Thomas concert troupe had to give for the benefit of a band of cowboys. She says: "We were stopping in Coldge, N. M., for dinner. Some twenty cowboys were at the depot, and when they heard that musicians were on board they immediately demanded that they be given some music. They pleaded that no circus had been in that vicinity for over a year, and that they were hungry to hear some music. I felt rather uneasy, as the fellows looked rather wild in their fantastic dress, with broad-brimmed hats, and armed to the teeth. I told them that I could not sing in English, when one of them in broad Bavarian dialect replied to me that German singing would be quite acceptable to him. Still I did not feel like singing, pretended to be unwell, and sent them to Miss Juch. She told them that under her contract she was not permitted to sing for any one unless Mr. Thomas had given his consent in writing. Then one of the cowboys, probably in fun, drew a revolver and so frightened Miss Juch that she at once began to sing 'Home, Sweet Home.' I don't think she ever sang that air with more real feeling. The cowboys were delighted with Miss Juch's singing, but called for more. Then Mr. Thomas, who had been a highly-amused observer of the scene, called for a violin and played the "Arkansaw Traveler" for the boys. You should have seen the fellows! They were so happy and delighted. We became fast friends, and when the train bore us off the cowboys fired a parting salute from their revolvers."

A Korrobboree in Australia.

After dinner, which was at 6 p. m., we went to see a korrobboree, where black fellows were encamped a short distance from the house. There were two tribes of these, and about 200 of them in all. They were painted with white and black streaks across the face and chest, and got up in correct style with skins and spears and boomerangs, and by the light of the fires which were kindled in a circle around they looked sufficiently hideous. The tribes danced alternately, and the words of their songs appeared to be half English, half native. A great deal of the action of the dance consisted in striking the ground at the same moment, so as to cause an echoing thud with their feet. One of the repeated actions was to cause the muscles of the leg and thigh to quiver simultaneously from toe to stomach in a most extraordinary manner. At the end of each figure they brought themselves up sharp with a strange, deep-toned sound, half hurrah, half grunt, "Wir—r—r—wah!" They would then wheel right across the inclosed space in line, chattering as fast as they could, upon the women who were sitting on the ground, and also singing a sort of chorus of a few notes; the line would then wheel back, break up into twos and threes, brandishing their short sticks and clubs over their heads, each man vociferating quickly to his mate, and then all of a sudden these incoherent sounds would all coalesce together into a chorus, and the band, again united, would cause the ground once more to vibrate to the reiterated cadence of their stamp.—Prince Edward and Prince George of Wales, in the English Illustrated Magazine.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., Oct. 3, 1885.

A SUCCESS.

First Annual Fair of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society.

Held at East Jordan, October 1, 2, and 3, 1885.

This society, which was but recently organized, has carried to success, in quantity and quality of the exhibit, and financially, their first annual exhibition.

Altogether there were 735 entries, and the attendance was good on the first and second days, and would have been better on the third but for the rain. We hoped to give the number of entries in each class, but the officers were so busy they could not furnish them.

The officers have worked hard, and with everything against them; with no grounds, no buildings, and but very little time to work in. Like every new enterprise, there have been plenty to stand around in the way, and predict its failure; but those who had the management determined to make it a success if it lay in their power. They were fortunate in having a building like the rink which could on so short notice be transformed into a Floral Hall, and it made an excellent subsitute, with the one exception of the lack of light. However this was partially overcome by the free use of lamps. The exhibition was all that could have been expected by the most sanguine in every feature, and in the fruit and vegetable exhibit, was a big surprise even to men accustomed to seeing fine exhibits in the southern part of the state.

Temporary stocks shed were erected on the lot south of the rink, which answered the purpose very well.

To the objection raised by some that it was not a county institution, because nearly all the officers and directors, as well as most of the superintendents were East Jordan people, it can be said that the exhibit represented the whole county as well as if located at any other point when gotten up on so short notice. Some of the best features of the exhibit were from Charlevoix, and of the new officers, the president and one of the directors are from Charlevoix. Charlevoix has had plenty of opportunity to organize and maintain a society and an annual exhibition, but for various causes has not done so. A society is now organized, has passed through the initial stages of development, and if the people pull together may be the means of giving us greater and better advertising than we have ever had. When it is known what products of the soil succeed best, it will be easier to induce men and means interested in that particular crop to come here and invest, when they will not come here to experiment. The easiest way to determine this is to make comparison,—just such a comparison as an annual fair affords.

When Charlevoix and Boyne City takes hold and helps East Jordan make her fairs a success, she will in return, we have no doubt, consent to holding a fair share of the exhibits in those towns and give their merchants a chance to advertise,—that it is an excellent chance to advertise, no one will deny.

In the following paragraphs we have attempted to briefly notice the most important exhibits in each department, but of course many worthy articles may have escaped notice. We should like to have given the names of all exhibitors, but could not get them.

The officers for the ensuing year, and the directors for three years were elected on Saturday, as follows:

President, John Nicholls, of Charlevoix.

Secretary, James H. Stone, of East Jordan.

Treasurer, James B. Palmiter, of East Jordan.

Directors Robert Trimble, of Norwood; Nathan L. Clark, of Eveline; Joseph B. Dixon, of Charlevoix; and Alonzo J. Stroud, of Evangeline.

HORSES.

The raising of thoroughbred stock has hardly commenced in this county, and will not be prosecuted with any great amount of vigor until a spirit of rivalry is brought out by these annual exhibits. To thoroughly interest people in the horse show there must be a race track, which of course will come in time.

In class 1, thoroughbreds, John Hammond entered a three-year-old stallion.

In class 2, roadsters, there was one entry, a three-year-old mare.

In class 3, carriage horses, A. LeClair entered a pair of four year-olds.

In class 4, horses for all work, there was an exhibit of mare and foal, one two-year-old stallion, one two-year-old mare, one three-year-old stallion (exhibited by James Hastings of Charlevoix), two five-months-old colts, one Morgan and French mare two years old (exhibited by Henry Nowland), one span eight years old, one mare with colt four months old, one span matched horses, one yearling stallion (Kentucky Whip, owned by C. G. Lewis, of Boyne), one four-year-old mare, and one three year old mare (entered by G. Mobló).

CATTLE.

In this department there were 20 head entered in the various classes.

In class 1, thoroughbreds, there were two Jersey bull calves, one grade heifer calf, one grade two-year-old bull, besides Jos. R. Dixon's Holsteins; bull 18 months old, weight 1,120, and heifer 17 months old, weight 940.

In class 2, working oxen or steers, there were two yokes of two-year-old steers, and one yoke of four-year-old matched steers, the latter exhibited by Chas. Maddocks.

In class 3, herds of cattle and milch cows, there were eight entries, of three cows, two heifers, and three calves.

In fat stock Mr. Lalonde exhibited a cow and a five months old calf that were good.

SHEEP.

J. S. Philbrick, of "Mountain Home" stock farm, exhibited 16 head of Shropshiredown, and there was one pen of three grade Cotswold ewes. This department needs considerable encouragement and care to get much of an exhibit in the future.

The country is too new to expect much for several years.

SWINE.

There were 18 head entered in this department. A few of the specimens looked well, when it is considered that heretofore there has been but little to induce close and careful breeding, but the most of them would be inferior at any show in a county further south. The breeds represented were Chester white, Poland China, Berkshire, and Jersey reds.

We learn that considerable amusement was afforded on the last day by an exhibit not down on the bills, and not usually found at county fairs. It was announced as a "Durham hog," just introduced, and entered as the property of two prominent professional gentlemen. Of the origin of the breed the reporter was left in ignorance.

POULTRY.

This exhibit was also small, but included some fair specimens of bronze turkeys, Pekin ducks, and Plymouth Rock, Scotch dominic, black Spanish, and buff Cochin fowls and chicks, in pairs and trios.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

In this department Charlevoix county will at once take a place in the front rank with other counties in the state. In the time allowed since the society was organized, it was not possible to get together as great a number of entries as may be possible in the future. The specimens on exhibition elicited from the visitors frequent exclamations of surprise at their excellence in every feature. Every sample shown is the natural product of the soil, and not the result of forced growth for the sole purpose of exhibition.

We did not get the number of entries, and counted only the plates of apples. Of these there were 41, all large, smooth, well colored, handsome fruit. There were a few fine samples of pears, quinces, and grapes.

Of canned fruit there were about 50 specimens;—in appearance very attractive, in quality we did not have a chance to sample.

Of tomatoes there were ten entries, all large, smooth, fine specimens.

Of potatoes, bagas, beets, carrots, and other roots, the number of entries was very respectable, and the exhibit cannot be beaten anywhere. In several years attendance at the Central Michigan Fair at Lansing, we never saw finer specimens, when size, form, smooth surface, and general appearance are considered, and in point of yield to the acre we do not believe this county can be beaten by any other in the state. F. W. Higby, of Charlotte, for a number of years prominently connected with the Eaton county society, expressed substantially the same comparison with his fair. And Messrs. J. R. Hall, of Bellevue, Ohio, and E. G. Fay, of Bryan, Ohio, said the vegetable exhibit was of better quality in every feature than they found in the Ohio state fair.

There was a small exhibit of corn, about equally divided between dent and flint varieties.

The samples of pumpkins were not numerous but of squashes there were a large number, all excellent in size and quality. Several were very large, one shown by A. H. Rinehart (called a pie squash,) weighing 93 pounds. Others looked to be fully as heavy, but we did not learn the weight, or name of owner.

The specimens of onions were very large. A. H. Rinehart, of South Arm, exhibited some extra large samples of red Wethersfield and yellow globe Danvers.

There were a few excellent samples of cabbage, cauliflower, and celery.

There were but a few samples of grain, though the specimens exhibited were of plump, full berry, and indicate that this county can raise as good grain as any, when the people wake up to its importance.

O. F. Ball exhibited a ten quart tin pail full of large pototoes, said to be from one hill, the tops of which were still green and over four feet long as they hung from the wall.

Geo. Bellinger exhibited some extra large samples of Hubbard squash.

There were ten samples of very fine large smooth tomatoes.

Mrs. J. H. Stone exhibited 20 samples of canned fruit.

W. L. Marshall exhibited samples of hops and parsley, and two bottles of very fine raspberry and blackberry wine.

THE MERCANTILE EXHIBIT.

The mercantile display was arranged along the south side, the west end, and a portion of the north side of the hall, with a few distributed along the center. It shows who are the most enterprising among East Jordan merchants. Beginning at the entrance we first find with a choice selection of standard groceries, and a fine exhibit of decorated china, majolica, and colored glass ware, and other attractive samples taken from his stock. Next to King, we find with samples of his large stock of dry goods, boots, shoes, shawls, cloaks, dress goods, etc. The boots, shoes, and slippers were arranged on shelves rising from the front and ends, and the dry goods piled at either end, while the walls of the space were hung with shawls, cloaks, dress goods, hosiery, fine lace, silk, and linen handkerchiefs, and other goods in such colors as to make the exhibit very attractive.

W. L. WARNE & SON,

druggists, came next with a space devoted to representative articles in their line. In the center was a case of instruments, surmounted by a pyramid of perfumery and toilet articles. The shelves on three sides were filled with representative medicines, and the counter was filled with books and stationery.

filled the next space with an assortment of clothing, ladies' goods, shawls, laces, fine linen and silk handkerchiefs, and many other fine samples from his stock, which also includes a line of boots and shoes, and winter goods of every description.

In the center of the space occupied by the stood a glass case containing an assortment of dress goods, and laces, principally of black and old gold, so arranged and combined as to call special attention from the visitor. The walls were hung with a fine assortment of dress goods, laces, silks, and most attractive samples from a large stock of dry goods.

J. C. GLENN

occupied the next space with a generous selection from his complete stock of general merchandise, principal of which were a case of shoes and slippers, a good assortment of clothing, and an attractive display of crockery and glassware.

The entire front of the hall not used by the officers of the society was occupied by and devoted to an exhibit of parlor furniture, pictures, etc., tastefully arranged.

The first exhibit on the north side was that of which included the Paragon Jewel parlor stove, Home Jewel cook, and Jewel Oak office stove. Attached to the wall was a fine display of edge tools, over which the firm name was formed of screws of various sizes. In one corner of the space was an exhibit of tin work by Joe Ramsdell from Loveday & Co.'s shop. The exhibit also contained other samples from their extensive stock of hardware.

FRENCH & SUTTON

occupied the next space with samples from their large stock of horse clothing. A case filled with sadlery hardware and ornaments occupied the center, and the walls were hung with an assortment of harnesses, blankets, etc. The exhibit included trunks and other goods usually found in a harnessmaker's stock.

H. L. PAGE

exhibited a varied assortment of hardware, including the Banner cook stove, the Round Oak office, and the Wood Cottage parlor stove, besides heaters, copper, tin, and iron work. A fine exhibit of edge tools was made.

M. S. MOULTON & CO.,

jewelers, occupied a space in the center, just east of the first pyramid of house plants, attention to which was directed by a large music box. One account of the lack of sufficient light to properly show the goods, a brilliant lamp was suspended over the show cases. Their exhibit was by far the largest we ever saw of this class of goods in a county fair, and embraced but a small portion of their immense stock. One large show case contained trays of pins, ear drops, rings, and charms, with pearl, garnet, topaz, onyx, black saphire, and diamond settings; gold and silver watches, chains, bracelets, pens, and pen holders in great variety; plated spoons, forks, knives, etc., assorted in trays by grades, the plain goods being separated from the pearls and rich stone settings, each style or grade of goods occupying a tray by itself. Optical goods, opera glasses, and toilet sets in pearl and gold. Clocks in cases of bronze and gilt statuary, and French black marble, with fine-toned cathedral bells, added to the richness of the exhibit. There was a case of silverware containing water set, caster, toilet sets, fruit dishes, etc., and a case of curiosities, among which were a powder horn carried through the revolution, a pair of teeth of the sperm whale, and a pair of walrus tusks. Over the exhibit, the firm name was printed on a card enclosed in a frame made of over 2,000 pieces of wood, whittled out of cigar boxes, and securely fitted and locked together.

MRS. E. F. EMPEY

made an exhibit of millinery goods.

A. HESTON

exhibited a case of boots and shoes, including several pairs of hand made boots, showing him to be master of his trade.

A. E. PICKERD

exhibited two nicely-arranged cases of standard groceries, selected from his large stock.

A. D. BRADBEER,

of Charlevoix, was represented by a large case of photographic work, which will draw to this town all who are seeking a "shadow" of finished and mounted in the style of the art.

O. W. SMITH,

of Charlevoix, advertised his agate works with a large case full of specimens.

W. R. KILBORN,

of Petoskey, exhibited a line of agricultural implements adapted to this region, including five styles of plows, three of feed cutters, two root cutters, besides mowers, rakes, harrows, etc. As with many others, the short time in which he had to prepare did not permit him to bring and set up samples of many of his agricultural implements, which would have added much to the interest and value of the exhibition. Another year it is probable that this feature will be very attractive, as he has the goods and the disposition to show them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The exhibit of ladies' fancy needle work was very large, and included many rare pieces. Mrs. W. A. Brown, of Charlevoix, made a large number of entries of linen and worsted work, and brought home numerous premiums. One set of hair pin-work curtains, tidies, etc., fourteen pieces, an outfit for a "blue room," attracted much attention.

There was a small display of curiosities, mostly in the line of old china. A pair of hand-painted cups and saucers bearing the portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Barber, were admired by all who saw them. There were several pieces of old-fashioned china with blue pictures, one cup being 89 years old, and a platter 77 years old. There was one pair of white wedding slippers 50 years old.

Two large pyramids of house-plants were located near the entrance, and contained numerous handsome plants. One of the pyramids was filled almost entirely by Mrs. J. H. Stone. Mrs. Stone also made numerous exhibits in other departments, and labored hard for the success of the fair.

There were several cases of mounted birds to add to the attractiveness of the show, a large portion of which, we understand, was furnished by Charlevoix parties.

Besides his Holstein stock Jos. R. Dixon, of Charlevoix, exhibited samples of his creamery butter, five varieties of potatoes, two of tomatoes, parsnips, carrots, beets, celery, and wheat.

T. H. Goddard exhibited samples of tools made of steel, polished, showing him to be master of the black smith trade in the matter of fine finished work.

Harry Stevens exhibited a well-proportioned, neatly executed pencil drawing of a locomotive, which attracted the attention of every person interested in mechanics and art.

Mr. J. L Allen exhibited much patience and skill in the work on two inlaid boxes, the design and combination of color making them very handsome.

The exhibit of paintings and drawings was quite large, and included many well-executed pieces. In this department Charlevoix took a prominent place.

A sunflower was exhibited fifteen inches across the face with a stalk nearly as large as a man's arm.

One very pretty crazy quilt was exhibited, but we failed to learn the name of the exhibitor.

Mrs. J. C. Jordan exhibited a crochet sofa tidy, representing the British coat of arms.

W. A. Brown exhibited a hand-painted dressing gown, the work of Mrs. Brown.

Mrs. S. Fast exhibited an "ocean wave" patchwork quilt, containing over 2,000 pieces.

There was a creditable exhibit of bread, butter, cakes, pies, canned fruit, etc.

J. C. Jordan exhibited a rose geranium over three feet across.

J. W. Rogers exhibited a pine apple geranium six feet tall.

J. C. Jordan exhibited several heads of fine celery.

G. W. Fast had a wax begonia seven feet high.

In the ladies' department was a very pretty wreath composed of dry moss, everlasting flowers, etc., and contained numerous specimens from the growth on the bark of old trees.

NOTES.

The performance of the East Jordan band show every evidence of frequent and careful practice under a competent leader. On the second day of the fair they received a lot of new caps with lamps attached.

J. S. Philbrick offers his herd of Jersey cattle and flock of Shropshire-down sheep for sale. Those desiring to introduce this blood in their herds should write him at East Jordan for particulars.

The Charlevoix band gave an excursion to East Jordan on the Clara Belle on Friday evening, and entertained the citizens there with some of their excellent music.

Even the waters of Lake Michigan furnished their portion of the attractions in the form of three or four Mackinac trout nearly four feet long.

Why Should I Belong to the W. C. T. U?

It is a question busy women ask each other, and themselves. "We have all the duties there is time and strength to perform. Shall we neglect our homes and children for the W. C. T. U?" say some of our best women when they are asked to become members of the Union. There are two distinct reasons why every intelligent Christian woman should, because of her relation to the home, belong to the W. C. T. U.

1. Home is the center and source of life, and woman is the home keeper. Whatever concerns the home, therefore is of vital importance to her. 2. The enemies of home are her enemies and she is called upon to defend both it and herself against them. Intemperance is ackuowledged to be the greatest enemy of the home, the leader of vices in whose wake many deadly foes follow. "But why is woman called to combat the evil? Why cannot men regulate the affairs of the world and leave us to the management of the homes?" Partly because they cannot; partly because they will not. The world is simply a collection of homes. Possibly for every ten happy and well-ordered households, where man is industrious and temperate, there are five where man is intemperate. The women of these homes are helpless, the children grow up in a tainted atmosphere, and so go out to curse the world by their own sinful lives, and by their influence counteract much of the good otherwise existing. It is very plain. The mother-love that shields her own child must also shield her neighbor's child. She is prompted to do this by her own self preservation and that of her home, and by that love—Christ-like—which for the sake of the lost, seeks to save them. "But intemperance has always been combated by good men and women. Why is the W. C. T. U. a better organization than any other?" Because it is organized mother-love, and "In union there is strength," in organization there is power. Nearly two hundred thousand Christian women in the United States have banded together and say: "We are the home-keepers; the children are ours; the saloon is our enemy, and THE SALOON MUST GO." "How has all this been brought about?" The Crusade was the first personal work of woman for temperance. True societies existed and much work was done in reclaiming drinking men. The Crusade women virtually said: "The drunkard must not be made. We will pray the saloon-keeper not to sell intoxicating drinks. We will save our husbands and sons and brothers." The Spirit of the Lord was upon and great good was accomplished. Into the temperance work a strong spiritual element was introduced, and women were shown the power of organized effort. The W. C. T. U. was the outgrowth of the Crusade. So ready were women for this work that twelve states responded to the call for the first national convention held at Cleveland in 1874. The blessing of the Lord has been constant, and the earnestness and devotion of the women without parallel. The national W. C. T. U. is now organized in every state and territory, with more than 6,000 local unions. Much of this success is due the untiring labors of the national president, Miss Frances E. Willard, but much also to the faithful women who make up the rank and file of the army. By means of these unions, the homes of these women themselves are directly influenced, children are better taught, public opinion is educated, a large amount of temperance literature is circulated, and the power of the liquor traffic undermined. Moreover, in many states, scientific temperance education is required by law in all public schools, and this has been done directly through the influence of the W. C. T. U. And their good work has just begun.

WHY SHOULD I belong to the W. C. T. U? 1. Because the cause is worthy of my name, money and influence. 2. Because it is my duty to do all I can for "God, and Home and Native Land."—Esther T. Housh, National Supt. Press Department W. C. T. U.

The American Rock-Elm.

This tree, says Prof. Sargent in "Notes on Trees and Tree-Planting," is found growing with the common American elm, and in situations similar to those selected by that tree, from the southwestern county of Vermont westward to Illinois, and from the Ohio northward into Canada. It is common in New York, along the banks of the Mohawk and its tributaries, in Yates county, near Penn Yan, and occurs in many parts of Ohio and Illinois, but it is in the southern peninsula of Michigan, Wisconsin, and the province of Ontario that the rock-elm is most frequently met with. This species will be readily distinguished by the disposition of the flowers, which, unlike those of other elms, are borne in racemes on inch to two inches long, and composed of several clusters of from two to four flowers together. It may be distinguished also from the common American elm at all seasons of the year by the thick corky ridges which extend along the young branches.

The wood, too, will be found to be very dissimilar from that of American elm. Its specific gravity is .832, while that of the American elm is but .649, or 22 per cent lighter. It is almost as heavy as the best eastern hickory, 4 per cent heavier than the best San Domingo mahogany, and 26 per cent heavier than second-growth eastern white oak. The wood is fine grained, compact, and shows but little of that inclination to splinter which renders the wood of the American elm unfit for many purposes of construction. The heartwood, which is buff in color with reddish tints, is susceptible of high polish, and is warm and agreeable in tone. Architects and cabinet-makers, to whom specimens have been submitted, speak of it with unqualified praise for furniture-making and interior decoration, for which purposes its hardness, strength, and beauty seem to particularly adapt it. The wood of this tree is unknown in the eastern markets, but considerable quantities of what is called Canadian rock elm are annually exported into Great Britain from Canada, but, judging from the descriptions of it, I am inclined to think that this is nothing but American elm, or perhaps a mixture of the two, as lumbermen do not well distinguish this species, calling all elms grown on high and dry land rock elm, and all that is produced along the river banks and in damp situations bastard elm.

Although still unknown in the east, the wood of ulmus racemosa is highly valued in those portions of the western states where it is abundant enough to form an article of commerce. It is very largely employed in the manufacture of heavy agricultural implements, such as plows, mowing, and threshing-machines, and similar articles, in the construction of which the best white oak is used in the east. In spite of its weight and strength, this wood is very flexible, and when properly seasoned, retains any shape into which it has been bent, a quality which finds for it important employment. In some parts of Michigan rock elm is largely used for the framework of chairs, and for the hubs of wheels and the heavy beams of stump-pullers it has no equal. It is used for the slats of stock-cars, and for this and other purposes large quantities are annually consumed by the railroads. Indeed, the wood of this tree is generally employed wherever it can be procured, and where a material combining at once strength, toughness, and solidity is required. Should it reach the eastern markets, the qualities which have caused it to be eagerly employed wherever it is known will find for rock elm a ready sale here, while, unless the opinion of those experts to whom specimens have been submitted is a mistaken one, it will be one of the most valuable, as it is one of the most beautiful, of American woods for the architect and cabinet-maker.

Taking the standard of weight as the best test of the heat-giving quality of any wood and of the length of time it will continue to burn, rock elm is barely surpassed as fuel by hickory itself. The specify gravity of eastern second-growth hickory is .838, that of rock elm .832, and that of second-growth eastern white oak .062; so that, applying the test of weight, rock elm, as fuel is worth only 1 per cent less than hickory, while it is worth 26 per cent. more than white oak, the best fuel which now reaches this market in any quantity. Actual experiments show that this wood burns slowly, with a bright, steady flame, and without snapping; ash equal to .67 of 1 per cent of the dry wood consumed is left after burning. As is expected of a tree yielding such heavy, close-grained wood, the rock elm grows very slowly. Never a common tree, the rock elm is fast disappearing from even those parts of the country where formerly it was most abundant, and steps should be at once taken to propagate the plant.

Bound to Find Fault.

Because the secretary of the treasury lets contracts to the lowest responsible bidders, as required by the law, republican journals find fault with him and not with the law under which he acts. Bids for repairing the revenue cutter Crawford at Baltimore were recently made, but protests were presented against awarding the contract to the lowest bidder because, it was alleged, such bidder would employ imported labor. The matter was referred to the law officer of the department, who decided that the lowest bidder must have the award. What ever fault there is rests with the law, and not with the secretary of the treasury whose plain duty is to abide by it. If the law is wrong, change it. But suppose the secretary had let the contract to the highest bidder in defiance of law? Would not these same journals have charged him with favortism—for squandering the people's money—for disobedience to the plain requirements of law? Certainly they would. They cannot be pleased. They will not be pleased. Whatever is done, they are agreed to howl uniformly at everything. When John Roach, late republican martyr, was carrying on a shipyard at Chester, Penn., and contracts were let to him, he being the lowest bidder, by the late republican secretary of the navy, did these journals condemn the secretary for his action? Not as far as heard from. And yet seven eights of the workmen employed by Roach were imported. He had Poles, Hungarians, Bohemians, etc., of recent importation, on his pay rolls. The law did not bar him from taking contracts then, nor does it bar the Baltimore firm now. The law gives the contracts to the lowest responsible bidders; and there, if anywhere, the faultfinders should let their anathemas fall.—Patriot.

Ovid Union: The past five years have been years of close competition in business; farm produce, of all kinds, ruled low, and cheap goods were demanded by everybody seeking to make new purchases. Manufactures sought to supply that demand, and in fact, gave such a spur to the business of manufacturing cheap articles that that the market became flooded with a class of merchandise which was cheap if nothing else; the tide is turning however, as those who sought economy in the purchase of cheap wares have found to their cost that they are dear at any price and now demand better goods at reasonable rates. The manufacturers will be only too glad to meet this demand and from a point where goods that would barely hold together were put upon the market, we are to return to more substantial articles of commerce, and best of all better times; not sudden, jerking, unnatural booms, but to a period reached after a long and tedious season of debt-paying, undertrading, natural business depression, and it is safe to say every class, the country over, will welcome a return of better and more healthful times.

The city papers find no end of fun in what they call the personalities of country journalism. When the country paper announces that Mr. Jones has built a new hen coop, that Mr. Brown is the father of a new baby, or that Mr. Robinson has been laid up with the ague, or that Mr. Smith has painted his back fence, it is very funny to the smart Aleck who does the stealing from the country papers for the dailies. All the same we notice that the most successful metropolitan dailies are the ones that deal the most lavishly in these same kind of personalities. The only difference being that in a metropolis there are comparatively few who are known to the public, hence whose doings interest the reading public, while in the village everybody knows everybody and everybody takes an interest in everybody, and Brown, Jones, Robinson and Smith are of far greater importance than the Noodle Fitznoodles who figure in the personal columns of daily journalism.—Cheboygan Democrat.

The Grand Ledge Independent rightly says: Draw poker is correctly named. Besides drawing a man's money from him, it draws him from his family, draws him from respectable and elevating society, draws him into evil and vicious associations, and too often results in his being drawn home dead drunk. Young man, isn't draw poker and its invariable surroundings, a pretty good game to draw away from permanently?

An exchange gives our idea exactly, when it says: "If you want your town to prosper, pull together. Differ as much as you please in politics and religion, but when it comes to matters pertaining to your interest and the prosperity and growth of your town, unite and pull together. If your neighbor proposes a measure that is calculated to promote public good, don't hold back because you didn't propose it yourself; but give it your hearty support and pull together. Don't hang back when your neighbors are working for your interest as well as theirs. Don't sneer and talk about "big heads," but take hold with a will and pull together. That town succeeds the best the citizens of which take pride in it, work for its success, each in his way, but all pulling together, encouraging new comers and new enterprises."

Protection of American labor, in deed! Why, one-third of the population of Massachusetts was born in foreign lands. Take a look through the factories of the state and you will find almost no "American labor."—Jackson Patriot.

The era of prosperity is not coming on the run. It is feeling its way and halting sometimes for a surer foothold. But it is coming.—[Kansas City Journal.

The democratic party has had many trials, but it is relieved of the heavy business of trying to excuse Halstead for writing his '63 letters.—Dallas News.

Ben Franklin, one of the most successful diplomats ever sent to a foreign court, never forgot that he was an American.—Boston Globe.

Newspaper Notices.

DECEPTIVE FRAUDS.—As soon as it became apparent that Moses King, the young publisher, of Harvard square, at Cambridge, Mass., had met an unprecedented success with his book called "Students' Songs"—the sale already reaching nearly fifty thousand copies—several publishers brought out collections of so-called student or college songs. Some of them are legitimate competitors; but some appear so similar in shape, in title, in design or general make up, as to mislead a casual buyer who may be intending to get a copy of the original "Students' Songs," which was edited by Wm. H. Hills, of the Harvard class of 1880, and published by Moses King of the Harvard class of 1881, the names of both appearing on the title page of the genuine collection only. The success of this collection is due chiefly to the freshness of its sixty copyrighted songs; comprising those jolly and melodious tunes and peculiar phrases which, within the past ten years, have arisen and become generally popular among the students of all American colleges. The low price, too—fifty cents—and the attractive appearance, also, have had their influence in making "Students' Songs" the most successful book of its class ever published in this country.

The New York Evening Post offers its semi-weekly edition to new readers for the last three months of this year for 25 cents. Its make up includes, besides the news of the half week, the leading editorials of the daily edition, foreign and domestic correspondence, personal, political and religious notes, book reviews, musical and dramatic criticism, farm, household, and fashion hints, selections from the best current foreign literature, etc. Owing to its throughly independent attitude upon all political questions, the views of the Evening Post are more eagerly sought and more widely copied than those of almost any other newspaper in the country. This was the case in the last presidential campaign, when, for reasons which it gave in advance of the nomination, it found itself unable to support the republican candidate. This has been the case also since the election, for the paper has again demonstrated its independence by promptly denouncing all departures of the new administration from the reform pledges upon which it was intrusted with power.

The October Babyhood gives its usual variety of topics interesting to parents, by its well known editors, Marion Harland and Dr. Leroy M. Yale, and a corps of able contributors. Among the principal subjects are "The Precocious Baby," "Nursery Cookery," "The Care of Baby's Eyes," "Contagion in Throat Troubles," "Art in the Nursery," "Thoughts on Home Training," "The Diet of Nursing Mothers," "Systematic Weaning," "Autumn Styles for Baby's Wardrobe," etc. A letter from Vienna on Austrian baby matters in general, and another from an American mother in Japan, will be read with interest. [15 cents a number; $1.50 a year. 18 Spruce Street, New York.]

The price of "BRICK" POMEROY'S DEMOCRAT is $2.00 a year. By an arrangement with the publisher we can furnish it with the JOURNAL for $2.65 per year, cash in advance.

EASTERN.

The courts have refused to set aside the assignment of Rindskopf Brothers, clothing manufacturers, of New York, who failed for $1,800,000.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has made perpetual the injunction recently granted restraining the sale to a syndicate of $6,000,000 of Pittsburgh municipal bonds at par with 1 per cent. commission.

Miss Emma Faulkner, of State Bridge, N. Y., poured the contents of a lamp over her head and shoulders, then set fire to herself, and ran shrieking around the house. The fire was not extinguished until nearly all her clothing had been burned from her body. She died shortly after. She had attempted suicide before.

Four men armed with revolvers took possession of a Pennsylvania express train near Allegheny Junction, Pa., and while three of them stood guard over the passengers the fourth relieved them of their valuables. The conductor was badly beaten, and one of the passengers was stabbed in the hand. The miscreants escaped to the woods, but were hotly pursued.

Eastern mills report an active demand for steel rails at $30 to $31 per ton.

Ex-Governor Talbot, of Massachusetts, died at Lowell, aged 77. Judge Theodore R. Westabrook, of the New York Supreme Court, was found dead in bed at a Troy hotel.

President Garrett of the Baltimore and Ohio asserts that his company has no idea of abandoning the construction of a New York line.

Ex-Governor James E. English, of Connecticut, was married in New York to Miss. A. R. Morris, of Brooklyn. He is 73 and she a bright brunette of about 30.

At the meeting of the trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund at New York it was shown that $57,705 had been paid the Southern States during the year. President Cleveland and J. Pierrepont Morgan were elected members of the board, succeeding General Grant and Samuel Whetmore.

WESTERN.

A large amount of stock has died from hydrophobia in Guthrie County, Iowa. Hog cholera is thinning out the herds of farmers in Moultrie County, Illinois. State Veterinarian Holcomb, of Kansas, reports that hog cholera prevails in between thirty and forty counties in Kansas.

Four cars broke away from the first section of a circus train near Fergus Falls, Minn., and running backward on a heavy grade struck the engine of the second section. Five men were killed and many others seriously wounded. Nearly two hundred men were asleep in the wrecked cars at the time.

There were 209 deaths in Chicago last week, against 250 for the preceding week.

At Bloomington, Ind., the jury in the case of Chesley Chambers, accused of the Smithville express robbery on April 20, disagreed, and was discharged.

The earnings of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway for the month of September were $2,383,300, an increase over the same month last year of $36,400. The earnings of the Chicago & Alton for the same time were $754,289, a decrease of $162,672.

Isaac Groo, Alfred Best, David E. Davis, Charles Seal and Andrew W. Coley were sentenced in the Third District Court at Salt Lake for unlawful cohabitation. All refused to pledge themselves to obey the law, and were sentenced to the full limit—six months' imprisonment and $300 fine.

The Grand Jury at Green River, Wyoming, after an investigation of the anti-Chinese riots at Rock Springs, adjourned without returning any indictments.

In the town of Campton, Kane County, Ill., Albert Cook shot his wife and mother-in-law, killing the latter, who was 74 years old, instantly. Mrs. Cook, from whom her husband was divorced, is fatally injured. The murderer escaped.

The annual meeting of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad Company was held in Chicago. The gross earnings for the past twelve months were $1,600,142, an increase of 2.55 per cent. An increase of $39,936 is reported by the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad in its earnings for September as compared with those for the corresponding month of last year. Illinois Central earnings show an increase of $21,238, while the earnings of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad fell off $12,745.

A colored ex-Alderman of Mattoon, Ill., who refused to shave a negro living in that town, has been sued by the latter for $3,000 damages under the civil-rights law.

Capt. Thomas H. Rootes, for thirty years an officer in the United States navy, died at Howling Green, Mo.

The new Egan election law has been declared unconstitutional by the Michigan Supreme Court, the full bench concurring.

As the inaugration of reform in his life and habits, George Gash, a gambler of Clinton, Ill., took all of his sporting paraphernalia to the public square and set fire to them.

Mrs. William McClusky, of Urbana, Ohio, poisoned herself and babe with morphine, the husband finding both in bed, arrayed in their best clothing. Both are dead.

SOUTHERN.

T. W. Hooper, late Judge at Helena, Ark., is charged with having issued bogus bonds to the amount of $7,000.

At Gallatin, Tenn., a livery stable was fired, supposably by an incendiary, and all its contents, including twenty-one horses, burned.

The street-car drivers at Wheeling, W. Va., who are on a strike, threw stones and dynamite cartridges into the cars, and badly injured a working driver.

The negro Mehane, who outraged and killed Mrs. Walker near Milton, North Carolina, a few days ago, was taken from the officers who were conveying him to Yanceyville and lynched.

The report that sixty convicts in camp near Lufkin, Tex., had escaped, and that twenty-five of the fugitives had been killed by officers in pursuit, proves to have been greatly exaggerated. There were sixty convicts in camp, all of whom made mutinous demonstrations, but only fifteen had the courage to break through the lines and run. One of the latter was instantly killed, seven were severely wounded, and seven escaped.

The cotton crop of the Memphis district, embracing portions of Tennessee, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Alabama, will exceed that of last year only to the extent of the increase in acreage sown, or 4½ per cent.

WASHINGTON.

Commodore Queen has been appointed to the command of the Washington Navy Yard, to succeed the late Commodore Semmes.

The Postmaster General has decided that no special deliveries of mail shall be made on Sunday.

Capt. Fred M. Crandall has been directed by the War Department to carry out the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior for the removal of unauthorized persons on the Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory west of the Arkansas River.

In attempting to put back upon British soil Chinamen who had come into the United States in violation of the restriction act, a customs officer on the Northwestern frontier has been confronted with a Canadian statute which provides that a fee of $50 per capita shall be paid for Chinese readmitted into the Dominion. A novel situation has resulted, and the State Department is wrestling with the peculiar international questions involved.

Washington telegram: "Information which has been received here privately shows beyond question that the Apache scouts employed by Gen. Crook were leading the soldiers on a wild-goose chase, affording Geronimo every opportunity to visit the reservation he deserted to supply himself with women, bucks, and ammunition. A sentiment is rapidly working up in the Interior and War Departments which it is believed will eventually lead to the removal of Gen. Crook to another command and the substitution of an Indian-fighter with less faith in Indian truthfulness."

Chief Justice Waite has derived very great benefit from his three months' trip abroad, most of which time he spent in England and Scotland. He was very much run down by his official labors, and the rest and change which he has experienced have made a new man of him.

Secretary Endicott has determined to allow no exceptions whatever to the operations of his recent order sending to their regiments all officers who have been absent therefrom on staff duty four years or more.

A statement prepared at the Treasury Department shows that the amount of standard silver dollars put into circulation during the month of September in the regular course of business was $27,000,000.

POLITICAL.

The President has appointed the following-named Presidential Postmasters:

Ellsbury, at Ironton, O., vice S. B. Steece suspended; John D. Watermann at Rockford, Ill., vice Thomas G. Lawler, suspended; J. H. Brinker, at West Point, Miss., vice H. H. Harrington, suspended; Walter W. McGrew, at Eureka, Kan., vice James W. Nicholas, resigned; John C. Friend, at Rawlings, Wy. T., vice H. T. Snively, suspended; Isaiah Garrett, at Monroe, La., vice Julius Ennemoser, suspended; Arthur D. Glover, at Olympia, W. T., vice James W. Gale, suspended.

The nominations of over one thousand postmasters will come before the Senate at its next session. At the present rate of progress it will require two years to change all the Presidential postmasters in the country.

The Massachusetts Democratic Convention was held at Worcester, with John E. Fitzgerald as Permanent Chairman. Ex-Mayor Frederick O. Prince, of Boston, who was opposed by the Butler faction, was nominated for Governor on the second ballot. The remainder of the ticket is as follows: Lieutenant Governor, H. H. Gilmore; Secretary of State, Jeremiah Crowley; Attorney General, Henry K. Braley; Treasurer, Henry M. Cross; Auditor, James E. Delaney. The platform congratulates the country upon the election and inauguration of a Democratic President and Vice President; expresses confidence that Mr. Cleveland's policy will establish the civil service on a "broad basis of justice and equality," "not creating an official class which shall be above and beyond the people," but giving to all honest and capable citizens the right to be selected for public employment; commends the American fisheries to the "serious consideration" of the administration, and demands the enactment by the Legislature of various measures for the benefit of laboring classes.

Jabez B. M. Curry, of Virginia, has been appointed United States Minister to Spain, and Charles A. Zollinger, as United States Pension Agent at Indianapolis. A Washington special says the appointment of Dr. Curry as Minister to Spain creates some surprise, mainly because the appointment of a clergyman to any political office is unusual.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Over four hundred deaths from small-pox occurred in Montreal during the week. Rioters gathered around the Exposition Building, which had been turned into a small-pox hospital, intending to destroy the building. They shot and severely wounded the sentry, when the Victoria Rifles, which occupied the grounds, appeared, and the rioters took to their heels.

Rains, drought, and worms have done much damage to cotton and corn in the South. Heavy rains prevailed South and East. In Virginia wind and rain did considerable damage to persons and property. Heavy frosts visited portions of the West on Saturday, but no damage is reported, corn being out of the way. The Straits of Mackinac and vicinity were treated on Sunday to a severe snowstorm.

The fire losses for September in the United States and Canada are computed at $6,525,000—$3,700,000 less than during the corresponding month of 1884.

The Dominion Commissioners appointed to settle the half-breed claims in the Northwest have concluded their labors, after making allowances of $2,000,000.

The annual reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic at Pittsburgh attracted great crowds to that city. The parade of the veterans was an imposing affair, about ten thousand men being in line.

Frosts in August in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, when wheat was in the milk, so injured the crops that but little was saved.

The National Cotton-Exchange Crop report, just issued, estimates the average cotton throughout the belt on October 1 at 87½, against 75 on the corresponding day of last year.

During the month of September there were more than 800 deaths from small-pox in Montreal. Over 700 of the victims were children.

According to the figures of the New York Produce Exchange, the visible supply of wheat is 43,632,813 bushels, and of corn 6,182,493 bushels.

Mexican robbers attacked a pack-mule train carrying bullion, near Parral, a station on the Mexican Central Road, killed four of the escort, and drove off with the treasure, the amount of which has not been determined.

Small-pox has broken out in St. Catharines, Hamilton, and Guelph, Ontario.

It is announced that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will immediately begin an extension of its telegraph lines throughout the Dominion, which will create formidable competition with the existing monopoly.

The accounts of the Union Bank, of Halifax, N. S., are being investigated, the accounts of the cashier, Henry Y. Clarke, showing a deficiency of about $30,000. The defaulter has not absconded.

FOREIGN.

Russian newspapers advocate the sending of a force of Cossacks into Turkish territory on account of the frequent raids of Turkish marauders into the Transcaucasia.

The President of the Hungarian Council, in answer to the charge that the Roumelian rising had been arranged at the recent meeting of the Emperors, says that no matter was discussed at either of the imperial meetings that had any bearing whatever on the Bulgarian union. He says, also, that Austria has no intention of increasing complication by occupying Turkish territory.

Elections in France for members of the Chamber of Deputies resulted in large gains for the Conservatives, which will necessitate changes in the Cabinet. Two members of the ministry have lost their seats. Among the deputies chosen are MM. Floquet, Clemenceau, Paul Bert, and De Cassagnac.

The London Times makes the significant admission that "it is impossible to disguise the fact that the government of Ireland has passed, or is rapidly passing, out of the hands of her Majesty's ministry." Some of the Irish-Americans selected to assist Mr. Parnell in the parliamentary canvass declare that the home-rulers need funds, not oratory, and should be aided in the direction where their necessities are the greater.

The New Zealand government has renewed the mail service between that country and San Francisco.

The Abyssinians under Ras Aloula en route to the relief of the Kassala garrison met and defeated the Arabs, killing 3,000 of them.

King Milan declares that in the event of a union between Bulgaria and Roumelia being recognized by the Powers Servia would fight, unless her demands for an extension of territory are recognized.

In a speech before the Newport Conference, Lord Salisbury outlined the Conservative programme as follows: Non-interference in the affairs of Eastern Roumelia; the upholding of the Turkish Empire; the decentralization of authority in London; reform in the laws governing the transfer and taxation of land; the establishment of a union between England and her colonies, and the extension to Ireland, so far as possible, of the benefits enjoyed by the rest of the United Kingdom.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

At San Francisco, a building owned by Charles Crocker, of the Central Pacific Railway, and occupied by a wholesale stationery and printing firm and other concerns, was burned with its contents, the loss exceeding $500,000. Four men were buried in the ruins.

A Salt Lake telegram says: "Trials for polygamy and unlawful cohabitation in this district have come to an end for this year. Several cases were put over till the next term of court, in the latter part of December, but it is said there will be no more trials till February. W. D. Newson, whose polygamous wife has been in the penitentiary for months for contempt in refusing to tell who was the father of her child, was today convicted of both polygamy and unlawful cohabitation, involving five years and six months in the penitentiary and $800 fine, if the Judge imposes the maximum sentence, as he invariably does when the prisoner shows no disposition to repent. Sentence will be pronounced next week. F. H. Hanson, gets six months and $300. While the trials have closed, the grand jury is steadily finding indictments. The Mormons first sent to the penitentiary are now about coming out, and an effort is being made by the Government to reindict them for violation of the law between the previous indictment and trial. The Mormons show no inclination to stop, and the Government is more determined than ever to punish polygamists."

Five white men and two Indians who were engaged in the recent anti-Chinese riot near Seattle, Washington Territory, have been indicted for murder in the first degree.

The street-car strike at St. Louis culminated in a serious riot. The mob, which numbered about 10,000 persons, began work on Pine street, between Sixth and Tenth, and in an extremely brief space of time succeeded in wrecking twenty cars. All the conductors escaped, but a driver who was knocked down and thrown under the wheels cannot live. A number of mules were so badly injured that they had to be shot. During the progress of the melee Superintendent Scullin of the Union Depot line was knocked down. An attempt to secure his assailant brought on a fierce fight between the mob and police, which ended in the triumph of the latter. Over fifty arrests were made while the original outbreak was at its height, and many more followed in the evening. The mob later on sought other means of wreaking vengeance on the street-car companies, and the entire night proved a turbulent one for the city.

The first joint debate between Gov. Hoadly and Judge Foraker, rival candidates for Governor of Ohio, occurred at Toledo on the evening of the 8th inst., and drew an immense crowd. A Toledo dispatch says: "In the course of Hoadly's remarks he said that Abraham Lincoln died a Democrat. What he intended to say was that if he had lived three months longer he would have been a Democrat. When Foraker replied he censured Hoadly for misrepresenting, and said that Lincoln, instead of dying a Democrat, died by the hand of a Democrat. Much excitement prevailed during this part of the debate, but it soon quieted."

The following letter from Secretary Manning explains itself:

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8, 1885.

Alton B. Parker, Esq., Chairman Executive Committee Democratic State Committee, New York City:

DEAR SIR—It is my intention to go to Albany next month, for the purpose of voting the Democratic ticket, which should be, and I believe will be, elected. I have no doubt that President Cleveland will do likewise. While Governor of the State he never failed to go to Buffalo to exercise this right, and I am sure he feels it to be his duty to do so now. Certainly he is as anxious for the success of the ticket headed by Gov. Hill as he was for the success of that ticket which his own name led to victory three years ago. Sincerely yours, DANIEL MANNING.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Reform takes the shape of ding temperance socials at Sault Ste. Marie.

—Rogers City people are going to petition Congress to build a breakwater at their port.

—Nashville is to have a second paper—a monthly—to be published in the interest of the schools.

—Bad for Big Rapids—one year ago there was not a vacant store to rent, now there are twenty-seven.

—The State Military Board are examining and condemning old uniforms and equipments at Lansing.

—At Bad Axe Judge Wixson sentenced the murderer Clark to State Prison for life. Clark himself is satisfied.

—Traverse City people have let the contracts for a $20,000 new school house, to be ready for occupancy July 15, 1886.

—The managers of the Michigan Soldiers' Home are caring for ten disabled veterans, and have forty-nine applications on hand.

—Hillsdale will not adopt standard time. The courts will probably be governed by it, but the banks, schools, and business men will be governed by local time.

—Monroe business men threaten to cancel their policies in Southern Michigan companies which have advanced rates 30 to 50 per cent. unless the old rates are restored.

—Two Monroe girls dressed up in men's clothes and went on a "mash." Their attentions to some of their female acquaintances were indignantly repulsed, and to prevent arrest they were compelled to reveal their identity.

—It takes fewer dollars to buy a good home now than it has for several years past, and the savings of the working classes in Detroit have been very largely invested in that kind of property during the past year.—Free Press.

—Rents in Tecumseh are rapidly declining. To rent or for sale cards are seen on almost every other house. Three orchestras have lately been organized there, besides seven vocal quartettes and the regular brass bands.—Free Press.

—Miss Alice B. Joddin, of Coldwater, a graduate of the academic and law departments of the University of Michigan, has entered the Yale College Law School. She is the first lady ever entered in any department of Yale outside of the art school.

—William Thurgood and William Barbaring, of Freeland, died somewhat suddenly at their homes Saturday, aged 71 and 78 years, respectively. They were fast friends, had resided in the county for thirty-five years, and were buried in the same grave.

—General Phil Sheridan and United States Senator Palmer, of Michigan, sat side by side at a table at the Army of the Cumberland reunion at Grand Rapids. "Senator," observed Sheridan, "I have a knife here that I'll sell you for 5 cents. I cannot give it to you, because the gift of a knife cuts friendship. The man of whom I secured it sold it to me on the same terms and for the same reason." "Who sold it to you?" "General Grant." The Senator bought it, and says that $1,000 would not buy it.—Detroit Free Press.

—The murder trial of Arnold closed at Lake City Monday. Arnold confessed that he, with Andrew J. Larcon and son, Jerry Larcon, went to the house. Arnold said he watched while the others killed Jagth and wife with a shovel, took $2,150, and set fire to the house. Arnold then made another affidavit, denying his statement implicating Larcon and son, and Larcon was released. Arnold and Larcon occupied the same cell Sunday night. Arnold was sentenced to solitary confinement at Jackson for life. Attorneys argued a motion for a new trial, but it was denied.

—There is nothing that distresses English people, when they are at home in England, more than American pronunciation of American names. Chicago, instead of Chick-argo, as every Englishman knows the name should be pronounced, hurts their feelings dreadfully. A Boston lady, who recently spent a little time with an English family in London, where, on account of the residence of a relative in Michigan, there was occasion for reference now and then to that State, says that after she had once mentioned the name of Michigan her hostess managed quietly to get her ear, and whispered: "Couldn't you, you know, while you are here, just to make it seem a little less strange to our friends, say Mikkigan?" Boston Record.

—The annual meeting of the National Prison Association will be held this year at Detroit, commencing Oct. 17, and the unusually interesting program which has been prepared should and doubtless will attract a large attendance from those interested in the subject of prison reform. Among the many papers to be read are those of Charles Dudley Warner on "Education as a Factor in Reformation," Major R. W. McClaughry, Warden at the Joliet Penitentiary, on "Prison Punishments," A. A. Brush of Sing Sing on "Prison Labor," P. J. Danerty of Trenton, N. J., on "The Piece-Price Plan of Prison Labor," Charlton T. Lewis of New York on "The English Prisons System," Charles E. Felton of the Chicago Bridewell on "Jails and Workhouses," and John P. Altgeld of Chicago on "Unnecessary Imprisonment."

JOHN SHERMAN ANSWERED.

The Prince of Demagogy and Bourbon Republicanism Pulverized.

What Is Being Accomplished by the New Administration at Washington.

Before Gov. Hoadly made his opening campaign speech, the Democratic State Central Committee of Ohio designated Hon. W. D. Hill, of the Sixth Congressional District, to answer John Sherman's recent bloody-shirt harangue, which is regarded by the Republican organs as the key-note of the present campaign in Ohio, and the embodiment of whatever principles are left of the late Republican party. Right well did Mr. Hill perform the work assigned him. It is understood that he went to Washington several weeks ago and spent much time in the various departments, thoroughly equipping himself for the work. A few days ago he answered Sherman at Montpelier, Ohio. Referring to the change in the administration, he said:

The days of the United States Marshals, armed posses at polls, and internal-revenue spies have, I trust, ended in this country forever—certainly while we have a Democratic President. These reflections alone are subjects of congratulation. It is not six months since the administration of the Federal Government changed. Whatever changes followed have been wholesome and in the interest of the people. The calamities which our Republican friends predicted have not come. All the dire calamities which a diseased imagination of the gouty Republican office-holder, aided by his long-continued gorge of power and debauchery, could invent were spread through the country as official truths. But the people were tired of being deceived, and they voted for a change. The change has begun—slowly but gradually, cautiously, prudently, safely, and fast enough.

We direct particular attention now to the stunning points made by Mr. Hill in answering the question, "What has the Interior Department done?" He said:

It issued more pensions to Union soldiers, and adjusted more old pension claims during the last quarter of the fiscal year, than were ever issued under Republican rule in any one quarter. It has stopped the cutting of timber on the alternate sections of land belonging to the Government by the great land-grant corporations. It has stopped the system of making the claims of applicants for pensions "special" where the party has influential friends (except in extreme and palpably meritorious cases), thus putting all applicants upon equal footing, and preventing favored men from being jumped ahead of equally deserving invalids.

It has given all applicants for patents equal opportunities for attention, and it is no longer necessary to employ certain high-priced lawyers in order to secure promptness. It opens its doors without form, ceremony, or red tape to all who have claims to urge, petitions to present, or questions to ask, and the humblest laborer is as certain of a patient hearing as any Congressman, Senator, Governor, or foreign "grandee."

It regards the public domain as property held in trust by the department for the people, and not as a grazing ground to be fenced in by the cattle kings or a lumbering bonanza to be invaded by the wealthy timber thieves or to be stolen by the great railroad corporations.

It has resisted all pressure for the appointment to responsible positions of men believed to represent great land or railroad corporations.

It has saved many hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government in the matter of contracts for the coming year.

It has saved more than $100,000 in the contract for Indian supplies for the present fiscal year, as compared with the last year's expenditures.

It has adopted the policy of strict adherence and construction as regards Indian treaties, and proposes to hold the Indians to their contract.

It has banished, or begun to banish, all interlopers from the Indian reservations, and in the execution of this policy will make no distinction between the vagrant frontier brawler and the herders of hundreds of thousands of cattle.

It has restored, and is restoring, millions of acres of public lands that are now covered by fraudulent entries or distorted claims.

It has saved over a hundred thousand dollars a year to the Government in the cost of beef and flour alone for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians by having a new census taken of those tribes.

It has prevented a terrible Indian war on the Kansas borders by dealing fairly and firmly with the savages.

It has disregarded the claims of thirty millions of capital that claimed the right of pasturage upon the lands of these Indians, and ordered them to remove the herds at once, and the President has announced his firm determination to enforce the order.

It has placed the Yellowstone Park and Hot Springs, Ark., reservation under such control as will protect them against the manipulation of rings and make them what Congress designed they should be—blessings to our people for all time.

It has proclaimed the public lands the heritage of the people, and ordered the removal of the fences that inclosed millions of acres of Government domain in the interest of vast monopolies, cutting the settlers off from the courses, ponds, and best pasturage.

This is but a beginning of the great work of the Interior Department alone, and this of itself, if nothing else, is enough to justify the people of the United States in the defeat of Blaine and Logan and the election of Cleveland and Hendricks.

Then Mr. Hill turned his attention to the Postoffice Department, and said:

But, my fellow-citizens, the good work does not end with the Interior Department.

Postmaster General Vilas has made a good beginning also. Let us see what he has been doing and is doing. First in the postal service the savings effected from April 1, 1885, to July 3, 1885, are:

Decrease in star service	$93,183
Steamboat service	72,316
Mail messenger service	23,523
Total and net decrease in above named service	189,702

And this, too, without the slightest detriment to the public or the efficiency of the service. Again:

The number of ordinary postage stamps contracted for by the department for the year ending March 31, 1884, under Republican rule and serving as a basis of award, was 1,462,315,150; cost, $134,467.76. Newspaper and periodical stamps, 2,463,270; cost, $226.39. Postage-due stamps, 12,949,270; cost, $1,190.03.

Under the vigilance of General Vilas the same stamps were contracted for as follows:

Ordinary postage stamps, 1,452,315,120, for $101,516.88; newspaper and periodical stamps, 2,463,270, for $146.41; postage-due stamps, 12,949,270, for $1,099.39, making a total of $103,059.63, against $134,834.18 expended the year before for the same items, or a saving of $32,041.57.

For postal cards, 393,620,500; cost last year, $181,574.50. Two-cent cards, 68,775; cost $54.47. Total, $181,627.97.

This year the same items and the number of cards cost $159,229.13, making a net saving of $22,426.77.

Postoffice envelopes from Nos. 1 to 8, inclusive, total number, 52,836,200; cost last year $98,105.-55; this year, $55,667.80; net reduction, $42,437.26.

During Arthur's administration the cost of all the foregoing was $414,618.13; first year of Cleveland, $317,956.56, a saving in one year of $96,965.59, or nearly $400,000 in four years. Beside this, the salaries of Postmasters have been cut down many thousands of dollars more, and there is no lack of applicants for these same postoffices at reduced salaries. The firmness and ceaseless vigilance of Secretary Whitney, he said, in discharging needless employes in the naval service, and in exacting compliance from John Roach in naval contracts, has already saved the people millions more. The action of the Secretary of the Navy in the recent difficulties at Panama won for him the admiration of every true American; for while it was insignificant in itself, it served notice to the world that under this administration no insult to our flag would go unrebuked. He is a typical Democrat, and there is not a young man in this whole country who is not proud of him.

In the Treasury Department 135 useless clerks have been discharged, and their places have not been filled, and never will be under this administration, thus effecting an additional saving of $213,000 per annum, or in four years $852,000.

Senator Sherman has thus been answered, and answered in an overwhelming, masterly manner.

Disfranchisement of Voters.

The Republicans having forced a bloody-shirt issue in Ohio and Iowa, the following interesting information is appended:

State.	Males of voting age. 1880.	Votes polled for President. 1880.	1884.
Rhode Island	76,898	29,235	32,771
Florida	61,699	51,618	59,872
South Carolina	205,789	170,956	91,578
Vermont	95,621	65,098	59,409
Mississippi	238,532	107,078	120,019
Kentucky	376,221	264,304	275,915
Louisiana	216,787	97,201	109,234
Massachusetts	502,648	282,512	303,383
Tennessee	330,305	241,827	259,468

According to these figures, taken from the tenth census and American almanac, says the New York World, the worst bulldozing in 1880 was in Rhode Island, and the least in South Carolina. In Massachusetts 54 per cent. voted, in Vermont 69 per cent., in South Carolina 48 per cent., in Rhode Island 38 per cent. In 1884, with the same basis for computation, Rhode Island still held the lead for proscription of voters, only 40 per cent. voting in that State, while 98 per cent. voted in Florida. There was no contest and no campaign in the Southern States named, while every possible effort was made to capture and defend the electoral vote of Massachusetts. Yet in Massachusetts only 60 per cent. of the males over 21 voted, while Kentucky voted 73 and Tennessee 78 per cent. In Louisiana and Mississippi only 50 per cent. voted, and in South Carolina only 44, but the election of 1880 showed that it was not red shirts but general apathy that kept the voters from the polls.

If disfranchisement in any State is a proper subject for criticism and complaint by the people of another State, the form and manner of that disfranchisement are not, except when brought about by State laws. In the latter case it is made mandatory upon Congress to reduce the representation of the State in Congress. And until the State laws of Rhode Island, which disfranchise half the citizens in that State, are amended or Rhode Island's representation in the House is reduced to one member, it certainly does not become Republicans to criticise the suffrage of any Democratic State which by law confers the ballot upon all its males of voting age, and thereby shows an intention and desire to conform to public sentiment, however imperfectly the intention and desire may be carried out.

Alone among the thirty-eight States of the Union, the Republican State of Rhode Island has for years not only openly defied public sentiment upon this subject, but it has defied Congress to enforce the constitutional penalty, and in this defiance it has had the solid Republican vote in Congress and in all the States at its back.

Grant Believed Tilden Elected.

George W. Childs, the firm friend of Gen. Grant, has given to the world the information that the General believed Mr. Tilden was elected in 1876. Mr. Childs is a man of truth and reliability, and such a statement at this time from him is remarkable, for it certainly will not raise Grant in the eyes of the present generation or posterity, to hand the story down to history coupled with the name of the man who at that time was in command of the armed forces of the nation. The moral effect of an honest word from him at that time would have been tremendous. It would have stayed the rascally course of his dishonest party colleagues, who were bent on defrauding the people. But it was not spoken, and to know at this time that it was purposely withheld will reflect no credit upon Grant. The highest duty of a citizen is not that of being a thorough partisan. Mr. Tilden exemplified that in his manly, honorable course when he refused to countenance any and all measures looking to his securing the Presidency through other means than those receiving the sanction of the people.

A vast majority of the people knew Mr. Tilden was elected, and if Grant knew and believed it, as his confidential friend reports, he became a party to the fraud upon the people that had so numerously honored and befriended him. Many of the pens that have apotheosized Grant the last few weeks will want to revise their writings in the light of Mr. Childs' disclosures. They will want to write down that Grant fell short of greatness when he refused to cast his influence for the right.—Omaha Herald.

If Senator Sherman is secretly desirous of Republican defeat, we can imagine nothing better calculated to serve the purpose than the atrocious "bloody-shirt" harangue which formed the opening and greater part of his Mount Gilead speech. If he honestly wishes Republican success nothing could be more fatuous. It is the best Democratic campaign document that could be put forth. Every intelligent, well-informed, and fair-minded Republican must be disgusted as he reads that outpouring of "hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness," and be led to question the honesty or the sanity of the man who uttered it at such a time as this, and the decency of a party that chooses such a leader.—Cleveland (O.) Plain Dealer.

TORNADO WARNINGS.

Trustworthy Reports to Be Sent to Localities Threatened by the Funnel Fiend.

Lieutenant J. P. Finley's Observations—The Per Cent of Verification Gratifying.

[Washington dispatch.]

The phenomena of tornadoes, to the scientific study of which Lieut. John P. Finley, of the signal corps, has devoted about eight years, are now so well understood as to warrant the belief that trustworthy warnings may soon be sent out to the inhabitants of localities which may be threatened with disastrous visitations. Daily predictions are in fact being made at present, having begun last year and continued during the tornado season, and resumed recently upon the return of Lieut. Finley from an inspection tour in the West. The percentage of verification is already gratifying, though the predictions are as yet largely experimental, and are embodied in the daily published bulletins of the signal office only when the conditions favorable to the creation of tornadoes are very pronounced. In such cases "severe local storms" are noted as probable.

To a reporter Lieutenant Finley recently described the known phenomena of tornadoes and the ends toward which present researches are directed. These storms have distinctly marked characteristics, and are by no means to be confounded with hurricanes, "blizzards," cyclones, or northeasters. Their tracks are never more than a few hundred yards wide, and their forces are generally exhausted by the time they have traveled a course of forty or fifty miles, though in this latter respect they are quite variable, some having been traced by their lines of devastation more than 180 miles. Their rotary motion, which is greatest toward the center, sometimes reaches the enormous rate of two thousand miles an hour, while their forward movement, always from southwest to northeast, ordinarily does not exceed forty or fifty miles. They are usually unaccompanied by electrical disturbances, and are believed to be uninfluenced by electrical conditions, though violent thunderstorms sometimes follow them a few miles away. There is a distinct and curious relationship between the tornado and the general storm center, which is always apparent in their uniform relative positions; the tornado always occurring southeastwardly from the center of the low barometric pressure, and at a distance from one to six hundred miles. The shape of the general storm center, the direction in which its longest diameter lies, and the appearance of the upper and lower clouds enter as minor elements in the problem out of which the weather experts hope to work a complete system of tornado warnings. The visits of the tornado are commonly between the hours of 2 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon. Its home is an area which includes the whole of Iowa, all of Missouri, except the southeastern corner, the northwestern corner of Arkansas, the northeastern part of Indian Territory, Eastern Kansas, Eastern Nebraska, Southern Minnesota, Southern Wisconsin, and Western Illinois. Here its season extends from April to August, inclusive. It is a frequent visitor to two or three regions. One is a strip along the gulf and South Atlantic, which takes in the central portions of Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina, with termini in Mississippi and North Carolina, over which its devastations are confined to the months of January, February, and March. The other includes a portion of southern and central Ohio, a large part of Pennsylvania, a small area in Maryland, a strip across New York, and a corner each of Massachusetts and Connecticut, where it is seasonable only during the months of August and September.

Lieut. Finley further said, while a host of interesting scientific questions respecting the origin of tornadoes, the laws which govern them, and their relationship to other meteorological phenomena remain to be answered, the more practical questions as to when and where they are likely to appear seem to be advancing rapidly toward solution. The interests which are subject to disaster from tornadoes are alive to the importance of the work in progress. Intending purchasers of farms apply to the Signal Office for information respecting the liability of their selected locality to disaster. To such are sent the records of the past as far as they are known. Whenever Lieut. Finley travels in pursuit of his studies farmers and villagers press for information. To these he says that nothing raised by the hand of man above the surface of the earth can withstand the shock of the tornado. He advises them to seek their dugouts upon the appearance of the portentious signs of disaster, and there await the passage of the storm. For their property he advises insurance, so that the losses of the individual may be shared by his more fortunate neighbors. The insurance companies which last year "wrote" $40,000,000 in tornado policies are eagerly awaiting the completion of a map now in the process of making which will, it is expected, greatly narrow the so-called tornado regions, and perhaps show that large portions of them have never experienced a destructive storm. Upon this map Lieutenant Finley proposes to show from the complete records of several years and dates the average number of tornadoes for each locality per annum.

THE CATTLEMEN.

Conference of Those Interested in Herds in the Cherokee Strip.

[Kansas City special.]

A meeting was held at the Brunswick this afternoon of cattlemen interested in the herds in the Cherokee strip and No Man's Land. Fully a dozen of the largest cattle-owners were in attendance. These are the cattlemen against whom suits aggregating nearly $500,000 have been brought by the Texas cattlemen who were stopped while driving their herds north through Indian Territory about three months ago. The attorneys of the Indian Territory men were present, and at the expiration of the conference the expressions of all those interested was to the effect that they had little to fear from any suits and would make a vigorous defense. The statement was also made that while about four hundred and fifty thousand head of cattle still remained on the Cherokee strip and No Man's Land, most all the cattle have been removed from the Arapahoe and Cheyenne reservation, in accordance with the President's order.

BOLD ROBBERY.

Four Men Intimidate and Rob the Passengers on a Pennsylvania Train.

Altoona specials report a daring robbery on a passenger train on the branch of the Pennsylvania Road which connects Altoona with Hollidaysburg, the county seat. The line is only eight miles long, and the run is made in about thirty minutes, and the robbers were therefore compelled to do their work quickly. The train, which was composed of the engine, combination baggage and passenger car, and the regular passenger coach, had proceeded but a short distance from Hollidaysburg when it was boarded by four hard-looking individuals, who wore handkerchiefs to conceal the lower half of their faces. The leader was distinguished by the fact that his nose was almost entirely eaten away by cancer.

While his three companions, one at each end of the regular passenger-coach and another in the center, with drawn revolvers, commanded the frightened male and female passengers to keep their seats, the man without a nose took up the collection of money and valuables. The total value of money and jewelry taken is not yet ascertained, but will certainly amount to a big sum.

The conductor, who was in the baggage apartment of the front coach counting his tickets, was unaware of the proceedings in the rear coach until informed by a passenger in the smoking compartment. Hastening through to the rear car a fierce struggle ensued between him and one of the robbers. The former was the weaker, however, and he was laid on the broad of his back, while a cocked revolver in close proximity to his head prevented any further demonstration on his part. In the meanwhile the wholesale robbery was still in progress.

During the struggle the conductor made an attempt to pull the bell-cord and notify the engineer, but the robbers had anticipated him and cut the rope. When the robbery in the second coach had been completed there was a hurried consultation of the four masked men over the prostrate form of the conductor, revolvers pointed in each coach preventing any demonstration on the part of the passengers who might have regained their lost courage.

The train began to slacken its speed as it approached the next station, when suddenly the robbers leaped off and ran at full speed through the dense forest which surrounds the track on either side. Springing to his feet the conductor rushed through the train, dashed over the tender into the cab, and ordered the astonished engineer to "pull the throttle wide open." The order was at once complied with, and in a few minutes the train steamed at frightful speed into Altoona. Its unexpected arrival and the blanched faces of the trainmen and passengers were the means of collecting a large crowd. One passenger, who had evidently not given up his valuables without a struggle, exhibited a bloody hand, through which a knife had been thrust.

Parties to hunt the fugitives were at once organized. The railroad officials were notified, and special engines bearing several men each were sent back on the Hollidaysburg Branch, also both east and west on the main line of the Pennsylvania Road. The excitement in this region is intense.

DOUBLE MURDER.

Albert Cook Slays His Mother and His Mother-in-Law, at Campton, Ill.

[Elgin (Ill.) telegram.]

At the town of Campton, a few miles from here, Albert Cook shot his wife and mother-in-law, Mrs. Butts, the latter dying instantly. She was 74 years old, and had resided with her children for over thirty years, since her husband's death. Cook has worked for William Smith, who rents the Frank Burr farm. His domestic troubles were frequent and serious. He has threatened to kill his wife at regular intervals, for which offense he was arrested and lodged in jail. His father bailed him out and took him to Chicago, and he had not been seen by his family until this morning. Cook walked into the house at five this morning. He had evidently been sleeping outdoors all night. The first words he said startled the women out of their slumber. He said:

"Get out of there, now! I'm most frozen. This is a pretty thing you've been doing."

His mother-in-law answered: "And this is a pretty thing you have been doing."

At this he fired upon her, killing her instantly. The ball entered her forehead and lodged in her brain.

His wife sprang out of bed and advanced toward him in the endeavor to wrest the revolver from him. He backed slowly away from her, all the while firing, until she reached the door leading into the sitting-room, which she closed on him. Two shots entered her abdomen, one broke her right arm, and two lodged in the fatty part of her left arm.

Mrs. Cook is a young woman and has lived with her husband for ten years, bearing gently his brutality until it became necessary for her to cause his arrest, he having shot at her once before and threatened many times to kill her. Cook procured a divorce yesterday. Two children were born to the unfortunate couple. Both are boys, aged 7 and 10. When they heard the shooting they ran down stairs from the bedroom and out to the barn, where B. R. McNight, a farm-hand, was at work. McNight ran to the house and found a horrible sight.

"Where did he go?" asked McNight of Mrs. Cook.

She told him "Up-stairs."

McNight closed the stair door, thinking he would keep Cook locked in until assistance came, but Cook was not up-stairs. As yet he has not been captured. Cook is thought to be deranged, but his father says: "He was always deranged, then. He's just ugly." The father is a respectable old gentleman, of German birth, and quite recently spelled his name Koch. He intended to take his son to Kansas, where a brother lives.

According to a decision of the Iowa Supreme Court, an hotel-keeper who receives guests while knowing that there is a contagious disease in his house is liable for damages to any guest who may contract the disease.

THE PAPAL SEE.

It Makes Many Concessions to the Advanced Spirit of the Nineteenth Century.

The Hierarchy Invested with Power of Control Over the Material Affairs of the Church.

The American of this city publishes a special letter from Rome having reference to the confirmation and effect of the decrees passed by the Plenary Council of Baltimore. The writer says that their influence will be felt throughout America, and to a beneficial purpose. A canon, which took its origin in medival times, and was founded on and constituted for a civilization that has almost passed away, is cut into by the decrees. They will constitute a law suitable for the time. The education of the clergy will be elevated to the wants of the time. The Christian civilization of the people will be made to keep pace with the material civilization of the time. Christianity will be brought into harmony with the education and civilization of the present age. Regulations have been made for the establishment of schools for children, normal schools for teachers, and a university for priests and for those laymen who devote themselves to the pursuits of higher knowledge. It is not by "benefices," that great feature of the middle ages by which, while education was assisted, it was also hampered, that these results are to be obtained. "Benefices" will not be brought in as a means of support. The Catholic Church in the United States wants no subsidy from the state, and thus it will not become a servant, or rather a slave, of the state, as it has so often been in European countries, such as France and Austria. The church in America prefers to depend for her support upon the free offerings of the people.

In the new dioceses it is provided that no such thing as parishes and parish priests, in the old canonical sense of the term, will exist in the United States. These were founded on "benefices," but there they will not be employed. This, however, does not indicate that pastors who have created and fostered a congregation, and made the desert to blossom as a rose, will be harshly treated or removed from the places they have built up. There will not be an absolute removability of pastors. A certain percentage of them will be declared immovable, and this holds good except in cases where faults are ascribed to the pastor, and these faults and their consequences will be determined by a trial. A certain amount of liberty of action is required in the United States both by Bishops and clergy, and it is not advisable to remove or curtail their liberty. The dignity and authority will be increased and brought more prominently into relief. They will have their courts over those of bishops, in which appeals will be received before such appeals can be sent to Rome. In future bishops will have a permanent board or council, which they will assemble at certain intervals during the year. They will also give some voice to the clergy in the selection of bishops.

Another important decision of the Baltimore Council refers to societies or associations. A stop is about to be put to indiscriminate, injudicious, or conflicting condemnation of secret societies. Henceforward the condemnation of any secret society will be reserved to a permanent board of all the archbishops of the country, and all cases of such a nature must be referred to them for their judgment and decision.

CRUSHED BY THE CARS.

Collision of Two Sections of a Circus Train on the Northern Pacific Road.

Five Men Killed Outright and Many Others Badly, If Not Fatally, Injured.

[Fergus Falls (Minn.) dispatch.]

A serious smashup of John Robinson's circus train occurred on the Northern Pacific, Fergus and Black Hills Road, a branch of the Northern Pacific, at Ames Station, six miles west of this city. Four cars were broken to pieces, five men killed, and a large number injured. The train was in two sections. After passing Ames the coupling of the four rear cars of the forward section broke, and there being a heavy grade they ran back toward the rear section. The rear engine ran into the wild cars at nearly full speed, with a terrific crash, injuring the forward part of the engine badly and totally demolishing the cars. These were common freight-cars, fitted up with bunks, etc., as sleeping-cars for the canvasmen and roustabouts of the circus. They contained nearly 200 men, and the mystery is that so many escaped with their lives. A terrible scene followed the collision. Their were shrieks, groans, and cries from the many injured, and howls and curses from those who were trying to extricate themselves from the wreck. People in the rear section, none of them hurt, lent all the aid possible, and the forward engine was dispatched at once to Fergus Falls for surgical assistance, returning in half an hour with the Northern Pacific physicians here. The following are the names of the dead:

George Krouse, Cincinnati. His brother lives at No. 62 Main street, Cincinnati. H. Roberts, Wadena, Minn., canvassman. Charles Wallace, joined the circus at Portland, Me.; laborer. Samuel Blair, Colfax, Dakota; laborer. James Wilson, Cincinnati, formerly policeman; train watchman.

The most seriously wounded are as follows: James Eccles, Nova Scotia, dislocated shoulder and bruises; probably fatal. Joe Brown, New York, leg hurt. Wm. Winfield, Appomattox, Va., side and back; will die. Thomas Vanata, ruptured. James Meyers, sprained ankle and legs bruised. Al Turner, Iowa, foot mashed. Henry Roise, New York, leg and arms bruised. Wm. Murray, New York, head badly cut. James Coleman, colored, leg cut. Jenkins, head canvasman, jaw smashed. Ed. Siegler, Cincinnati, head hurt. Wm. Warren, Cleveland, both hands jammed; will have to be amputated.

Nearly every man in the four cars is somewhat bruised and hurt, but, except the above, none seriously. A brakeman named Peterson could not be found after the wreck was cleared, and it is not known whether he was killed or ran away. The injured will be sent to the Northern Pacific Hospital at Brainerd, and an inquest will be held to-morrow on the remains of the deceased, which will be held at the disposition of relatives, if any telegraph; otherwise they will probably be buried here. A colored band in one of the cars escaped with little injury except to their instruments, nearly all of which were smashed beyond repair.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

The Ohio Election.

At time of going to press Thursday morning we have nothing definite from Ohio, but private dispatches announce the republicans ahead by a small majority.

Notes and News.

One of the most compact and complete statistical volumes we have ever seen concerning Michigan has just been received from the general passenger department of the Michigan Central Railway Company, at Chicago, entitled "Facts and Figures About Michigan." It not only contains a vast amount of valuable information in regard to the state at large, but a full roster of national, state and county officials, with a statement of the condition and business traffic of the various railways, lists of railway officials, railroad stations with mileage and telegraph facilities, express companies, the newspaper press, post-offices and political and economical statistics. It is just such a publication as every business man should have at hand, and can be secured by sending 15 cents to O. W. Ruggles, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

The American Missionary Association, which is to hold its thirty-ninth annual meeting at Madison, Wis., Oct. 27-29, is a national benevolent society, almost entirely supported by Congregationalists. Its work is chiefly educational, and mainly at the south among the colored people. Its schools and churches are to be found in every southern state. It is the largest society of its kind in the country. It spends in its work about $300,000 annually. The meeting promises to be one of unusual interest. The papers and discussions will relate chiefly to the educational aspects of the negro and Indian problems. Prof. Albert Salisbury, of the Whitewater, Wis., State Normal School, will present a paper. Geo. W. Cable, Esq., Gen. Joshua L. Chamberlin, of Maine, and many other distinguished men are to attend and address the conference. Ex-Gov. Washburn, of Massachusetts, is its president.

Brezee's Herald gives a two column "explanation" of some of the bottom facts of the publication of the Cleveland scandal in the Detroit Journal last year. It seems that a majority of the stock of the concern was held by republicans, who were anxious to make the paper a Blaine organ, to which Brezee objected. Having payments then coming due for the new perfecting press, advantage was taken of his circumstances to compel him to accept help from the republican state central committee, through Wm. Livingstone, Jr., in return for which the Journal was to publish certain matters favorable to the republican party. At the time of the publication of the scandal in the Buffalo Telegraph, Brezee was so thoroughly in the clutches of the agents of the republican state central committee that he could not prevent its publication. About a week after its publication, it will be remembered, an editorial was published, headed "Not Proven." Brezee had instituted an investigation, and desired to give the public the truth. This was the cause of his trouble which ended in throwing him out of the Journal company entirely. If this statement is true, and surface indications in the past seem to prove it, it fixes the responsibility of the publication of the scandal clearly enough, and also defines the position of the Journal politically, notwithstanding its claim of independence.

The editors of the state, on the occasion of their meeting the past summer, were entertained by Hon. Perry Hannah in a truly sumptuous manner. A committee selected for the purpose has prepared, for presentation to this gentlemen, a badge, of which the following is a description. In size this elegant testimonial is five and one-half by two inches. The design is composed of various emblems and inscriptions upon a ground of elegant white satin. At its upper end the satin ground is crossed by a bar of yellow gold bearing the name of the recipient in raised polished letters: beneath the bar is a handsome engraved scroll; depending from this bar is the center pendant containing the inscription "From Michigan Editors," with an ink bottle and two quill pens crossed, these emblems being raised in different-hued gold. Beneath this device is a second bar of yellow gold having upon it in raised letters the dates "July 6, 7, 8, 1885." From this bar is suspended the principal emblematic pendant. This has a flat back of yellow Roman gold, on which is raised in full relief the old-time hand press. The press is worked up in very fine style, each part being placed in position as in the full sized machine from which it was copied. The press is surrounded by a wreath of gold, one side representing laurel leaves, the other oak. The wreath is fully up to the rest of the workmanship of the badge, being put together leaf by leaf. We will add that no description can do justice to this gem of art. It must be seen and studied to be appreciated."—Newspaper Union.

Collector Watson.

The democracy of this gentleman having been questioned, a writer in the Grand Rapids Democrat gives the following concerning his record:

Mr. Watson's record as a democrat shows that since he became a voter in 1878 he has been selected by the democrats of Ottawa county, in convention assembled, to represent them in every democrat state convention held in Michigan and every congressional convention held in the Fifth district and has also been appointed each year on the democratic county committee. In the summer of 1884 he was chairman of the democratic county convention, which selected delegates to attend the democratic state convention at Detroit, and was made chairman of the Ottawa county delegation to the democratic congressional convention which met at Grand Rapids last fall.

The democrats of his town have elected him a delegate to every democratic county convention held during the same period, and for four years past he has been the chairman of the democratic committee of his township.

If any man in fifth or ninth districts can show better certificates of democracy, let him come forward.

PRIVATE ADVERTISING.

Why Cards, Circulars and the Like Are Failures as Advertising Mediums.

Within the last few years it has become the fashion with some people to do their advertising in their own private way, instead of through the newspapers. Some distribute cards, some circulars, some pamphlets, some even almanacs and some inconceivable monstrosities of oddity, circulating them by the hundreds or thousands through the mails. The printer's art has been taxed to the utmost to gratify the tastes of these advertisers. Some of the finest as well as some of the basest specimens of the arts of engraving, of chromolithographing and of color-printing are being produced for these purposes, and every conceivable style of fancy paper is brought into requisition. The advertisers vie with each other in the elegance of their designs and the costliness of their devices, taking it for granted that the receivers will conform their estimate of the status of the advertiser to the artistic pretensions of his advertisement. Some people may regret that the noble art of printing, at the period of its highest achievement should be subjected to such debasing use; but, to those who thus employ the art, it should be equally a matter of concern that the debasement so completely fails of the object for which it was intended. With him who notices such advertisements at all, the first feeling on receiving one of these superb specimens of typography or engraving is apt to be one of disgust that it relates to the artistic pursuits of his butcher or his bootmaker, or that the subjects of its elegant illustrations are chairs and tables, refrigerators and brooms; he throws it down with an indefinable grudge against the man who has been guilty of such a ridiculous prostitution of art, and, without exactly knowing it, he is distinctly convinced that a tradesman who spends so much money in such an incongruous way is not likely to be endowed with the common sense of a good man of business or to sell cheaply.

In truth, however, those who take any notice whatever of this flood of announcements form but a very small percentage of those who receive them. They have come to be the nuisances of both the parlor and the counting-room. At home they are never opened but with disappointment, because they come in the place of letters really hoped for. In the office the merchant finds his morning mail stuffed with these intrusions upon the serious affairs of his business, which he inwardly curses or impatiently consigns to his waste-paper heap. In short, if a public vote should be taken, it would unanimously declare these drumming missives to be an intolerable nuisance that should be denied the privilege of the mails.

Men of business who resort to this method of advertising can not be ignorant of the fact that the people whom they would reach have become nauseated with it. They must be aware that they themselves disregard all such appeals for patronage; and what reason have they to suppose that others receive their applications with more patience? Sagacious advertisers are beginning to see this, and are returning to the old method of public announcement. The newspaper is, in every sense, the best medium for advertising; and, for a given result, it is by much the cheapest also. It reaches a far greater number of possible customers than any private announcement can; and it is more certain to receive attention. The private circular is thrown aside as a thing which people have come to regard as a bore, and which is neglected because its recipients have no time to attend to it. The newspaper is used in each day's hour of leisure, and readers find interest in reading its advertisements as well as its news, because of the variety they present and the information they convey respecting a wide diversity of interests. It may be safely estimated that an announcement made through the press is noticed by fifty readers, where, made in a private way, it would reach but one. If, therefore, the same amount were expended in either case, the result would be fifty-fold better from the former method than from the latter. There are, undoubtedly, cases in which the circular is a better medium than the newspaper. Such, for instance, as where the matter is necessarily lengthy and the cost of newspaper space would therefore be very large. But such cases are quite exceptional; and the sooner advertisers learn the folly of their present large expenditures in seeking publicity through private means, the better for their pockets and their success.—New York Commercial Bulletin.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees east, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the beach of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north range six (6) west, intersects said beach, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty [50] links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petequom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows: The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-seven (27), in township thirty-four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

Preaching at M. E. church next Sunday morning and evening. All are invited.

Geo. A. Leonard returned home from Chicago, on the Lawrence, Tuesday morning.

John Allen expects to commence next week to build a new machine shop at South Arm.

M. J. Stockman walks lame now: the stove that dropped on his foot was too heavy for him.

From the top of the new mill one can get a magnificent view of Charlevoix and surroundings.

O. D. Wood is doing some good road work this week, especially on State, Mason, and Clinton streets.

Elk Rapids has three delivery wagons running nearly all the time, and supports three drays.

Election of officers of the Historical Society at the Bridge Street house to-morrow night.

Young people's meeting at the M. E. church next Sunday evening at 6 o'clock, to be led by William Stover.

Mrs. Bardeen and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Bishop returned to Kalamazoo on Monday. Miss Sutliff started on Tuesday. But two families now remain at the resort.

Elk Rapids Progress: As iron has been found near St. Ignace it is about time that some enterprising man should inspect the petroleum fields on S. S. Spaulding's place near Norwood.

Bellaire Breeze: Mr. Stigar has his schooner, the Fair Play, at Charlevoix, where he is getting a cabin built the whole length of her, and expects to start for Florida the 18th of October.

Rev. E. H. Day publishes an open letter to W. R. Stinchcomb in the Traverse Journal strongly sustaining the recent charges made by the Journal. That paper seems to be proving its statements.

We have received from the retiring secretary the proceedings of the Michigan Press Association, held at Traverse City last July, including an account of the excursion, and the feast at Charlevoix.

The following curious sentence contains all the letters of the English alphabet: "A quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog." Can any one of our boys or girls find a shorter one embracing the required letters.

Clare News: Judging from what we see in the Charlevoix Journal, Geo. W. Jefferies, a former old Clare ite, must be doing considerable building at that place this season. We are pleased to hear of Mr. J's prosperity.

Jos. R. Dixon brought home from Traverse City last week two thoroughbred imported Holstein cows, mothers of the bull and heifer which he exhibited at the recent fair at East Jordan. This is a valuable addition to his stock of Holsteins.

Attention is called to the card of J. R. & J. S. Dixon in another column advertising their dairy, vegetable, and stock farm. Their aim is always to make "Terrace Farm" a guarantee that every article bearing the name is the best in the market.

On account of a lack of business, the Harbor Springs Independent has found it necessary to adopt the patent inside plan, to reduce expenses. When one considers the work Hampton has put on his paper to make it the best in that county, this reduction of business does not speak well for the enterprise of the business men of the town.

Petoskey Record: Isaac Staufer, of Carpenter, had about 70 fleeces of wool at his shearing last June. The wool buyers in Petoskey offered him a shilling per pound for the clip and Staufer concluded to hold the wool. Last week he sold through J. A. Alger—who by the way is an old wool buyer—realizing 27 cents a pound. It certainly paid him to hold his clip for the hundred days he carried it.

The Friant has seven carloads of machinery and one of house-hold goods to draw from Harbor Springs to South Arm this week, for the Wilson Hoop Co. Next week she will have from four to six carloads of flour and feed for the East Jordan merchants.

L. D. Bartholomew & Co. have enlarged their salesroom by cutting a large double door way into the rooms formerly occupied by Brown & Co.'s bank, and moving their office and a portion of their stock. This change is necessary to accommodate their large and increasing trade.

At the meeting of the council last week, Chas. Swallow was elected trustee to fill the unexpired term of Chas. Ely. The marshal was instructed to keep the revetments clear of all obstructions. The resignation of street commissioner Johnson was requested, and has since been handed in.

Mrs. Litney is moving her millinery goods to the new building this week. She has associated with her, Mrs. Carr, of Sutton's Bay, and the firm will add to the present stock, with the intention of making it the largest and finest stock of millinery in the county, if not in several adjoining counties. They will be ready for business again by Saturday.

Masonic Resolutions.

WHEREAS, It has pleased the Great Architect of the Universe to remove from our midst our late brother Lemuel W. Skinner, and

WHEREAS, It is but just that a fitting recognition of his many virtues should be had, therefore it is

Resolved, By Charlevoix Lodge No. 282 of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, that while we bow with humble submission to the will of the Most High, we do not the less mourn for our brother who has been taken from us.

Resolved, That in the death of Lemuel W. Skinner, this Lodge laments the loss of a brother who was ever ready to proffer the hand of aid and the voice of sympathy to the needy and distressed of the fraternity; an active member of this society, whose endeavors were exerted for its welfare and prosperity; a friend and companion who was dear to us all.

Resolved, That the heartfelt sympathy of this Lodge be extended to his family in their affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Lodge and a copy therof be transmitted to the family of our deceased brother, and to each of the newspapers of Charlevoix.

The Smallest Watch in the World.

A small, gold penholder, resting in a rich velvet case, lay on a jeweler's showcase in John street, last week. The end of the holder was shapped like an elongated cube, and was an inch long. A faint musical ticking that issued from it attracted a customer's attention. The jeweler lifted the holder from the case, with a smile, and exhibited a tiny watch dial, 1-16th of an inch in diameter, set in the side between two other dials almost as small. One indicated the day, and the other the month of the year. The center dial ticked off seconds, minutes, and hours.

"This is the smallest watch ever made," the jeweler said, "and the only one of its kind in the world. It took a Geneva watchmaker the better part of two years to fit the part together so that they would work accurately. It has been exhibited in London and Paris."

The works of the watch were so that they fitted lengthwise in the holder. The mainspring was an elongated coil of steel fitted to the wheels by a tiny chain, and worked like an old-fashioned clock weight. The works were wound by means of a little screw of gold on the under side of the handle. A good pen was fitted in the holder, and the jeweler wrote with it without disturbing the operation of the fairy watch.

"What's the price?" the customer asked.

"A round $500," replied the jeweler, laughing.—New York Sun.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

ADVICE TO BOYS.

BY CHARLES R. BARRETT.

You may wish for this,
You may wish for that,
And wish for fruits of the soil,
Mark it down a Saxon truth,
Success results from toil.

If you would have this,
If you would have that,
And have it all secure,
Accept it as a simple fact,
Knowledge you must procure.

If you have saved this,
If you have saved that,
And it is all your own,
You deserve all the credit
To be not a rolling stone.

If you work for this,
If you work for that,
And labor with a will,
The result will be success,
And men will note your skill.

You may read this book,
You may read that book,
But read the better kind;
You must read a useful book,
Or you're only wasting time.

You may drink this glass,
You may drink that glass,
Till you quench the liquor crave
Forget not that in the end
You'll fill a drunkard's grave.

You may go this way,
You may go that way,
You may go from door to door;
Without God's love in your heart,
The devil will get you sure.

UNCLE SI'S FAMILIAR EPISTLES TO INQUIRING YOUTH.

2—Serving it Hot for a Would-be "Koper."

An immature New York tough writes to me as follows:

"Mistur Unkel Si ime in a snide Shue Store 20 yeers old i am butt wanter bee a Koper Kopp fur short wich is ploesman yer know & sum gits outu it Rich Cos Its a Bully Racket & ime gonter Be a Kop if You was Mee wood you Be ploesman You Ken Bleed de Quisby Blokes & Blowers & make a Stake every Day ime goin fur it Sure wood You, if yer Down on fellers yer Ken Lay fur em & Nock de Stuffin outen Em its a Dizzy Rackit & ime gonter bee One woodn't You few was Mee, yer Ken wurk de Gin mils to de Queans taist & bee hi Pye wid all de Dazy survent gurls & Play it sweat on de Apel wimmins fur Peenutts & peeches yer Ken fish de Lushes pokes & run em in fur Drunk & Disordly & swipe many a flimsy & the Salry is Bang up 1200 Dollers Yeer & Kountt Mee in every Time."

Well, sir, I termed you an "immature tough," but, reperusing your uncouth screed, I must say that your immatureness is not that of the new-born clam or unfledged tadpole, not at all. All you require is a slight experience in the field congenial to you to become a blooming tough of the first water; of hickory incorrigibility; it is in you, and all it wants is an outing.

It is evident that the "Shue Store"—whether it or you is twenty years old would be hard to tell by your letter, but I presume you refer to your own age—is no place for you or your capabilities. What you most urgently require is a place in the field most congenial to your warped nature; and the more immediately the better, as you would the sooner reach the end of your tether, young man, it being morally certain that you would go it with a rush from the start, without any discretion whatever, thereby being the more quickly brought down to the ring-bolt, much to the relief of your fellow-citizens and a portion of the rest of mankind, probably. As such galoots as you—your letter justifies the use of this term, and the application of it to you—can't be jerked up and jugged for what they are capable of doing, the best way is to give them every chance possible of showing their cussedness, as a quick means to the desired end—the squelching of such galoots by gallows and rope, or the secluding of the same in stone residences of the State; therefore, if you can't emulate Tim McCarthy, of Oak street, your city, young man, and become a dive-keeper of like cussedness of caliber, by all means do the next best thing, and get appointed to the "finest police force in the world," as a "chief" once termed it, and which it fondly imagines itself to be, but which is thus ironically termed by the citizens at large, with others not "at large," many of whom, in durance vile, are better, morally, than the same number of the "finest," picked at random.

As a New York "cop," young man of innate cussedness of soul, you will have opportunities to follow your natural bent, which is cussedness of eighteen carats, fully equal, if not superior, to those enjoyed by dive-keepers of the McCarthy stamp, and I feel convinced, from your letter, that you will be fully able to take advantage of said opportunities, and make the most of them. You may not pull together as big a boodle as Tim McCarthy, the Jay Gould of dive-keepers, has corralled in the same length of time, but a fellow of your internal sheolishness can do well until he runs the thing into the ground, as it were, which you are bound to do sooner or later. Should you ever rise to a captaincy in the "finest," your opportunities for harvesting a boodle will increase in number and volume, and the amount of filthy lucre you can hive for a "rainy day"—this is a figurative term for an indefinite period, as understood—need never be known to any one not inside your own waistcoat, and will only be limited by your desires in the direction of wealth, be they moderate or the reverse.

The captain of your 290th precinct, a "blue nose" from the kingdom thereof, which is located somewhere in the fogs of old-cheese density that enshroud the far eastern portions of this otherwise blest and happy hemisphere, has, it is alleged, by following the routes of economy and foresight, not to mention hindsight, and by "strict attention to business"—it is a cold day when he doesn't attend to "business"—laid by a store of the needful sufficient unto the end of his days, even should these run up into the hundreds of years, as did those of the late lamented Mr. Methuselah, of Palestine, or some ranch contiguous; and this lay-by was erected on the foundation of a $2,000 yearly salary, and in a few short years; which goes to show that frugality is not confined to Congressmen, and that a New York police captain may frugalize a fortune proportionally as great as that of an M. C., by the same methods of thrift. It also goes to show that, to become men of multitudinous "rocks" on moderate salaries, we must be men of serviceable "sand," paradoxical as it may seem; and that the aforementioned police captain has an abundance of this sort of "sand," goes without saying.

But all police precincts are not alike. Not all are highly productive "sugar" plantations; not all rich, auriferous "placers" for the aggrandizement of the head "prospectors." While all "pan out" more or less, in the great metropolis-by-the-sea, there is but one fairly entitled to the tart for "productiveness;" and, as happy must be the captain in whose precinct the gamblers, crooks, and bagnio-keepers most do congregate, provided said captain has abundance of serviceable "sand in his craw," then must the captain of the pre-eminent police precinct of New York be happy, for he can "round up" more cattle of the breeds mentioned, to the square acre, than any other police captain on the continent, probably; and this kind of stock is very profitable, if well handled; and what this captain doesn't know about handling stock of the varieties mentioned wouldn't be worth knowing to any one else. Verily there is but one 290th precinct—in all the land, let us hope—and the "sports" and the "crooks" and the bagnio-keepers are its profit, and ever will be, else am I no prophet.

But why speak of captaincies to you, unfledged bird of evil intent, snooded in a "snide shoe store"—it is "snide," I suppose, because it doesn't offer opportunities enough for your beating and bilking propensities—why to you speak of captaincies, when, fledged in the field of promise, that of police provision, you will fly to certain destruction, and go to meet Crowley, gone before, long ere you sport the chevrons of a sergeant, even.

You—why, you are a moral rattlesnake, a moral hyena, a moral tiger, a moral octopus—this means "devil-fish," understand—in short, a "moral leper," than which nothing worse can be said of a human. When a man gets to be a "moral leper" he has struck bottom, as it were, and rests—no, he can't rest, he flounders about in the blackest slough that turpitude ever opened on the pampas of civilization; and there's just where you are floundering, you moral "devil-fish," you. Your letter proclaims you a combination of moral monstrosities; a whole moral menagerie of wild and carnivorous beasts and reptiles, every one of which is worse than the other; and that you should so commit yourself in black and white argues that the doctrine of total depravity was not founded on the baseless fabric of the cosmic phantom of irreconcilableness, or any other spook in the far-away whenness of ancient previosity, but on the solid bedrock of innate cussedness, an integral portion of which is represented in your person. Now, put that in your pipe and smoke it, depraved galoot of sheolish virus; into your glass and "drink it down," or spread it on your bread and "eat it up;" any way to get it into you, I care not how.

Your letter shows you to be a fatty degeneration of triple X depravity; a natural-born beat, bilk, bruiser, ruffian, thief, and everything that is frowned upon in respectable circles. If not already a practical thief, your letter shows that you are on more or less intimate terms with the vernacular of thieves in regular standing, and that if you cannot "patter flash" with the most accomplished of the fraternity, you can catch on to the lingo readily, and finish your education in that line at short notice; and let me tell you, sir, that no well-regulated citizen would ever be on terms of intimacy with the flash of thieves, and don't you forget it.

It is evident that you have studied into the marvels, "makes," maneuvers, and mysteries of that portion of the political economy of civilization which absorbs policing—if you haven't as yet "fit into" it, as old man Shingle "fit into the Revolution," it is morally certain that you would fit into a policeman's coat and place, and, in time, vie with the toughest of a crowd nothing if not tough.

It is a "Bully Rackit," you say, "& sum gits outu it Rich." To cotton to your vernaenlar, I must say that you have got the matter "dead to rights"—it is a "bully racket" for such as join the force, going down through the slums in blue and brass, and doing business on the great thoroughfares; and many do "get onto it rich," the idiom understood. You can "Bleed de Quisby Blokes & blowers & make a Stake every Day," you say. Yes, you festive tarantula, you can do these things, which are done every day, and you are just the centipede that will never fail in doing. "You ken Lay for fellers if yer Down on em & Nock de Stuffin outen em," you say. Of course you can; it is done every day, and you are just the "tarrier" to go for 'em; your ruffianly, brutal nature will have a wide scope for operation, and will never be backward in coming forward, I am satisfied.

As you say again, you can "wurk de Gin mills to de Queans taist & bee hi pye wid all de Dazy survent gurls." Of course you can, and, as you say, sponge on the apple women, fish the pockets of "lushers," and "swipe many a flimsey." True, too true, you shovel-nosed shark, for they "all do it," and you are not going to be left, to any great extent. You say the "Salry is Bangup 1200 Dollers Yeer." Right you are again, you hook-billed vulture, chafing in a "snide Shue ~~Store~~." It is a "bang-up salary" for such material as gathers it in. Not one in fifty, the whole force through, could command the half of it in any other sphere of action, the mechanics being too lazy to work at their trades, while the remainder could command only the low pay of unskilled laborers. Yes, you are right, I say, again; it is a "bang-up salary," and you are just the sort of grappling-iron to get onto it with your hooks.

You wind up your glowing dispatch with what has been the slogan of every individual jackal from away back before the time of one Adam of Eden, and which is—"Kountt Mee in every Time"—me with a capital M and double e, you warped and carnal parasite in human form!

Count you in, eh? I do; make no mistake. You will "get there" as surely as the bald-headed buzzard of Bermuda to the banquet on an over-ripe carcass of a mule defunct, or other feast of carrion; but it is gratifying to know that you will overgorge yourself in quick time, and, figuratively speaking, succumb to indigestion; in other words, you will sow the wind and reap the whirlwind. I know you will, for that's the sort of reaper you are, and don't you forget it.

But there, your screed makes me tired—you make me tired—all over and clear through. Go and be a "Koper" at once, and stand not on the order. The sooner you get on the "force" the sooner you will mount the gallows, or be retired to a State prison, for you are of cussedness abnormally cussed. Selah!

How Bills Are Carried.

The Tice meter, for measuring the product of whisky-stills, received the approval of scientific experts, but it was necessary to carry through the House a clause in a bill requiring their use by distillers. An adroit lobbyist, known as Boynton, undertook to secure a favorable report from the Committee on Ways and Means, of which Gen. Schenck was Chairman. He accordingly arranged for a quiet game of draw-poker in a parlor at Willard's Hotel. Gen. Schenck, Tice the inventor, Boynton, and another member of Congress made up the quartet. The game was a lively one; $10 "ante," $50 "blind," and a "straddle" if anybody felt reckless enough to try it on. When the party broke up rosy-fingered morn was rolling back the somber-hued curtains of night and ushering in another day, and old Tice's wallet was empty. He was apparently very much crest-fallen, and Gen. Schenck was correspondingly happy. The next day the Ways and Means Committee reported in favor of the Tice meter, and the bill became a law, very much to the sorrow of the distillers. The meter was a fraud of the first water. Each one cost from $1,500 to $3,000, giving Tice a margin of $1,000 to $2,500, according to the size of the meter. Scores of distillers were compelled to pay for the "blasted fraud," as they all called it, but not one succeeded in running a gallon of whisky through the so-called meter. Tice, however, was not to blame—so he said. His meter was a good machine, as he invented it, but the committee of scientific men who sat upon it under the act of Congress directed various improvements to be made, which rendered it impossible for a drop of high wines to get through it.—Boston Budget.

Labor Statistics.

A building was in process of erection opposite a public building, in Washington City. One of the clerks, who had been looking out of the window for some time, said to another clerk who was reading a newspaper:

"I have been watching that workman over there, and he has not done a lick of work in all that time. I wonder what he gets paid for?"

Just about the same time the workman remarked to a fellow workman:

"Just look at that Government clerk over there. He hasn't done anything except look out of the window for the last half hour. No wonder the country is going to the dogs."—Texas Siftings.

He Preferred Vermont Railways.

"How fur is Albany?" asked a countryman at the Grand Central Station.

"One hundred and forty-four miles."

"How long does it take to git thar?"

"Three hours and twenty-five minutes by fast line."

"An' how much does it cost?"

"One dollar and forty-four cents."

"Gosh! a dollar and forty-four cents for ridin' less'n four hours. Why, up in Vermont I kin ride half a day on a railroad for less money than that, an' not go near so fur, nuther."—New York Sun.

Cowboys on a Drive.

A picturesque, hardy lot of fellows, these wild "cowboys," as they sit on the ground by the fire, each man with his can of coffee, his fragrant slice of fried bacon on the point of his knife-blade, or sandwiched in between two great hunks of bread, rapidly disappearing before the onslaughts of appetites made keen by the pure, invigorating breezes of these high plains. See that brawny fellow with the crisp, tight-curling yellow hair growing low down on the nape of his massive neck rising straight and supple from the low collar of his loose flannel shirt, his sun-browned face with the piercing gray eyes looking out from under the broad brim of his hat, his lower limbs clad in the heavy "chaps"—or leather overalls—stained a deep reddish-brown by long use and exposure to wind and weather, his revolver in its holster swinging from the cartridge-filled belt, and his great spurs tinkling at every stride, as, having drained the last drop of coffee, he puts down the can, and turns from the fire toward the horses, picking up as he goes the huge heavy leather saddle, with its high pommel and streaming thongs of rawhide, that has served him as a pillow during the night. Quickly his "cayuse" is saddled, the great broad hair-rope girths tightly "sinched," the huge bit slipped into the unwilling mouth, and with a bound the active fellow is in the saddle. Paw, pony, paw; turn your eyes till the whites show; lay your pointed ears back; squeal and kick to your heart's content. Oh, buck away! you have found your master; for the struggle does not last long. The practiced hand, the heavy spurs, and stinging whip soon repeat the almost daily lesson, and with one last wicked shake of the head the wiry "cayuse" breaks into his easy lope, and away go horse and rider to their appointed station on the flank of the great drove.

The others soon follow, camp is broken, the wagon securely packed ready for the road, and the work of the day commences. The cattle seem to know what is coming. On the edges of their scattered masses the steers lift their heads and gaze, half stupidly, half frightened, at the flying horsemen; as the flanks are turned they begin closing in toward one another, moving up in little groups to a common center. Now and then a steer or some young bull, more headstrong or more terrified than his comrades, breaks away and canters off clumsily over the prairie. In a moment he is pursued, headed off, turned, and driven in toward the herd again. As they "close in mass"—to use an apt military phrase—"round up" on all sides by the swift-riding cowboys, they are gently urged onward by the drivers in the rear, until the whole herd is slowly moving forward, feeding as they go, in a loose, wide column, headed toward the break in the mountains that indicates the mouth of the canon through which it is to pass.

Very slowly and cautiously the herd moves forward: sometimes there is a halt in front; those in the rear crowd up more closely; very gently, and with soothing cries, the experienced cowboys urge them on again. It is ticklish work, for a momentary panic may drive scores of them down the precipitous sides of the mountain.

And now the canon widens, and, succeeding the high rock walls and great trees, its sides gradually merge into gently rising, grass-covered slopes; the river, too, is broader, its surface shining like polished silver, and betraying its onward movement only by an occasional soft ripple and low lap-lap of the water against its overhanging banks, from which, breathing out the sweet fragrance of thousands of newly opened buds, the wild rose bushes hang down their slender branches. Away up the slopes, dancing and nodding their pretty heads in the soft breeze, the gayly colored wild flowers—yellow sunflowers, daisies, blue harebells—mingle their bright hues, melting into one another on the distant round hill-tops, covering them as with a carpet of the softest velvet.—E. F. Zogbaum, in Harper's Magazine.

Useful Hints to Fleshy People.

Recourse to starvation, anti-fat, dieting by measure, and the swallowing of acids is not only absurd but suicidal. Mr. Banting's dietary is so depleting to the system that for one relieved thereby a dozen suffer positive injury. Any one can reduce his flesh by not eating sufficient food to repair the waste that is constantly going on. The cure, however, in this case is worse than the disease. Starvation remedies are of no account, for abstinence from food means a sacrifice of albumen as well as fat, and anæmia ensues.

A strict regimen is the only cure for obesity. A dietary, however, that robs the system of its nutrition should be avoided. Fat is supposed to produce fat. Such is not the case. Fat, combining with the carbo-hydrates and albuminous compounds, operates directly against obesity. No dyspeptic need fear to eat fat so long as too much is not taken. Fat checks all nitrogenous waste and appeases thirst as well as hunger. The great thing to be done in order to correct corpulence is to abstain from eating starchy and saccharine foods. Vegetables rich in albumen, however, make desirable dishes. Potatoes should never be eaten. Fish and all kinds of meats can be eaten at pleasure, but beer and malt liquors generally should be avoided, in consequence of the carbo-hydrates contained therein. A dietary from which the sugars and starches are excluded will do for the corpulent what no medicine can do—that is, make them thin.

Astride of a sixty-inch wheel,
Eyeing sidewise a maiden romantic
As he drives on his swift steed of steel.

Out she darts from beneath the girl's feet.
Only a sky-rocket header,
While the maiden just stands still and stares;
A poor feline, who couldn't be deader,
And a whopping old bill for repairs.

REPARTEE.

They were lunching one day,
In a handsome cafe,
And she happened to say,
As she noticed the way
That he and icecream were in unity,
"Can you eat ice cream with impunity?"
And he made the reply,
With a wink of the eye,
"No, but I can with a spoon."
But her triumph came soon;
As they left the saloon,
He gave her a good opportunity;
"And now, Bessie, dear,
As the weather is clear,
Can you take a walk with impunity?"
Her smile was as bright as the moon,
And deliciously shy
Came the mocking reply,
"No, but I can with a spoon."

A Boy's Hat.

Nothing on this clod of sin ever gets used up quicker than a boy's hat, unless it may be a Congressman's reputation or wealth in a powder mill, and no sight between the nursing bottle and the winding sheet is more rare than one with the semblance of newness in active service on a week day. There is something in a boy's soul that rebels and kicks in mutiny at having to wear a hat of unmarred shape, and the only possible chance of preserving the shape of a new one unimpaired during the first day of its use, would be to strap the boy's arms fast to his sides, pinion his legs, push the hat down to his ears, and make him stand in an empty flour barrel, amply isolated from all walls or shrubbery against which he could bunt his head. This may be a little rough on the boy, but it will save the hat. If any other plan has been adopted with success we have not been apprised of it, or furnished with working plans of the same. We have seen a boy who had been carefully nurtured—with both shingle and slipper—go forth in the morning under a hat of gladsome look and expensive texture, and in the evening of the same day we have seen that same child of destruction march into the house with all the glory of Ichabod taken out of the thing on his head as completely as a combination trip-hammer and threshing machine could have done it, without spraining itself in the attempt. What agency compassed this terrible condition of tattered collapsiveness so speedily mortal man knows not, and probably never will until the tree of knowledge has been plucked bare, and its very roots worked up into tea for brain stimulant. It doesn't matter a pin how lamblike a boy may be, and we don't care a gnat how blue his eyes are, or how much sunlight lingers in his hair, he is the remorseless foe of all new hats, as you will find to your cost by the time he is big enough to throw a stone through a light of glass in the kitchen window. If you have a boy whose bones are not composed entirely of milk, who doesn't fulfill this forecast, slip your hand down the back of his neck, and examine the points of his shoulder-blades for incipient wings. They ought to be discernible in that neighborhood somewhere. Why this is thus is beyond our depth, but that it is so is expensively apparent to every parent who has small pantaloons in the family. The nature bottled up in a boy seems to differ even more than day and night, or man and wife, from all other known forms of motive force outside of a street-car stable, in not being amenable to the same laws that seem to control the remainder of the universe, and, although boys have for centuries been nearly as abundant as stars in the Milky Way, we know ten times as much about the movements of the faintest point of light in that celestial footpath as we do about the devious ways of our own male progeny. We understand the causes of eclipse, wind, rain, and the election of Cleveland, and we know to the proximity of well-grounded certainty that Ben Butler became cock-eyed from squinting through the fence at the girls when small; but, men and brethren, what do we know about the origin of that inexplicable cause which prompts every child on the Adam side of the house of David, and Goliath, too, mayhap, to wage such unrelenting war upon everything in headgear with the smell of the shop still upon it? It is humiliating to confess that, with all our knowledge about heaps of things that will never bring us any money, we are still as much in ignorance on the boy question as the man in the moon himself. How much consolation can we find in the fact that we know why a planet stays in its orbit, if we are to remain forever ignorant about the goings and comings of our own masculine descendant, and what the mischief he's been doing with his hat? Will it prolong the color and tenacity of your hair and promote its growth, to say nothing of removing dandruff and giving life to the scalp, to know that it takes light a million years to get here from headquarters in some instances, if you are to remain in the dark ever more concerning matters that occur with exasperating frequency within a yard of your own nostrils? There may be a science or two that we have not yet found time to fully master, or some of the lumbermen in Michigan may possess information not yet sent to the front; but from all the data in hand at present we very much doubt if the sum of all earthly wisdom—in addition to what is already known in Chicago and conjectured in Milwaukee—is equal to the call made upon it by the question of juvenile depravity as applied to hats. Or, to state the matter with still greater conciseness, it is the opinion of one humble toiler in the hive of popular thought, that at sunrise this morning there was not sufficient information above high-water mark to make it as clear as a sunbeam why a boy feels more at home under an old dishrag of a thing not fit for a gun-swab, than he does with a hat on his head worth two of the hardest dollars ever minted. There may be some things that we know fully, and with a good deal more comprehensiveness than a bachelor understands that a baby is a baby; but on this foggy question we are still tossed about by the deluge of ignorance, and don't know any more about the why and the wherefore of the same than we do about the ring price of wheat on the planet Saturn at this minute.—Chicago Ledger.

A Modern Solomon.

The strained relations which existed under the Folger regime between Assistant Secretary New and Appointment Clerk Butler were matters of public comment, and frequently led to ludicrous scenes. Appointments made in the department required to be countersigned by the Assistant Secretary after they left the appointment division. This led to endless bickering and quarrels. One day a laborer employed in the vaults of the Treasury applied to Mr. New to be detailed to do some work less trying to his health. He wanted to be transferred to the top story of the building, he said. As he was a protege of New, his request was granted without trouble, of course. New directed an order to be drawn and indorsed on the back:

"This man goes up stairs. John C. New, Assistant Secretary."

In due course of time the order reached the appointment division. Butler saw New's indorsement. That was enough. He at once sent for the man.

"You want to go up stairs?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you have seen the Assistant Secretary about it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I'll have something to say about this."

Before the astonished man could recover his breath Mr. Butler had put under Mr. New's indorsement the words:

"This man goes down stairs. J. B. Butler, Appointment Clerk."

The paper was sent back to the office of the Assistant Secretary. Mr. New looked with some surprise at Mr. Butler's order countermanding his own. Then he quietly drew his pen across it and once more wrote:

"This man goes up stairs. John C. New, Assistant Secretary."

Again the paper went back to the appointment division. Butler glanced at it for a moment, and again he wrote:

"This man goes down stairs. J. B. Butler, Appointment Clerk."

This harmless little game was kept up for some time, until the paper had been filled with Messrs. New and Butler's indorsements. Then, at last, these gentlemen thought it best to refer the matter to Secretary Folger. He listened calmly to the statements of the rivals, and after a few moments of reflection delivered the following judgment, worthy, surely, of a Solomon: "Gentlemen," he said, "I shall order the man to be employed on the elevator. This will be in the nature of a compromise. Half of his time there will be spent down stairs, the other half up stairs. The case is dismissed."—New York Tribune.

The Sexes in a Russian Province.

In the Russian province of Courland etiquette is excessively rigorous. Stiff bows form the nearest approach to cordiality here permitted between young unmarried people of opposite sexes. Very few opportunities are afforded them of being better acquainted. Even at dancing parties the gentleman is supposed to quit his partner immediately on the conclusion of a polka or waltz. Girls are kept under constant supervision from the moment of birth to that of betrothal. Unmarried ladies are not supposed to occupy the seat of honor on the sofa. Betrothal entirely changes all this formality into a really objectionable exhibition of sentiment. Billing and cooing, caresses, and endearments are indulged in in public without the least regard to delicacy and good taste.

SIR JOSEPH FAYRER, President of the British Medical Society, says that in every Himalayan village the native babies are kept asleep for hours, while their mothers are at work, by placing them in a trough and causing a stream of water to trickle on their heads. But the good old custom of smearing babies' fingers with molasses and then giving them a few hen's feathers to pick from one hand to another is not to be given up for any such Hindoo-heathen method as the above.

Marrying for Money.

I had a conversation with a very clever and attractive New York lady, who, among other misfortunes, was afflicted with $2,000,000. She said she would never marry, because she would not believe that any man wanted her for any other reason than her gold. "And what," I asked, "do you lose thereby? If a gentleman takes you because you are so pretty, the small pox, a fall from a horse, any accident, may destroy your beauty, and where will his love be if it is for that reason only he took you? If another one falls in love with you because you are so fresh, so young, so lively, time is safe to destroy that, and your hold on him is lost. But if he takes you for your money, you need only beware of dangerous speculations, and you will always keep the charm that brought him to your feet, and you have nothing to fear." "That is one way of looking at it," she said; and so completely did she embrace my opinion that barely a year after I received an invitation to her wedding with an English nobleman.—Temple Bar.

DROPSY
TREATED FREE.
DR. H. H. GREEN,
A Specialist for Eleven Years Past,
Has treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; uses vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.
Cures patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.
From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.
Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of my treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing, cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Send for 10 days' treatment; directions and terms free. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.
Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.
Epilepsy fits positively cured.
If order trial, send 7 cents in stamps to pay postage.

Around the County.

Boyne City.

From the Statesman.

It is stated on good authority that Boyne City will have a railroad within a year.

The bridge over Boyne River near the Pine Lake house will soon undergo considerable repairs. A new footbridge also is to be built there.

Mrs. Chas. Shepard was severely injured by a fall on the sidewalk last Friday. Mrs. Edwards, her mother, came from Charlevoix Saturday morning to see her.

A rara avis was recently found in the woods near Boyne City by C. Schaub. It presents the aspect of an owl of some species and is on exhibition at W. J. Lewis' meat market.

The United States Hotel has a new proprietor. Mr. Frank Shaubut of Charlevoix has taken possession and will henceforth serve up the good dinners. He is well known as a successful caterer to the public appetite.

At the Statesman office may be seen a sample of the kind of potato that is grown in this county. It was raised by Israel Mackebee, and weighed four pounds when dug, which was only one of twenty five that came out of the same hill, the smallest weighing ¼ of a pound. Who can beat it?

In addition to the large quantity of lumber, etc., that has been shipped from Boyne City this season the following shipment of wood and bark has been made: C. C. Batchellor; wood, 200 cords, bark, 150 cords, W. J. Lewis, wood, 127 cords, bark, 347 cords; J. C. Schaub, wood, 1,747 cords, bark, 1,200 cords; R. R. Perkins & Co. wood, 2,100 cords, bark, 500 cords; also 1,200 cedar posts and ties, making 4,174 cords of wood and 2,174 cords of bark

Burgess.

As Wm. Baker was backing his wagon out of the barn by hand last Saturday, the wheel struck against a post and the tongue of the wagon came around and struck him in the side with such force as to throw him down and cut the back of his head severely.

Four new school houses are to be built in Hayes at a probable cost of $500 each.

The foundation for the school house in district No. 2 is finished. The work was done by Frank Kane.

Richard Cooper, who has been sailing, has got enough of the "briny" for this fall.

We hear that Rev. D. H. Pierce is appointed to preach in the Elmira district.

There is quite a dissatisfaction in district No. 2 on the location of the school house.

Liquor Traffic.

I will tell you my idea of the liquor traffic very briefly. God forgive me, I do not speak of it boastingly, for my sin is ever before me; seven years of my life were a dark blank. I know what the burning appetite for stimulant is; I know all about it, and I have sat by the dying bedside of drunkards; I have held their hands in mine; I have tried to lead them at the last gasp to the Saviour who never turned any away that came to him and yet, in the light of my own experience and the experience of others that I have received through my observation, I could say, "Father in heaven, if it be Thy will that man shall suffer, whatever seemth good in Thy sight of temporal evil, impose it on me; let the bread of affliction be given to me to eat; take from me the friends of my old age, let the hut of poverty be my dwelling place; let the wasting hand of disease be laid upon me; let me walk in the whirlwind, live in the storm; let the passing away of my welfare be like the flowing of a stream, and the shouts of my enemies like rain on the waters; when I speak good let evil come on me—do all this, but save me, merciful God, save me from the bed of a drunkard! And yet, as I shall answer to Thee in the day of judgment, I had rather be the veriest sot that ever reeled through the streets than I would be the man who sold him his liquor for a month." [Applause.] I think it is the most awful business that a man can possibly engage in. There is no good in it. How much benefit is it to a town that a man shall start a saloon? I wish Mr. Bowen, when he gives the next grand entertainment, would invite some of the liquor-sellers of Connecticut to come here and show the benefits of their business to this people. Let them bring a few specimens of their work. They can't do it. The raw material is always worth more than the manufactured article; always.

As a boy said: "I know so-and-so's saloon is finished." "How do you know it?" "I saw a fellow coming out of it drunk." A liquor-seller was very angry with a boy who, when he saw a drunken man had fallen down in front or a saloon, said, "Mister, your sign has fell down." There was in Connecticut, I think, a man named Solomon Camp, who put up a sign "S Camp's." The painter forgot to put the dot in after the intial S, and everybody read it "Scamp's tavern." It nearly broke up his business; he had to have a dot put in; but that didn't do, as the letters were too close together, and he had to have a new sign painted with wider spacing and the dot in. Let them show the benefits that are derived from the sale of intoxicating liquor in this country. I hate it because we have no redress. There is not a mother here that has any redress. A woman went into a grog-shop—and I give you the facts that I can prove—to plead with the liquor-seller not to give her husband any more liquor. He took a tumbler of dirty water and threw its contents in her face. She told her boy, and he thrashed that liquor-seller so he was on his back several days. Then the liquor-seller prosecuted the boy for assault and battery and got the damages. They tried to prosecute him for throwing water in the woman's face. They failed, because she was intruding on his premises. There is not a liquor-seller that can't sell your husband a drink, and you may plead with him if you will. You talk about moral suasion. Make it your own case. A young man once said to me: "I believe in moral suasion. I believe we have no right to attack these men." I told him a little fact that occurred, and I asked him: "Suppose that was your mother that was kicked out of the rum-shop when she came to plead with Mr. Leonard not to give her boy drink, and when he made her little boy nine or ten years old drunk and sent him home out of spite, because she tried to prevent his selling liquor to her boy, what would you do?" He said: "I would shoot him as I would a woodchuck." I said; I would not. I believe in the simple way. I believe in the annihilation of the traffic intoxicating liquor; and the sooner we get rid of it the better."—From John B. Gough's Fourth of July Speech at Woodstock, Conn.

Life is a terrible problem. With its convictions of duty on one hand, and its natural desires on the other, that are to make or mar the future happiness of the soul. It seems a fearful thing to live or attempt to live this life. And ever since the struggle began and the two powers good and evil have been seeking to rule the soul, life has been one long battle. While christianity, that inward light from above, has sought to raise and redeem from death by all the sweet means within her power, and had one vice been kept from earth, the wound of the serpent in the garden of Eden might have seemed curable, but the cup of ardent spirits having come in to the world, the sorrows of man seem beyond remedy. But, with the senses steeped in this innocent cup of wine, the most repulsive vice assumes seductive forms, siren voices whisper in the ear, slumber steals on while the foe binds stronger and stronger his new ropes which no Sampson's strength can break, and thus leads into captivity the bravest and fairest in the land. Grandly all commence this battle of life; our young men are strong and fair to see as were the athletes of Greece and Rome or those old warrior heroes whom Leonidas led forth to battle, nay, with their fine physical development, do they not surpass those old warriors sleeping in Olympian dust? Aye, if it were not for one thing, and that the sad ravages of intemperance, which attacks at one time the money, the body, and the brain of its victim. It leaves nothing untouched, but like the "stream of melted lava rolling down the mountain side into a tropical valley, scorches all things and leaves not a leaf of green, a drop of water or dew, but transforms a paradise into an iron rock." So the passion for strong drink blights the young man's world and leaves nothing but the dust and ashes of former hopes which were as high as the sun, and that glorious strength which dared the world and in which he so rejoiced yesterday, to-day are all gone, and all over the world there is the desolate home, the weary tears and mothers who looked so fondly on their sons, for whom they toiled and sacrificed, and whose hopes for their success were the very breath of life, they too have only dust and ashes. Ah, is it any wonder that an invisible host, terrible as an army with banners, is rising, terrible in its strength, whose every soul has tasted the bitterness of death through the scourge of strong drink, and who with deathless purpose, with breast bared to the foe, are marching on, determined to sweep from the face of the earth this dragon of our woes.

Michigan State Pharmaceutical Association.

This association, of which our townsman G. W. Crouter was president during the past year, held its annual session in Detroit last week. We have not room for even a synopsis of its work, beyond what may be gleaned from the following brief abstract of President Crouter's address as published in the daily Free Press:

When two years ago a comparatively few earnest men met at Lansing and determined upon organizing a State Pharmaceutical Association, their most sanguine expectations fell far short of the magnificent success of this society and the brilliant achievement so soon to be recorded in the statute book of the State.

For years a state pharmacy law was thought of only as a dim possibility. The futile efforts made by our lamented namesake and predecessor, in former years, only served to make the prospects of success more shadowy and remote. But then came a time when the druggists of Michigan were aroused from their lethargy. Organization had secured legislation in many other states—Michigan was being made the receptacle for the sweepings of her more fortunate neighbors. Pharmacy was being degraded by the contact. Education without regulative legislation was esteemed as good enough for visionary enthusiasts, but hardly worth the serious attention of a practical man of business. Professional competency was also a very desirable thing, but it was regarded as too expensive a luxury for busy, money making druggists, who found that it rarely yielded a satisfactory cash equivalent.

The situation excited the apprehensions of all interested in the welfare of pharmacy in Michigan. Our beloved state, they declared, shall not be the refuge of charlatans and incompetents of other states. Michigan must maintain her high educational rank in the army of states and pharmacy shall be honored with the dignity of legal recognition and protection. The forces of progress were duly marshaled and after a stubbornly contested fight in the legislature, the victory was won by the enactment of a law which for completeness, strength and efficiency will, we may believe, be found to be without an equal in the country.

Though the bill passed through a tremendous fire but a single section was materially injured and this section, though it permits great latitude to general dealers in the sale of certain drugs, is emphatic against any person calling himself a pharmacist or dispensing a prescription unless he be actually registered. This is the essence of the legislation demanded and with it, the law cannot be regarded otherwise than as a triumph for progressive pharmacy.

The president continuing with his address, recommended a legal existence for the association at as early a day as possible; that article 3 of the by-laws be changed to read, "The initiation fee shall be $1, which shall be paid to the Secretary;" that the Michigan association send delegates to the other states' Pharmacential Associations, particularly those of Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana; that members of the Michigan Association, so far as possible endeavor to carefully discriminate in selecting young men to learn the business; that only such persons as have enjoyed at least the advantages of a common school education be admitted, and that persons having had the advantage of studying the higher branches be given the preference in the employment of apprentices. Studying in the store, on the part of apprentices, during spare hours should be encouraged, and employers should lend them all possible help and encouragement and it is believed that any moderate expenditure the employer may go to in providing works on pharmacy will be appreciated.

The school of Pharmacy at Ann Arbor was highly praised and the attention of the members of the association was called to the possibility of self-instruction at home by means of a course of printed lectures alternating with written recitations published and mailed with much success by the National Institute of Pharmacy, Chicago. The desirability of adopting a national formulary, containing unofficial formulas for the most common pharmaceutical preparations was favored by the President in his address and he recommended the appointment of a committee of five, to report to the National Pharmaceutical Association on the subject. The tax on alcohol was classed as an insult to respectable pharmacists and in opposition to every principle of equity and right. The suggestion was made that the association appoint a committee to co-operate with the committee of the National Druggists' Association having the matter in charge. The practice of wholesale druggists selling drugs at retail was very emphatically opposed by the President, after which he concluded his address by thanking the association for the honor they conferred upon him by electing him their President and for the hearty support they had given him during his administration.

The Wives of English Soldiers.

The general reader knows more, probably, about the solar system than about the details of regimental life; though he is always ready to listen to a tale of wrong like that which was lately told about soldiers' wives. It will be news to many that a soldier cannot lawfully get married, or is not recognized as lawfully married, until he has completed six years' service and is also the possessor of a good conduct badge. Having served the allotted period, leave has to be obtained from the commanding officer of the regiment; but as a rule permission is granted readily enough. But even then it may be some time before the newly-elected benedict can avail himself of the privileges of "free quarters."

The proportion of married men for whom accommodation is provided by Government is about 10 per cent of the total strength of the regiment, and when a man has obtained the necessary permission to enter the holy estate it may happen that the "married strength" of the regiment is already above the limit, in which case he has to support his wife and self on his regimental pay and rations. But he is allowed the privilege of "living out of mess"; that is to say, instead of taking his meals in barracks with the other men he is permitted to draw his rations and do his best to make three-quarters of a pound of meat per diem and one pound of bread till two months instead of one. How the men contrive to make both ends meet, under such circumstances is a mystery; but they do, and as a rule the married men of a regiment contrive to keep up a better kit than their unencumbered companions. Of course there are exceptions; and many an officer will be able to call to mind some startling effects encountered in his subaltern days on the occasions of "kit inspection"—as when what to all intents and purposes seemed to be a neatly folded linen shirt or flannel vest has proved on closer inspection to be the remains of an article of female attire not usually worn by the male sex.

When once a married man has become enrolled on the "strength," his position is materially improved. He has his single room in barracks, with coal, gas, and wood free; his wife gets a share of the regimental washing, and if she is a good laundress frequently has some of the mess and officers' linen to wash. By the practice of strict economy a soldier's wife can, under such conditions, enjoy a more comfortable existence than if she is mated to an agricultural laborer or mechanic. But even under the most favorable conditions it is hard to lay by for a rainy day; and we may be sure that many of the wives of the brave fellows who have lately set out for the Soudan had not more than a few shillings to make a fresh start with. In civil life a thrifty housewife will endeavor to lay by a small store against bad times occasioned by slackness of work, when the bread-winner may, through force of circumstance, be compelled to endure a spell of enforced idleness; but with the soldier's wife this necessity is not apparent. So long as her husband remains in the service (ill or well) so long will he receive a certain amount of daily pay; and although the contingency of his services being required abroad may at times present itself to her mind, the possibility of such an event is usually overlooked until it arrives to find her quite unprepared.

Putting aside the men married "with leave," there are in nearly every regiment a large proportion of men who have got married without the necessary permit to do so. Although they do not actually offend against military law, their status as married men cannot be recognized by the authorities. The man who marries without sanction is to all practical intents and purposes looked upon as single. He is compelled to continue to mess with his comrades in barracks, although as a rule a certain amount of laxity is observed in allowing leave to sleep out of barracks. When a regiment moves from one station to another the wives of such men often find it a matter of extreme difficulty to scrape together the necessary funds for the railway journey; although, to their credit be it said, they as a rule do manage to solve this difficult problem some way or other, and before their husbands have fairly settled down in their new quarters they are generally located in a lodging within easy distance of the barrack gate.

Incredible as it may seem, not very many years ago as many as three or four soldiers' families had to accommodate themselves in a single room in barracks, the only division being curtains stretched across. After a time the authorities awoke to the fact that this state of things was not quite what it should be; and a single room to each couple has long been the order of the day.

Powdered rice is said to have a great effect in stopping bleeding from fresh wounds. The rice powder is sprinkled upon it, which is then applied as a compress.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Five residents of Buffalo, N. Y., most of whom are connected with a branch of the Standard Oil Company, have been indicted for conspiracy to burn the lubricating oil works at that city.

The performing elephant Empress, now in winter quarters at Philadelphia, killed her third man last week, striking him twice with her trunk, crushing his chest with a foot, and disemboweling him with a tusk. The victim was a watchman named Robert R. White.

A boat containing W. S. Neale, Beckie and Annie Neale (sisters), and Mary Neale, their cousin, sank near Millrons Dam, Pa., the three girls, who were on their way to church, being drowned. The young man escaped, after a terrible struggle with his sinking relatives.

Natural gas is being rapidly substituted for coal at Pittsburgh. Another rich strike has been made near the city.

The total exports of produce from New York for the last week are estimated at $6,475,079.

The demand for iron and steel at Philadelphia during the week was less active, but prices were firmly held. Nails are in short supply, and have advanced to $2.40 to 2.50.

Officers of the Secret Service raided a camp of eleven counterfeiters in Clarion County, Pennsylvania, capturing six of them, who were taken to Pittsburgh and committed for trial. The others escaped into the woods. The gang has been extensively engaged in manufacturing and circulating spurious silver dollars.

James Gilbert Thorpe, of Eau Claire, Wis., and Miss Annie Longfellow, daughter of the poet, were married at the Longfellow mansion, Cambridge, Mass.

After the wedding feast of Harry S. Baltin, of Chicago, and Harriet R. Watson, at Honesdale, Pa., thirty of the guests were taken violently ill, with indications of poisoning. The physicians who attended the patients, said that potted ham caused the trouble. At last reports no fatal results were anticipated.

WESTERN.

At Chico, Cal., wheat was burned in two houses valued at $125,000.

For the first nine months of 1885 there were 2,315 building permits issued in Chicago, representing an expenditure of $13,770,130. Over three-fifths were for residence property.

Gould promises the people of St. Louis a new union depot when satisfactory arrangements for the Iron Mountain Road shall have been made.

The net earnings of the Central Pacific for July were $875,882—an increase of $153,291 over the corresponding month of last year.

In a fight with gloves, at Leadville, between Burke and Clow, the latter the Colorado champion, the result was a draw. The former had agreed to knock the latter out in four rounds, and not only failed but was very severely punished.

Fifteen horses belonging to A. H. Trimian were killed under the direction of the State Live Stock Commission at Bushnell, Ill. Four of them had the glanders, and the others had been exposed to the contagion. It is thought that the disease is now stamped out, so far as Illinois is concerned.

W. M. Leeper, ex-candidate for County Treasurer, made an attack on Col. D. R. Anthony, of the Leavenworth Times, striking him with his fist, and attempting to strike a second time with a whiffletree, but the interference of a bystander averted what might have been a fatal blow.

The body of a young Presbyterian minister, the Rev. T. Heatherly, of Nashville, Tenn., was found on the roadside in the Honston (Mo.) section, one of his hands grasping a discharged pistol. It is supposed that he committed suicide.

The town of Lincoln, Neb., has voted $50,000 in bonds to aid in the extension of the Missouri Pacific to that point.

A Chinese laundry at Oakland, Cal., burned, five inmates perishing in the flames.

H. W. Shaw, known to fame as "Josh Billings," died at Monterey, Cal., of apoplexy.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has decided that a wife is entitled to sue for alimony, even though the husband had been granted a decree of divorce.

SOUTHERN.

Charles Wright and Jasper Owens fought a duel with knives in a cotton-field in Clark County, Arkansas, the latter being mortally wounded. Wright, who is well connected, gave himself into custody.

Last March a press association sent out an item to the effect that —— Dixon, tax collector of Blount County, Alabama, in attempting to rob his own house at night, had been shot and killed by his wife. The Chattanooga Times copied the paragraph from another paper, and Dixon sued for libel, the jury at Chattanooga last week returning a verdict of $5 damages, the small amount being owing to Judge Key's favorable ruling on the Times' construction of the law of libel. Dixon intends to prosecute every paper that published the item.

A reign of terror exists in portions of Iberville Parish, Louisiana, resulting from a neighborhood feud of several years' standing. Two men have been dangerously wounded, and several others, both black and white, have been beaten nearly to death by masked men. It is reported that several of the miscreants have been arrested.

Excitement has been caused in Louisville by the exposure of an alleged scheme, to which the Mayor and other municipal officers are said to be parties, to rush an ordinance through the Council giving a subsidy of $1,000,000 to the Louisville Southern Railroad, without submitting the question to a popular vote or complying with the general charter.

Gen. William Howard Irvin, a veteran officer of two wars, has become hopelessly deranged, and has been placed in an asylum at Louisville.

WASHINGTON.

The items of "ginger ale," "lemonade," and "newspapers" were stricken from the expense account of the civil-service commission by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Only five complaints regarding the foreign mail service have been lodged with the postoffice department since the American steamship lines refused to carry the mails at the rates offered, about sixty days ago.

The Postmaster General has decided that guarantee associations can not become sureties on the official bonds of postmasters.

Payment of the claim of the State of Colorado for one-half the cost of taking the semi-decennial census has been withheld by the first comptroller of the Treasury on the ground that the State is indebted to the United States in a larger amount on account of the direct tax of August 5, 1861. In auditing the claim of Dakota Territory a deduction has been made on similar grounds.

Over $600,000 has been pledged for the establishment of a Catholic university at Washington City, and the projectors expect to have $1,000,000 secured by Jan. 1. Work on the buildings will begin within a few weeks.

The Postmaster General has made a ruling to the effect that in cases where railroad companies carrying the mail are obliged to deliver it into and receive it from postoffices (which requirement applies to stations where the postoffice is within eighty rods of the stopping-place of the train) the employes carrying the mails between the station and office are not employes in the postal service, and need not be sworn in. The department, however, requires the railroad company to employ for this purpose persons over the age of 16 years and of suitable intelligence and character, and postmasters are directed to report any violations of this requirement.

POLITICAL.

On the 1st of December there will be nearly one hundred vacancies in Presidential postoffices, caused by resignations and the expiration of commissions.

It is rumored at Washington that Charles H. Column, a Massachusetts mugwump, will succeed Dorman B. Eaton as Civil Service Commissioner.

The bill passed by the last Michigan Legislature, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, has been held unconstitutional by a Detroit Judge.

Richard S. Dement, of Illinois, has been appointed Surveyor General of the Territory of Utah; John B. Webb Register of the Land Office at La Crosse, Wis.; and Lloyd T. Boyd, Receiver of Public Moneys at Bayfield, Wis. The President has appointed the following Postmasters, the commissions of their predecessors having expired:

Daniel Stewart at Walla Walla, W. T.; Lucius M. Thomas at Watertown, D. T.; Charles A. Burke at Malone, N. Y.; Othneil Beeson at Caldwell, Kas.; Charles Hardesty at Marion, Kas.; Hattie P. Blair at Great Bend, Kas.; G. W. Jarres, San Diego, Cal.; William H. Newcomb, Pana, Ill.; Elijah T. Eads at Knoxville, Ill.; George E. Blackstone, Paxton, Ill.; Samuel W. Peacock at Lancaster, Ky.; W. W. Wathen at Lebanon, Ky.; William McFarlan at Dowlington, Pa.; James E. Crossland at Aiken, S. C.; Charles J. Sirnck at Shakerstee, Minn.; C. B. Pardon at Madison, N. J.; Christian Hilleverdicht at Elmhurst, Ill.; P. C. Bude at Perry, Iowa; E. Wilson at David City, Neb.; John T. Wrinkle at Plattsburgh, Mo.; David M. Bossert at Jeffersoit, Iowa; T. M. Shelton at Windsor, Mo.; H. F. Tallman at Lamark, Ill.; C. C. Guilloux at New Iberia, La.; Thomas H. Lantry at Algona, Iowa; Andrew J. Shakespeare at Kalamazoo, Mich.; Michael D. Baker at Uniontown, Pa.; Miss Candera Clark at Blair, Neb.

The following Postmasters have also been appointed by the President:

John Snoddy at Big Springs, Texas, office become Presidential; John Ryan, at Anaconda, Montana, office become Presidential; J. F. Rayen at Sandy Lake, Pa., office become Presidential; G. W. Hill at Jewell, Kan., office become Presidential; R. S. Wagner at Bangor, Pa., office become Presidential; Jas. G. Hanson at Edensburg, Pa., vice Samuel James, suspended; Patrick J. Rogers at Piedmont, W. Va., vice George T. Gosborn, suspended; Henry F. Taylor at Fulton, Ky., vice John F. Hall, suspended.

The official figures of the Indianapolis municipal election are as follows: Mayor—Denny, Republican, 9,093; Cottrell, Democrat, 9,033. For Clerk—Brenning, Republican, 9,089; Shields, Democrat, 9,202. The Prohibition vote was 115, and the Greenback 37. The Republicans have one majority in the Council, and the Board of Aldermen is a tie. At the charter election in Newark, N. J., Mayor Haynes, Democrat, was re-elected by 351 majority. The Republicans carry all the other city offices, and elect nine out of fifteen Aldermen, the same number of School Commissioners, and eight out of fifteen chosen freeholders.

The municipal election in Chattanooga, Tenn., was closely contested. The entire Republican ticket was elected by a reduced majority.

The Nebraska Republican State Convention met at Lincoln on the 14th inst. Amasa Cobb was renominated for the Supreme Bench. For Regents of the University, Leavitt Burnham and Charles H. Gere were nominated. Both now hold the same positions. The platform denounces the administration and the Democratic party, insists on a protective tariff, and refuses to submit the prohibition question.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The race for the base-ball championship of America this year has been the most exciting within the history of the League. After a most stubborn contest the Chicago Club wins the coveted pennant by the narrow margin of two games over her great rival, the New York Club. The percentage of the victors was .771, which has only been excelled twice—in 1876 and 1880—and then by themselves, and they came out of the contest as second both in batting and fielding, and with 145 more runs to their credit than any of their competitors. The following table shows the number of games won and lost during the season by the eight contesting clubs:

CLUBS.	Chicago.	New York.	Philadelphia	Providence.	Boston.	Detroit.	Buffalo.	St. Louis.	Games won.
Chicago	...	6	11	11	14	15	16	14	87
New York	10	...	11	12	13	12	15	12	85
Philadelphia	5	5	...	8	9	9	11	9	56
Providence	5	4	7	...	7	9	12	8	52
Boston	2	3	7	9	...	8	10	8	46
Detroit	1	4	7	6	9	...	8	9	41
Buffalo	0	1	5	3	6	11	...	12	38
St. Louis	2	4	6	8	8	4	4	...	36
Games lost	25	27	51	57	66	67	73	72	...

The St. Louis Club captures the American Association pennant, the record standing as follows:

CLUBS.	St. Louis.	Cincinnati.	Pittsburg.	Athletic.	Louisville.	Brooklyn.	Metropolitan.	Baltimore.	Games won.
St. Louis	...	10	10	12	9	12	12	14	79

Several of Ralph Waldo Emerson's letters to Carlyle have been stolen from the late residence of the former at Concord, Mass.

The Knights of Honor have brought suit at Louisville, Ky., against Col. Robert S. Breckenridge, late Supreme Treasurer, for $33,000. The plaintiff charges that Breckenridge, as Supreme Treasurer, has failed and refused to account for $33,000 since the expiration of his term of office.

The New York Produce Exchange estimates the visible supply of wheat at 41,094,812 bushels, and of corn at 5,195,931 bushels.

Fire at Fredericton, New Brunswick, destroyed $100,000 worth of property, and rendered thirteen families homeless.

The new mail service between San Francisco and Australia and New Zealand will begin November 21, at terms much more favorable to the Government than those refused by the Pacific Mail Company.

A warning to Postmasters is contained in the following, which is sent out by wire from the national capital:

Many Postmasters have come to grief through disregard of the postal regulation which requires Postmasters remitting surplus money-order funds to depositories in registered packages to be able, in every case, to prove by at least one disinterested witness that the money was actually inclosed in the proper registered package, properly addressed, locked in the mail, and dispatched. If the postmaster fails to comply with those requirements he is compelled to make good the money if it is lost or stolen. Many postmasters finding it inconvenient to have a witness of the kind, have, in cases of loss or thefts, made claims for credit which have been disallowed, the Postmaster General holding that the precautions above noted are necessary, not only to establish the fact that the money was actually remitted, but to secure proof necessary for the conviction of those persons charged with its theft.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent.

At the annual meeting of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New York, Colonel R. C. Clowry, of Chicago, was elected a Director. The profits for the year reached $7,500,921, and there was paid in dividends $4,500,325.

FOREIGN.

The fact that Mr. Parnell in his recent Wicklow speech praised Mr. Gladstone is accepted in England as evidence that there is an understanding between the two, and that Mr. Gladstone may support the former in some of his plans.

The outcome of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's mission to Constantinople is the appointment of a joint commission of twelve members, six English and six Turkish, to administer the affairs of Egypt until they are in a satisfactory condition, when the British occupation will cease. As Egyptian affairs could not possibly be any worse than they are now, it is evident that the joint commission will have a long lease of power.

A special dispatch from Washington to the New York Times says:

There is a rumor here that some of the Republican Senators have formed a sort of a combination to obtain complete information concerning the removals and appointments which the President has made, with a view to intelligent action when the appointments come before the Senate for confirmation. As an instance of how this matter is being handled, it is reported that a discharged Treasury employe of some prominence has just returned from the West with the information that Senator Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, is gathering the facts concerning the removal of Collector Jesse Spalding, and will take charge of the matter of the confirmation of Seeberger, Mr Spalding's successor, when it comes before the Senate. The employe in question is looked upon as arranged for by the combination.

The obsequies of Cardinal McCloskey in the grand cathedral at New York were of the most impressive character. Five thousand persons were admitted to the building, and the adjacent squares were blocked with carriages. The Papal Zouaves were in position about the catafalco. Two hundred priests and boys chanted the office of the dead, and a choir of one hundred voices chanted a requiem mass. Archbishop Corrigan celebrated pontifical mass, and Archbishop Gibbons preached the funeral sermon. The remains were deposited in the crypt beside those of Archbishop Hughes.

There are 100 cases of diphtheria and typhoid fever at Kittanning, Pa., and fifteen deaths from these diseases have occurred within ten days. In many instances whole families have been stricken down.

Last week the deaths from small-pox at Montreal numbered 280, 235 of whom were French-Canadians.

Since 1880 the assisted immigration scheme has cost Canada $1,500,000.

A one-armed man, giving the name of Charles Bennington, broke a window in a jewelry store at Louisville, about midnight, and waited for a policeman, to whom he said that he desired a home in the penitentiary for a few years, having suffered sufficiently from hunger.

The Turkish Government has reminded the great powers that the armament of Greece is a menace to peace. The Porte has purchased 1,500 cart-horses in Hungary, to be delivered at once.

The Nebraska Democratic State Convention convened at Lincoln Oct. 15. Frank Martin was nominated for Supreme Judge, and H. R. Livingstone and John F. Zolin for Regents of the State University. The platform demands the construction of a navy equal to any in the world, and a complete system of coast defenses; opposes the further coinage of silver, and demands the exclusion of the Chinese.

In relation to the Ohio election, a Cincinnati dispatch of Oct. 15 says:

While there is no material change on the State ticket, there is more excitement over the Legislature than there was last fall over the doubtful returns on Cleveland and Blaine. Unofficial returns from about all the State and estimates on the few remaining precincts put Foraker's plurality at over 13,000. It will be a little over 20,000 on the rest of the Republican State ticket. The Democrats are claiming their entire legislative ticket, and it will require the official count to settle it. The vote in the two precincts of the Ninth Ward whose counting was not finished last night has been counted, and the result on Governor in Hamilton County, with one country precinct missing, which in 1881 gave 17 Republican majority, stands thus: Governor Hoadly, Democrat, 33,675; Foraker, Republican, 33,52; Leonard, Prohibition, 1,020; Hoadly's plurality, 155.

The President has made the following appointments:

Calvin Page, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of New Hampshire; D. J. Loughlin, to be Special Examiner of Drugs, Medicines, and Chemicals for the District of Philadelphia; C. Meyer Zulick, of Arizona, to be Governor of Arizona, vice Frederick A. Tritle, resigned. To be United States consuls: Thomas E. Jernigan, of North Carolina at Hiogo, Japan; Edward D. Gunn, of Texas, at Piedras Negras, Mexico; Frank W. Roberts, of Maine, at Coaticooke, Canada; Charles H. Mills, of Maryland, at Managua, Nicaragua; Joseph H. Hoff, of New Jersey, at Vera Cruz, Mexico. To be Indian Agent: James McLaughlin, of Dakota, for the Standing Rock Agency, in Dakota; David S. Ingram, to be collector of customs at Gloucester, Massachusetts; John H. S. Frink, to be United States Attorney for the District of New Hampshire. Ez a W. Miller, to be receiver of public moneys at Huron, Dakota. John McFarland, to be register of land office at Huron, Dakota. Charles H. Call, to be collector of customs for the district of Superior, Mich.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

Owosso's gun-works are now in full operation.

Severe frosts have done much damage in Emmet County.

Owosso is to have a new bank, with a capital of $200,000.

Marshall Catholics have formed a Catholic Union, to be incorporated for benevolent purposes.

Martin Glass, 30 years old, threw himself in front of a train in Saginaw City, and was killed. He was insane.

Manistique is to have a new Catholic church, which will be the largest and handsomest church building in the place.

Mrs. Hannah Perrine, who died recently at Battle Creek, aged 69, left 35 brothers whose ages aggregate 375 years.

A sister of the famous Indian Chief, Ignatius Petoskey, who died last spring, is now at Harbor Springs, and claims to be 115 years of age.

A private banker at Vulcan, known the names of Gould and Bisset, has disappeared, leaving depositors in the lurch to the extent of $7,000.

The Menominee River Boom Company expect the product handled this season will reach 300,000,000 feet, and that 15,000,000 feet will be carried over.

Miss Morris, who was first bridesmaid at Mlle. Nevada's wedding in Paris, is a native of East Saginaw and a daughter of the late L. R. Morris, of Detroit.

It is more than a year that the city of Detroit has gone without street signs, and the Free Press says it could much better have gone without its Aldermen.

There is a vacancy in the postoffice at Carleton. Miss Emily Bogel, postmistress, attended the skating-rink and was seized with illness while there. She was taken home and died two days later.

Thirty-five men are now employed at the Michigamme Mine, these being worked on the stock-pile chiefly. The force will be increased to about seventy men long, and the mine will be wrought steadily with that number of miners during the winter.

The East Saginaw Board of Water Commissioners has, during the past season, done good work in the way of laying water mains, and thus affording fire protection to portions of the city which have heretofore been inadequately protected. The pipe laid this season, aggregates over ten miles in length, and the material and labor will cost the Board in the neighborhood of $7,000 or $8,000.

Exploring for Copper Mines.

(Sherman Stevens, in Detroit Free Press.)

In 1847 I made two trips to Lake Superior in search of copper mines. A party of Detroit gentlemen had procured Government permits to locate ground for mining purposes, and John R. Grout and myself were employed to explore the copper region and locate them. Up to that time but little mining had been done. There was a military post at Copper Harbor, and on Keweenaw Point, near the mouth of Eagle River, a Boston company were opening a shaft, and near there a Pittsburg company were opening what they called the Cliff Mine. We landed from a lake schooner, the only one on the lake at Copper Harbor, and from that point made excursions into the interior in search of prospects. We spent a month in that vicinity, but could find no indications of copper except upon lands covered by permits of one or the other of these companies. We then started in birch bark canoes and a crew of Chippewa Indians and coasted along up the lake as far as the Porcupine Mountains, stopping for a day or two at the mouths of all the streams and searching diligently for any indications of copper. We saw in the Ontonagon country the big copper bowlder that Mr. Eldred afterward, at a heavy expense, brought down to Detroit, only to have it taken away from him by Governor Felch's property. This bowlder was the only exhibition of copper we found after leaving Keweenaw Point. We returned to Copper Harbor without having made a location, and there fell in with Col. Chas. Gratiot, who was the agent of the Boston company, who had located six sections. He offered to sell us some of them for $5,000. But we were not authorized to purchase a claim. The section he offered us adjoined the ground on which was the cliff vein, considered the banner mine of the country, and the course of the vein would carry us to the section he offered us in about 100 yards. We hired a Cornish miner and sunk some pits along the line of the vein and found some specimens of native copper, and came to the conclusion it was a valuable claim. I finally contracted with Colonel Gratiot for the property, intending to offer it to the company who had sent us if they wanted it, and, if not, keep it on my own account.

On returning to Detroit we made out our report, stating our inability to discover any ground on which we could find evidence of copper sufficient to warrant the expenditure of money save the section I had bargained for. I told them that as we were in their employ this was theirs if they chose to take it. They concluded to take it and organized the North American Mining Company, of which Gurdon Williams was President and J. Bacon Superintendent. They issued 3,000 shares, and before any assessment was levied save for the purchase money the shares sold for from $10 to $25 each. My quota of stock was issued to me, and although I had great confidence in the ultimate value of it I was confident it would require heavy assessments before dividends could be made, and therefore parted with my stock while it was in good demand. Mr. Bacon went on to the ground and before testing the mine to any extent built a fair-sized village for superintendent and operatives and laborers to occupy. A large sum was expended at the mine, but I never heard of any dividends. Mr. Grout, my companion in exploring, continued to give his attention to the copper mines, and eventually erected smelting works near Detroit and accumulated a fortune.

THE OLD ROMAN SPEAKS.

John Sherman's Gory Garment Torn Into Shreds by Senator Thurman.

The Prosperity of the South Since the Exodus of the Carpet-Baggers.

[Toledo special.]

Ex-Senator Allen G. Thurman was greeted at Wheeler's Opera House to-night with a crowd that was only limited by the capacity of the house. He appeared in good voice, although frequently interrupted by coughing, and, after apologizing for writing his speech, read from a printed copy, frequently stopping to add an extemporaneous remark. He was listened to with the greatest attention.

Judge Thurman, on being introduced, began his speech by a reference to the Mount Gilead speech of Senator Sherman at the opening of the campaign, which, he said, was an indictment of the South and a revival of the charges of crime and outrage made in years gone by. He quoted the words of Garfield in opposition to the revival of sectional hatred, and said the last Presidential campaign was opened by the Republican candidate on the tariff as the chief issue, but before the campaign closed this was dropped, and the bloody shirt raised as the banner of certain Republican victory, but when the votes were counted the banner was found trailing in the dust. Particular stress was laid upon the sentiments of Grant that the passions of the war were at an end, and amazement expressed that a man speaking over his tomb should be so audacious as to say that there is no reconciliation; that the rebellion is not at an end; that the only effective way is to suppress it is again to send the boys in blue to the South.

Quoting from Senator Sherman's speech, the speaker, in reply thereto, said:

Now, it is impossible, as it seems to me, to misunderstand these utterances. They are either vain and empty declamation or disgusting bravado such as no man of the ability of Senator Sherman, or in his high station, could indulge in without disgrace, or they are his real sentiments, and mean, when thoroughly analyzed, that if the Republican party can not obtain power in any other way it shall obtain and hold it by the sword. I know that such an idea, if you do not reflect upon it, is calculated to excite your derision, but stop and reflect. If the great State of Ohio can be carried by such appeals to passion and prejudice as Sherman is making; if his weapons shall be sufficient to thrust from office the men whom, two years ago, you elected; if they shall hew the way to a fifth term in the Senate for their author they will become the creed of the Republican party in 1888, and the doctrine of hate will be strongly, if not permanently, established in the land.

Judge Thurman said the issue raised by Mr. Sherman is a dangerous one to the business and the prosperity of the American people, and the effort to blow into a flame the dying embers of civil strife should be frowned down by all loyal people. The speaker next proceeded to answer the arguments of Mr. Sherman concerning the grievous condition of the colored race in the South, claiming that they were now in the enjoyment of greater prosperity and greater civil rights than were ever enjoyed on this globe by an equal number of their race. He dated the prosperity of that section from 1875, when the Democrats came into control and radical rule and carpet-bag government ceased. He said:

At the end of ten years it can be safely affirmed that there is not an industry in the South but is more prosperous than it ever was in that region before, until now they in many lines of manufacture become the rivals of the mills of the Eastern States.

The speaker sketched briefly the numerous enterprises and developments of the South—the free schools for colored youth, the contentment which exists among the colored people, and the fact that they have not migrated to any of the old free States. All this was argued to prove that they were not discontented or murdered and deprived of their rights, as depicted by Sherman and other Republican orators. The colored man seemed to prefer living with the white men of the South, even though they be Democrats, to dwelling in the tents of the radicals, even though they be saints. It was argued that all these things could not be so if the negroes of the South were in the State of wretchedness which has been so often asserted. Judge Thurman here quoted at length, from the census of 1880, statistics in proof of the assertions which he made, the principal point being that the colored people are in the majority in but two of the Southern States—South Carolina and Mississippi—and he confined his argument to the census of these two States. The object in these figures was apparently to show the depression in all values in the periods covered by Republican rule, and the advance of all material interests under Democratic government. After disposing of a wilderness of figures in regard to the condition of South Carolina, the speaker summed up by saying:

In short, everything that feeds or clothes the negro in that State is within his reach to a degree that he never knew before. Now, once more I put it to you, could this be the case if South Carolina is in the lawless condition that the radical speakers represent it? No, my fellow citizens, this continued stream of prosperity under Democratic rule proves that it is beneficent, and the quiet that prevails in the State proves that the people of all classes there are contented under their government.

Judge Thurman denied the assumption of Senator Sherman that all the colored voters in the South are Republicans and would vote that ticket if not terrorized. He said:

If it were true, it would be a serious question as to whether a people so servile and cowardly are fit to exercise the elective franchise; but for one, I do not believe that they are so utterly debased. I believe that, having good reason for not voting the Republican ticket, they abstain from doing so in great numbers, or vote the Democratic ticket. I know very well that under the manipulation of freedmen's bureau agents, soon after the war, the colored people South were, to a great extent, drawn into Republican so-called union leagues, and were taught to believe that if the Democratic party succeeded they would be once more reduced to slavery. I do not deny that a great effect was produced upon their minds by these false pretenses, but we have good reason to believe that year by year these false impressions have grown weaker and weaker, and that they have to a degree learned the truth.

The speaker here quoted at length from a letter printed in the Cincinnati Enquirer of Sept. 21, from R. M. Davis, of Columbia, S. C., which gave a brief history of the carpet-bag government of that State. He hoped that every one in the audience would read the letter in full.

Judge Thurman then turned his attention to Mississippi, and read from the American Encyclopedia for 1875 the proceedings of the taxpayers' convention of that State held at Jackson on Jan. 4, 1875, when it was shown that the last levy, which in 1869 was ten cents on $100 of the assessed value of lands, was four times as great in 1871, eight and a half times as great in 1872, twelve and a half times as great in 1873, and fourteen times as great in 1874. At the same time the assessment of property greatly exceeded its market value and the public debt had been increased over $664,000 annually. The same extravagance was shown in the management of county affairs. He stated that when the Democrats carried Mississippi in 1875, it was said it had been done through terrorism and fraud. This was false, and he read a letter from United States Senator Revels to the President in support of his assertion. He premised its reading by stating that Revels was a colored minister and a Republican. He had served in the Senate with him and found him to be a man of education and respectability. He was a Republican, but his strongest wishes were for the prosperity and happines of the colored race. Mr. Thurman then read the letter, which, after stating that the blacks were naturally Republicans, said they had been imposed upon and robbed by a set of scoundrels and unprincipled adventurers until they had risen in their might and overthrown their oppressors. The letter closes as follows:

The bitterness and hate created by the late civil strife have, in my opinion, been obliterated in this State, except, perhaps, in some localities, and would have long since been entirely effaced were it not for some unprincipled men who would keep alive the bitterness of the past and inculcate a hatred between the races in order that they may aggrandize themselves by office and its emoluments to control my people, the effect of which is to degrade them. I give you my opinion that had our State administration adhered to Republican principles and stood by the platform upon which it was elected the State to-day would have been on the highway to prosperity. If the State administration had advanced patriotic measures, appointed only honest and competent men to office, and sought to restore confidence between the races, bloodshed would have been unknown, peace would have prevailed, Federal interference have been unthought of, and harmony, friendship, and mutual confidence would have taken the place of the bayonet.

"SUPPRESSED" VOTES.

A Republican Howl Answered—Figures That Do Not Lie—Read and Reflect.

[From the Washington Post.]

The Republican bloody-shirt organs, forced to file specifications in connection with their charge of suppressed Republican votes at the South, fall back upon the States of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and South Carolina, and ask why the Republican vote in these States was so much less in 1884 than in 1882. The following from the Chicago Tribune is a fair sample of such utterances:

Here are nearly 150,000 votes gone in four States alone. In Florida, also, at least 40 per cent. of the Republican vote was not polled in 1881. The votes suppressed in these five States would have elected Mr. Blaine President, and the minority in these States is enjoying the benefits of the electoral and Congressional representation which belongs to the voters who are not allowed to vote. That is the charge made, and all the sneers and denials in the world can not alter these tough figures and facts.

No comparison can properly be made between these different elections unless the Democratic as well as the Republican votes in the different years be taken into consideration. The following table will show the Democratic and Republican votes in the States mentioned in 1872, and at each of the succeeding Presidential elections:

DEMOCRATIC.	1872.	1876.	1880.	1884.
Alabama	79,444	102,901	90,687	92,975
Florida	15,427	24,304	27,954	31,599
Louisiana	57,029	87,923	65,310	62,540
Mississippi	47,288	112,173	75,760	76,540
South Carolina	22,681	91,806	112,312	69,764

REPUBLICAN.	1872.	1876.	1880.	1884.
Alabama	90,272	68,230	56,178	59,144
Florida	17,763	61,310	23,654	26,061
Louisiana	71,661	77,174	37,974	46,347
Mississippi	82,175	52,905	30,871	43,500
South Carolina	72,290	91,786	54,071	21,733

The year 1872 was a bad season for Democrats all over the country. When New Jersey, which never before and never since gave her electoral votes to a Republican, cast them that year for Grant, it is sure that Democrats suffered South and North alike. Delaware, Virginia, and North Carolina voted outright for Grant, while Georgia, Kentucky, and Maryland gave meager majorities for Greeley, that in the latter being less than one thousand votes. It is not a fair year for comparisons, but we will take it.

In 1870, two years before the Greeley campaign, Alabama elected a Democratic Governor and Legislature, and was in fact a Democratic State in 1872. Grant carried it, as he carried other States, because some Democrats voted for him and others would not support Greeley. In 1864, the tidal wave year the Democrats elected George S. Houston Governor, after a hard fight, and have since held the State. A glance at the vote at the last three Presidential elections shows that, while both parties have varied in their votes, neither party has lost or gained, the Democratic majority being practically the same. Since 1872, that exceptional year, the Republicans have lost 31,128 votes and the Democrats have gained 15,529 votes, a Democratic net gain of 44,657. From 1880 to 1884, while Alabama was standing still, the Republican net loss in Iowa was 25,916, and since 1872 it has been 40,574, while in Michigan the Republican majority has decreased from 60,100 in 1872 to 3,308 in 1884, a net Republican loss of 56,792. There have been no more changes in Alabama than in these two formerly strong Republican States.

Florida is easily disposed of. The population and votes are constantly increasing. Both parties polled more votes in 1884 than any previous year, and the Republicans made the larger increase from 1880. "Forty per cent of the Republican vote was not polled in 1884," says the Tribune. This would make the total Republican vote 46,720, and the total vote 78,489, when there were in 1880 only 61,699 male persons over twenty-one years of age in the State, according to the Federal census. There never was a more wanton exhibition of political falsification.

The Louisiana figures of 1872 are those doctored by the Returning Board. The State did not vote for Grant and she was not counted for Grant. From 1872 to 1876 the Republican vote increased in the State, as did the Democratic. After Hayes' recognition of Nicholls as Governor, the Republicans divided into factions and actually ran two electoral tickets in 1880. Naturally the vote of both parties fell off, the Republican more than the Democratic. In 1884 the Republicans were in better condition and gained 8,353 votes over 1880, while the Democrats lost 2,761, polling only 5,517 votes more than in 1872 and less than in 1876. There is nothing unusual in these Louisiana figures.

The published statement of John R. Lynch, the colored Chairman of the State Committee of Mississippi Republicans, shows that his party does no better because it will not make the necessary exertion, and yet the Republicans polled 8,655 more votes in 1881 than in 1880, while the Democratic increase was only 760, both parties falling off from 1876. It will be observed that the Republican vote in the exceptional year of 1872 was not so large as the Democratic vote of 1876. In 1872 only 129,463 votes were polled, and in 1884 but 120,010, though the males over 21 in 1880 were 238,532. There is no more reason for charging that the Republican vote in 1884 was suppressed than that the Democratic vote of 1872 was suppressed. General apathy governed the respective parties in both years.

South Carolina is like Louisiana in some respects and Mississippi in others. In the great contest of 1876 the Republicans polled more votes than in 1872—than they ever had. When Hayes recognized Gen. Hampton as Governor the bottom dropped out of the Republican party. They did the best they could under such adverse circumstances in 1880, but were defeated so thoroughly that last year they made no contest, nor did the Democrats. From 1880 to 1884 the Democratic decrease was 42,548, while the Republicans lost only 36,338. As the Republicans made no fight in 1884, so the Democrats made none in 1872. There was no more fraud in one year than in the other.

We have cited the States of Michigan and Iowa as showing the changes since 1872. Take Massachusetts. She gave in the last-mentioned year 74,212 Republican majority. In 1884 Blaine had ten votes less than Cleveland and Butler, and St. John had 9,925. Here is a net Republican loss of 84,147. Why not say something about this very remarkable change?

The percentage of those voting in 1884 to the whole number of persons over 21 was in Massachusetts 60.3, in Rhode Island 42.6 and in Vermont 62.1 per cent. In Alabama it was 59, in Florida 97, in Louisiana 50.4, in Mississippi 50.3, and in South Carolina, 44.5. Do not these Southern States make a very respectable showing beside these of three New England?

In other Southern States no fault is found. Says the Tribune:

In Maryland, Missouri, Kentucky Tennessee, North Carolina, Arkansas, Delaware, West Virginia, and even in Texas, there has been no well-organized attempt to suppress the Republican vote. Elections have been tolerably fair, and the result has been that the Republican vote has grown in those States, as it does everywhere where it is not suppressed by fraud or force."

Four of these states voted for Grant in 1872 and Cleveland in 1884. The majorities each year were as follows: Arkansas—Grant, 3,446; Cleveland, 22,032. Delaware—Grant, 939; Cleveland, 3,924. North Carolina—Grant, 24,675; Cleveland, 17,834. West Virginia—Grant, 2,864; Cleveland, 4,221. The other States gave majorities for Greeley and Cleveland, as follows: Kentucky—Greeley, 11,229; Cleveland, 34,859. Maryland—Greeley, 927; Cleveland, 11,118. Missouri—Greeley, 32,298; Cleveland, 33,039. Tennessee—Greeley, 8,736; Cleveland, 9,180. Texas—Greeley, 19,094; Cleveland, 191,978. In all these States, where elections are admitted by this bitter partisan authority to be "tolerably fair," the Democratic gains have been from 1872 to 1884 uniformly large, except in Tennessee, owing to local issues, and in Missouri, where there was a fusion between the Republicans and Greenbackers in 1884.

It is idle, of course, to reason with Republican organs and bloody-shirt howlers like Sherman and Foraker, but all fair-minded men will readily see that the Democratic gains in the South since 1872 are due to the same causes which brought about like changes all over the country and gave us a Democratic administration.

Post-Bellum Warriors.

What a fine lot of warriors the present leaders of the Republican party were in the time of the rebellion. James G. Blaine, Murat Halstead, John Sherman, George Frisbie Hoar, Whitelaw Reid, Joseph Medill, not one of these ever smelt powder, but the war returned no such veterans as they are today—with their mouths.—Omaha Herald.

OHIO.

The October Election Results in the Success of the Entire Republican Ticket.

The election in Ohio on Tuesday, Oct. 13, was for State and county officers, for 37 Senators, and 110 Representatives of the General Assembly, and upon four amendments to the constitution of the State changing elections from October to November, and one changing the term of office for Township Trustees. Gov. Hoadly was the Democratic candidate for re-election, J. B. Foraker the Republican candidate, and Rev. A. B. Leonard the Prohibition candidate for Governor. The election resulted in the success of the entire Republican ticket, as follows: Governor, J. B. Foraker; Lieutenant Governor, Gen. Kennedy; Treasurer, J. C. Brown; Attorney General, J. H. Koehler; Judge of Supreme Court, T. A. Minshall. The Republicans have also secured a majority of the Legislature, which insures the re-election of John Sherman to the United States Senate. The following returns were sent out by telegraph on the morning following the election:

CLEVELAND.—The whole State Republican ticket is elected by from 15,000 to 18,000 majority. The Legislature will be Republican on joint ballot, with a good working majority in both houses. The vote was heavy, and Republicans on the Western Reserve came out in full force. every one feeling it a duty to do all in his power to bring the country back to Republican rule. This result will secure the election of a Republican United States Senator, and the early enactment of a law regulating the liquor traffic. Another very probable result of the election will be to eliminate third-party prohibition from Ohio politics.

COLUMBUS.—Returns come in more slowly than usual, but there is unusual regularity in the ratio of Republican gains. With over four hundred of the precincts in, the Republican gains have run from 10 to 40 per precinct and averaged 17. At this rate the Republicans will overcome Hoadly's plurality of 12,000 in 1883 and give Foraker a plurality of 16,000. With the Prohibition vote kept up at its present rate it will reach 24,000, and the largest Prohibition gains are reported in Democratic precincts. It is, however, to be considered that the Republicans, with the better organization, got out their votes in the cities, while in the country, where the feeling seemed most in their favor, the vote was not so fully drawn out. A cold rain fell all day, with no more than a half-hour's cessation at any time. This did not seem to have helped the Democrats as heretofore. The Germans in all of the cities went strongly for the Republicans, and the colored men, to a considerable extent, pulled with the Democrats. Those figuring at Republican State headquarters claim 20,000 for the head of their ticket, and no less than 15,000 for the rest of it. The reports from the close counties and districts are in favor of the Republican legislative ticket to the extent that they will have fully forty majority in the lower house and ten in the Senate, but this is estimated on partial returns, especially as to the State Senators. Of the thirty-seven Senators the Republicans claim twenty-one.

CINCINNATI.—At the close of this report returns had been received from 776 of the 2,017 voting precincts in the State, which gave Foraker (Republican) a total vote 148,972; Hoadly (Democrat), 132,197; Leonard (Prohibitionist), 9,913; net Republican gain, 12,924. The remaining precincts in 1883 gave a Democratic majority of 10,912. In the places heard from we have nothing from Cleveland and nothing from the heavy Democratic wards in Cincinnati.

SMALL-POX.

Ravages of the Pestilence in Canada and Elsewhere — A Contagious Steamer at Detroit.

Miss Flora Campbell and Miss Bush, who have been patients in the small-pox hospital, make some very damaging charges against the system of treating small-pox patients in the hospital. They state that they had been put in beds which had been occupied by other patients, and that the sheets had not been changed; that some of the poor creatures in the ward in which they were had the disease very bad, and that the smell was dreadful; that attendants bade them good-night when they were most needed; that the first night Miss Bush was in the hospital she was given a bed without bed-clothes, and she was forced to lie there all night as she came into the building; that a little girl brought some food to them, carrying the bread in her bare hands, on which marks of small-pox were still fresh; that patients changed their own clothes as long as they were able, and, when they were not, those patients who could go about did it for them; that they were often ill during the night and wanted attendance when there were no nurses about; that during the night some patients would keep knocking against the wall or floor, but no one went near them to see what was wanted, and no assistance was given to those who were unable to get up; that patients had sometimes to wait for hours for a drink, and that those whose eyes were closed with the disease sometimes begged for a long time for a lotion that was used to wash them before they would get it; that the dirt, and filth, and vile smells were terrible; that as soon as the breath was out of a patient's body men came and sewed it up in a sheet, and instead of lifting it on a stretcher, let it fall to the floor with a thud that startled every one in the ward. These charges are being investigated. The officials of the hospital deny the truth of them, and Dr. Nolin has been requested to prepare an official statement for the medical health officer.

The medical health officer reports that there were forty-nine well-authenticated new cases of small-pox yesterday. The civic Board of Health now believe themselves to be on the track of nearly every case of small-pox. There is a great [illegible] for vaccinnation in the East End, owing to the manufacturers requiring their employés to be vaccinnated.

A Contagious Craft.

[Detroit telegram.]

The officers of the propeller Cuba called at the Custom House this forenoon for the necessary papers to allow the boat to receive coal here. When they said the propeller was from Montreal, Health Officer Wight was at once notified. He found the boat at the foot of Third street, while heavers were loading coal. The boat was loaded with iron for a Canadian port on Lake St. Clair. The crew of a dozen persons was at once arrested and the boat quarantined. The captain and purser under oath said that a sailor sick with small-pox had been put ashore in Chicago Sept. 18, and another at St. Catharine's a short time before, on the way to Chicago. The Cuba has since been to Montreal, and left that infected city Oct. 2. The coal-heavers were all examined and found to bear vaccination marks. The crew were vaccinated, and this afternoon ten pounds of sulphur were burned on the vessel. All communication with the boat is denied. As soon as possible the boat will be hustled off on its journey.

Scared Travelers.

[New York dispatch.]

A sick negro arrived at Albany [illegible] Montreal, and a physician [illegible] was suffering from the [illegible] symptoms of small-pox. A [illegible] made up and he was put on board [illegible] for New York this morning. After [illegible] train pulled out he announced the nature of his ailment and inside of a minute had the car all to himself. The car was detached from the train and side-tracked, but under orders was hitched to a later train, and with its solitary passenger hauled to this city, where the health officers declared that he was not suffering from the disease. He was, however, isolated. The arrival of his car at the Grand Central Depot caused a sensation.

Precautions at Buffalo.

[Buffalo special.]

In order to prevent the importation of small-pox from Canada to this city a quarantine has been established. The Sanitary Inspectors of the city, all of whom are physicians, will be stationed at Clifton, Ont., one Inspector being on duty each day in the week. The Customs Department has also been requested to hold any vessel coming from a port in Canada at which small-pox is raging.

In Quebec Villages.

[Quebec telegram.]

Seven cases of small-pox, with one death, are reported from Escoumins, an almost isolated village on the north shore of the St. Lawrence River, about one hundred and sixty miles below here. Three cases are reported at Lorette, and one in St. Sauvre.

An Important Move.

[Albany dispatch.]

Dr. Carroll, of the State Board of Health, to-day telegraphed the local Health Commissioners at Niagara Falls and Suspension Bridge not to allow any one to cross into this State without showing indications of recent vaccination.

Two Cases at Newport.

[Newport (R. I.) special.]

Two cases of small-pox were discovered here to-day. Stringent measures are being taken to prevent the disease from spreading.

ST. LOUIS' BIG EVENT.

A Brilliant Street Parade and a Grand Ball.

[St. Louis dispatch.]

The seventh annual parade of Veiled Prophets took place to-night, and was a very brilliant affair. It consisted of twenty-two floats, representing and illustrating about a dozen Arabian Nights stories, and was witnessed by an immense throng of people, who densely packed the sidewalks and every available foot of space along the line of march. The usual ball in connection with this affair is now in progress at the great hall of the Merchants' Exchange and is attended by the elite and fashion of the city. Over one hundred thousand strangers were in the city to-night.

Mr. Harris moved that hereafter 50 cents per day be allowed for board of prisoners. Carried.

Bill of Sheriff Berdan laid over one day, to allow committee to further investigate.

A resolution by Mr. Heasley asking that $250 be appropriated to assist in completing the state road on section lines between section 13 and 14, 23 and 24, 25 and 26, town 33 north, range 4 west, was lost by a vote of 6 ayes to 9 nays.

The superintendents of the poor were directed to use the rent of the poor farm in improving the farm, in their discretion.

Adjourned.

Friday, Oct. 16.

Full board present. Minutes read, corrected, and approved.

The committee on rejected and charged-back taxes reported recommending that the several amounts be spread on the rolls according to statement from the auditor general. Report adopted.

Messrs. Keat, Smith, and Ward were announced as the special committee to examine into the construction of a ferry at Ironton.

The committee on printing reported that 200 pamphlets, containing the reports of the treasurer and clerk would cost $100; that certain portions of the clerk's report was required by law to be published in some news paper in the county; that in the opinion of the committee the pamphlets would be an unnecessary expense; and recommended that the printing be given to the Charlevoix Sentinel at $75 for the reports, and the circuit court calendars for the same price as heretofore allowed.

Mr. Keat moved to amend the report so as to allow the work to be let to the lowest bidder. Lost: ayes 3, nays 12. The report was then adopted.

Mr. Upright presented a petition from the common council of the village of Charlevoix, asking that a certain strip of land owned by the county, and formerly occupied by the old court house and jail, be conveyed to the village to be used for opening and extending Hurlbut avenue. On motion of Mr. Keat the petition was granted.

On motion of Mr. Ward, the clerk and chairman were directed to convey the land described in the petition.

The clerk read a communication from the county treasurer, stating that the county did not own a burglar-proof safe, in which to keep the county funds, and asked that one be purchased or rented.

On motion of Mr. Keat, the treasurer was instructed to rent such a safe.

Mr. Keat presented a communication from the township board of South Arm, offering the use of the new town hall for county purposes for an annual rental fee of one dollar per year; also a resolution instructing the county clerk to make a lease of the same with the township board; and designated the town hall of the of the township of South Arm as the place for holding the circuit court for this county. Resolution adopted by the following vote: Ayes—Phetteplace, Smith, Burgess, Ward, Harris, Keat, Abbey, and Bailey, 8; nays—Upright, Heasley, McKibbin, Wooden, Nelson, Jersey, and Jordan, 7.

Sheriff Berdan explained some features of his bill as presented.

A recess was taken till 2 o'clock p. m.

On reassembling a motion was made to take a further recess until 4 o'clock. Carried.

At 4 o'clock the committee on claims reported, which report was adopted. The following claims were allowed as recommended by the committee:

GENERAL MERCHANDISE.

Notes and News.

Ann Arbor Argus: It is truly laughable to witness the squirming on the part of the republican press, whenever an officeholder is removed, no matter if he has feasted at the public crib for 24 years. Those fellows who have long enjoyed snug berths and their friends appear to think that they have a sort of divine right to hold office during their natural lives. Well, it may be hard; but wasn't it hard for the other fellows, each and every one of whom had to go within six months after Lincoln was inaugurated.

The Ovid Union mentions a reunion of reform school boys at the residence of W. H. Faxon, which was quite a novel affair, all things considered. Mr. Faxon is agent for Clinton county for the reform school, and has procured good homes for sixteen or eighteen young men, from 14 to 17 years of age. He and his daughter Miss Carrie planned for a social gathering and dinner for these boys, and gave them a surprise by inviting their old superintendent, C. A. Gower, of Lansing, to be present. This is an excellent supplement to the plan of work adopted by Mr. Gower for the benefit of boys who are sent to the institution. There is very little of the appearance of a prison in their surroundings and treatment, yet the discipline is really strict and of a character to make good men of the boys who might, if left to themselves, soon make the worst kind of criminals. Years ago we knew Mr. Faxon as superintendent of the Lansing M. E. Sunday school, and he seems to be still engaged in the good work for humanity.

The Ohio Election.

Cincinnati, October 16.—Complete unofficial returns on the head of the ticket in Ohio have now been received. The counties not given last night are: Brown, 800 plurality for Hoadly; Hamilton, 300 for Hoadly; Ottawa, 1,129 for Hoadly. This makes a total of 53,201 for Foraker, 35,513 for Hoadly; Foraker's plurality, 17,688.

Biography Writing.

Those who have attained a measure of reputation which justifies a biography, are entitled to treatment of a reasonable and discriminating kind. It is not necessary and it is not proper that their private papers should be ransacked for piquant details of their intercourse with friends and acquaintances, or that all the flippant and derogatory observations of envious contemporaries should be repeated against them. They have a right to justice not only, but also to a certain degree of charity. By the act of becoming noted, they do not authorize ready liberty to be taken with their personal records. It is the duty of the biographer to sift all the facts carefully, and exercise a sound discretion as to what belongs to the public and what is none of the public's business, and this duty he owes not less to his audience than to his subject. The best biographies are not those which go into minute particulars, and follow the theory that everything should be told, leaving the reader to do his own discriminating and to pass his own judgments. To tell the story of a great man's life in a fair, correct and impressive manner, it is quite as essential to leave certain things out as it is to put certain things in.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"We happened in a store the other day and heard a farmer "talking turkey" to a merchant for having sent him a statement of his account, claiming that he felt himself greatly wronged and insulted by such a proceeding. The farmer perhaps did not understand that there is not a man engaged in business in the United States, no matter how large or how small his business, that does not receive a statement of his account from every firm with which he has dealings at the beginning of every month. The wholesale merchant sends them to his country customers twelve times a year and the country merchant sends them to his customers once, or perhaps twice, a year and instead of his money gets cussed for the privilege of having accommodated his customer, and perhaps friend when he was "hard up." It takes all kinds of people to make up a world."—Fowerville Review.

Tom Ling, a Chinaman at Minneapolis, Minn., thus writes to the postmaster at Augusta, Ga.: "Mr. Postmaster: I have a letter for you, sir and I ask in which how many inhabitants to live and how many Chinese men to keeping laundry now and how many steam laundry now sir and you tell all about in which town for me know answer."

Local Notes and News.

Lyman Benson returned home last week.

To Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bedwin, Oct. 17, a boy.

John McNeil expects to spend the winter in the south.

A few bushels of potatoes wanted immediately at this office

The schools commence half an hour earlier beginning this week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Nicholls are visiting friends in Wisconsin.

An interesting letter from Burgess is crowded over to next week.

The timber skirting Pine Lake is now in its most beautiful color.

Deputy oil inspector Bontecou was in town Saturday, on official business.

A. J. McLeod and wife go east this week for a visit among friends.

W. J. Bradley is suffering with two large "comforters" on his left leg.

A. F. Draper and wife returned home from Wisconsin on Tuesday.

H. C. Cooper is building a two-story wing on the north side of his house.

Mrs. C. J. Grier has been on the sick list for a week past, but is recovering rapidly.

Miss Phebe Lalonde, of South Arm township, died last Saturday, of typhoid fever.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet with Mrs. Suffield next Friday.

The Kalkaska Leader has been reduced from a six column quarto to seven column folio

Rev. J. J. Kanagy occupied the pulpit of the Evangelical church, at Petoskey, last Snnday.

Song service at M. E. church Sunday evening at 7.30. Sunday school and congregation invited.

W. F. Orrell and wife go to Chicago this week for the winter, but expect to return in the spring.

Capt. Miller, of the life-saving station at Beaver Island, spent Sunday with his family in Charlevoix.

The space this week devoted to the board of supervisors necessarily curtails the usual amount of local items.

The iron roof and siding is being put on the new mill this week. The sash have also been fitted, and work is progressing inside.

It is coming cold weather again, and we shall need some of that wood pretty soon which has been promised so long but not yet received.

Never chase a lie. Let it alone and it will run itself to death. You can work out a good character much faster than any one can lie you out of it.

Elk Rapids Progress: Mrs. Burns, of Charlevoix, sister of W. H. Fife, visited him at his home in Ynba lately. Mrs. Burns formerly resided in Elk Rapids.

Richard Cooper, deputy U. S. Marshal, and E. H. Green, deputy collector of customs have been notified to have their books and papers ready for their successors.

John McNeil advertises this week a lot of household goods, farming utensils, grain, etc., at auction on Tuesday, Nov. 10th, at his place 2½ miles from Charlevoix.

Capt. J. H. Wilson was one of the first to extend congratulations Monday morning, and made it more emphatic by being accompanied by a basket of large sweet grapes.

D. R. Bennett, of Norwood, has located in Newton, Kansas, and moves this week. He is one of the progressive young men of this county, whom we dislike to see move away.

Elk Rapids now has four halls: The town hall, a splendid building costing $8,000, the Reform Club hall, Knights of Maccabees hall, and the hall over S. Yalomstein's store.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Mrs. William Madelle, of Ellsworth, Antrim county, partially insane, who has been missed since Friday was found dead Sunday in the Intermediate river. The unfortunate woman was 65 years old.

The Sunday Sun, recently started by W. F. Montgomery, at Manistique, is one of the finest specimens of local newspaper work, in both contents and mechanical appearance, we have seen in a long time.

Ben Weaver is building a two-story house on the Fox addition on the north side, two doors north of A. D. Cruickshank's. The location commands an unobstructed view of the whole length of Bridge street.

James S. Wykoff sold his restaurant business to Thos. Wood last week and started for Traverse City. After he had gone Tom found out that a part of the things he had bought had disappeared, and also found that there was a chattel mortgage of $12 on the balance. Wyckoff had left a couple of trunks to be sent to him which Wood refused to surrender until the chattel mortgage had been paid and the missing stock delivered up. Monday night Wyckoff appeared paid the mortgage and gave Tom $12 for the missing stock. That night he left and not a tear was shed by our people.—Elk Rapids Progress. An unpaid bill on our books reminds us that this same Wyckoff was once a resident of Charlevoix.

Preaching Sunday morning at M. E. church. "Good Tiding" service by the Sunday school at night. Young people's meeting at 6 o'clock, led by Miss Alice Cochran. Preaching at Black's school house at 3 o'clock, by J. T. Iddings.

Note the change in Miss Spaulding's advertisement this week. Her long experience here has fitted her to buy according to the wants of the town, and no one need go away without being satisfied. With Mrs DePue as milliner, her goods cannot fail to please.

A. J. Mudge is opening a stock of groceries in his building corner of Grant and Antrim streets, where he will catch the retail trade of the southwestern portion of the town, and have first chance at all the butter and eggs that come into town on that street.

The talent of turning men into ridicule, and exposing to laughter those one converses with, is the qualification of little minds and ungenerous tempers. A young man of this cast of mind cuts himself off from all manner of improvement. Don't practice the evil habit.

The morning dailies of last Saturday contain the announcement that Chas. J. Strang has been appointed postmaster at Charlevoix. We thank our many friends for their congratulations, and trust that we shall not fail to merit and receive their continued hearty support.

Mason Democrat: All "small potatoes" must stand from under, Leroy township heads them all. Levi Culver of that township, came into our office to renew his subscription to the Democrat yesterday, and dropped a Dakota Red potato on our table that weighs five pounds and six ounces. Can you beat it? No lying.

Some of the greatest inventions of the age were the result of accidents. Our citizens will remember that some time during last summer, O. W. Smith took a tumble into the river one dark night when the bridge was open, and came near losing his life. He is known to have an inventive mind, and no one will be surprised when told that very soon after getting out of the water he set about constructing a means of preventing similar accidents in the future. The result of his experiments consists of a guard rail across the roadway, which is raised and lowered by the motion of the draw as the bridge is opened or closed. The model seems to work all right, and probably will not require any material change of detail to apply to full sized bridges. We see no reason to doubt that this will be another instance where one man's misfortune will be the means of preventing hundreds of similar accidents, and the saving of many lives in the future. Application has been made for a patent for the device.

The Charlevoix county board of supervisors have never required of the county clerk a full and complete report of the business of his office as the statutes permit them to do, although the need of such report has frequently been felt, not only by the people but by the supervisors themselves. Acting on his previous experience as supervisor, county clerk Thatcher prepared this year a report covering in detail the work of his office during the year, commencing with the January session of the board, and following through the special sessions, and the removal of the county seat; giving also the principal officers elected at the spring election as reported to him, books received and distributed, registration and poll lists by townships, number of cases of each class in each term of court, costs of each term by items, number of aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens, number admitted to full citizenship, number of marriages, births, and deaths, total amount of money drawn from the county treasurer for all purposes on orders drawn by the clerk, accounts audited by the board at each session, moneys received upon and number of cases entered on the court calendar since January 1, and other matters of general interest to the people of the county at large. Early in the session the clerk informed the board of the existence of the document, and that he was ready to present it as the first annual report of the county clerk when they were ready to receive it. They declined to receive it, or even have it read, or in any manner become acquainted with its contents. Of course it was pigeon-holed, much to the disgust of the clerk, who had taken a week's time in searching records and files, and condensing into as brief space as possible the information desired. No reason was given for their action except that it would cost some money to have so much matter printed and circulated. On the surface of subsequent proceedings it would look to an outsider that the true reason was not so much to save the few dollars that would go to the printer, as to prevent the information from coming into the hands of their constituents. On a later day they allowed without a squirm $25 doctor's fee besides juror and witness fees for the post mortem examination of Geo. Optegezie; raised the juror fees in the same case from two dollars to three dollars each; allowed $40 doctor's fee besides juror and witness fees for the inquest on the bodies of the two fishermen, and $20 for a little expert medical testimony in an assault and battery case, besides numerous fees of $5 for examining as to the sanity of incompetent persons. These amounts like many others may not be exorbitant. They may be the customary allowance. We have no fight against the doctors, and only use these accounts for comparison. The people ought to have a chance to know for what purpose every dollar is paid. What does the board know about how many orders the clerk has drawn, or what the county has to show for them? They have audited but a small part of the bills, and never saw any of the vouchers for hundreds of dollars that have been paid out on the orders of the clerk. Spend a little more money with the printer and let more of the county's business out into the daylight. Put your work into such shape that you can take it home to your constituents, and account for every dollar you have voted away or that has been paid out, as if it came from your own private purse. The people groan because their taxes are high, and they ought to know what the cash is paid out for.

J. L. HURD & CO.

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

AUTUMN.

BY WILLIAM HAUGHTON.

His footfall is so gentle:
  He comes with so much grace;
And such a plaintive sweetness
  Lights up his shadowy face—
We hail him as he cometh,
  And at his side we stray
Wherever valley bloometh
  Or tinted fountains play.

Behind him burns the glory
  Of mingling gold and green;
The woodland robes to meet him
  In summer's crimson sheen—
And when at eve he slumbers,
  His velvet couch is spread
Where music's softest numbers
  Are melting round his bed.

I saw him kiss the summer,
  As in his arms she lay—
She trembled at his boldness,
  Then blushed and turned away;
She wrapped his mantle round her
  To hide her virgin brow—
So light of heart he found her,
  So altered leaves her now.

Can ye not roam together,
  And side by side illume
The hilltops and the valleys
  With mingling gold and bloom—
One hand the emerald bratding
  Through many a gem-lit fold,
And one, the darker shading
  Of crimson and of gold?

Then fiest and he follows
  O'er mountain, moor and lea—
His cheek is red with anger,
  No lover now is he.
He tramples the wild bowers
  Thy hands have tended long;
He chills thy fairest flowers,
  And mars thy tide of song.

Oh, Summer, linger near us—
  Stay by dear Autumn's side.
He'll crown thee with a garland,
  And thou shalt be his bride;
Then 'midst his auburn tresses
  Thy myrtle blossoms twine,
Nor fly him when he presses
  His ruby lips to thine.

WHAT DID IT MEAN?

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE PROBATION OF DOROTHY TRAVERS," "TARDONED," ETC.

St. James' Hall was crammed: stalls, balcony, orchestra seats, all were full; one vast mass of humanity; and yet it was only one of the ordinary Saturday Popular Concerts that was about to take place; those concerts that have taken such a hold on the hearts of the London public, that they have but to be announced, and forthwith their success is insured.

But this afternoon the hall was unusually full; one of its old favorites—and the London public is very faithful to its favorites—was about to resume his violin after months of long and tedious illness, and was to be greeted with that storm of applause such as the habitues of St. James' Hall love to give to those who have ministered well and faithfully to their pleasure.

Just as the clapping and cheering was at its very height, when the whole large room was vibrating from end to end with the sound, and the hero of the occasion was tossing back his long hair, that fell like a mane over his face as he bowed again and again in acknowledgment of the plaudits, a little old man, with quite white hair, frail, fragile, and well-dressed, walked noiselessly up the room, and took up his position in one of the outside stalls, sitting down quietly amid the tumult, and letting his bright keen old eyes rove as though in search of some one far over the head of the bowing violinist to the seats behind the orchestra.

They were densely packed, as they usually are, with those lovers of good music who are content to wait patiently for an hour or more to hear the sounds their souls delight in for the moderate sum of one shilling. There was not much beauty among them—there seldom is among musical people—so that the one face for which the little old man was seeking so eagerly stood out among its surroundings as some beautiful picture in a crowd of commonplace mediocrities. It was a sweet, fair face, but with a depth of sadness in the large gray eyes, that looked out of place in one apparently so young.

She—for it was a woman—was dressed in mourning, and had just laid aside a book in which she had been absorbed when the great violinist came in. As she settled herself in her seat after the tumult had subsided, and the business of the afternoon was about to commence, she became aware of the gaze fixed so earnestly on her. She did not seem surprised; all last year at these same concerts, all this year up to the present time, she had felt those keen eyes riveted on her, until she began to look on them as a matter of course, having forgotten both the annoyance they had caused her at first and the amusement of a later period.

Latterly, she had made up her mind that the little old gentleman was an amiable lunatic, as time after time, in whatever part of the hall she chanced to be, his quick eyes found her out, and kept her in a full stare throughout the whole performance.

But nothing more; no meeting her at the door, no following her as she walked home; no. She said to herself, he was a lunatic, but a gentleman, and with that reflection perhaps the music would begin, and she would forget all about him. But to-day, as she smiled to see the face she had grown so used to that she missed it if by a rare chance she were absent, she could not but remark that it had, as it were, aged since the last week; the lines of age that formed a network over the delicate, sensitive old face seemed to have deepened and widened, the eyes to have lost somewhat of their bird-like brightness.

"How my old gentleman has aged this last year!" she thought carelessly to herself, as she drew in, with exquisite delight, the sweet wail of the violin, touched by a master-hand, that quickly drove all other thoughts out of her head.

Two hours later the concert was all over, and Helen Spencer was descending the somewhat breakneck staircase that leads from the orchestral seats, with her ears still ringing with Beethoven and Schumann, and a somewhat earnest smile of anticipation on her lips, utterly forgetful of her little old gentleman. She was in a hurry, for she was not the mistress of her own time, and was walking down Piccadilly as fast as conventionality will allow you to walk in a crowded thoroughfare, when her passage across the street to the Green Park was stopped by a string of carriages. The brougham that halted immediately in front of her was small and perfectly appointed, and for one moment Helen caught a glimpse of its occupant. It was her little old gentleman, but he did not see her, he lay back among the cushions, with his eyes shut and a look of deadly weariness on his pale, thin face. A pang shot through the girl's heart; how ill he looked, and how lonely he seemed! almost as lonely as she was. * * * And then there was a move; the carriages had passed on, and the policeman was motioning to her to take advantage of her chance of crossing.

Another ten minutes brought her to her destination, a house in Grosvenor place, and as the door was opened to her by a solemn butler, she asked nervously, "Is Mrs. Fane come in yet?"

"No, miss," he answered, and with a lightened heart the girl ran quickly up the staircase, and entered the drawing-room almost as though afraid to pause.

Swift as a flash of lightning there passed over her face a smile of intense pleasure, to be succeeded at once by her usual serene gravity, as she perceived that the room was not untenanted; a tall, fair-haired man sat in one of the arm-chairs, reading the day's paper, and by his side the tea-table, with its inviting load. Helen had thought of retiring, but the sight of the tea was too much for her. She was so tired—music always exhausted her, because she loved it so well; there could be no harm in sitting down for five minutes, even if he was there, and drinking a cup of tea in his company; so she advanced into the room. The fair-haired man jumped up at once.

"Been to your beloved 'Popular,' Miss Spencer?" he asked. "Then you must be tired;" and almost before she could answer him, he had poured out a cup of tea and placed it in her unresisting hand. How angry she was with herself! Why could she not speak? Why did she feel inclined to cry? Why was she so foolish as to enter the room at all?

"Yes," she said, with an effort; "I have been to the 'Popular,' and—are you come up from Woolwich?"

"I suppose so," he answered, with an amused smile; "and this time for a fortnight."

"For a fortnight?"

"Yes. Does that displease you?" gently.

She gathered her senses together.

"It can be nothing to me either one way or another," she answered rather bitterly, and put her cup down.

He looked at her in amazement, and was about to speak, when a loud knock at the door caused him to go to the window.

"It is my mother," he said, as he turned toward the room again, and then perceived that he was alone. Miss Spencer had fled. Before he had time to more than give way to a muttered exclamation there was a rustle on the staircase, a rustling of silk and satin, heralding the approach of a person full of her own importance. It was Mr. Fane's mother. She came into the room: large, handsome, moneyed, arrogant—one glance at her told you all this. A strange contrast to the slim, quiet man whom she called her son, and whom she looked at suspiciously.

"You are alone, Edward?" she asked.

"It appears so, mother," he answered, with his quiet smile, as he kissed her and put a chair for her.

"I was afraid that designing girl had raced home from her concert to be alone with you, for Jones tells me she is come in."

Edward Fane frowned. "The designing girl is a lady, mother," he said.

"She may be, but she is a penniless one, and would, no doubt, like to marry my son, forgetting what I have striven to impress on her, that unless you marry with my full approval, not one——

"I have heard that before, mother; there is no necessity to repeat the lesson," he said gravely; and Mrs. Fane for once felt the rebuke, and changed the subject.

Meanwhile, up-stairs in her bed-room, Helen Spencer was walking up and down, in a state of agitation that her afternoon's employment hardly warranted. Poor thing! hers was a very sad though, alas! common enough position. Well born and once rich, moving in better society than the lady to whom she now acted as companion, she was now an orphan, reduced by a series of misfortunes to destitution. Forced by these circumstances to earn her bread as either a governess or companion, she had chosen the latter alternative, attracted by the high salary offered her by Mrs. Fane, although by no means attracted by the lady herself. It did not require any very great astuteness to find out that Mrs. Fane had not only an arrogant, imperious temper of her own, but that she was a very vulgar woman. It was a well-known fact that good-natured, extravagant Charlie Fane had married her for her money, and had met with his punishment in being worried and irritated into a premature grave. His son Edward was a different kind of man; but he too was at his mother's mercy, in so far that she held the purse-strings, and never failed to remind him of the important fact. And this son, who was destined by his mother to make some brilliant and aristocratic marriage, Helen Spencer loved.

She did not deny it—alas! she knew it but too well; but to-day was the first time she had allowed it even to herself—she loved him, and she must go away. She said it over and over again, in a soft, despairing voice; and then a feverish haste overtook her, a desire to fly and hide her, he'd somewhere, where she might weep out all the sorrow that was oppressing her, and feel that she had done rightly. For to-day the danger flag had floated before her eyes, and something had told her that her love was in a faint measure reciprocated. She went down to dinner with her usually pale face lighted up by two vivid spots of color, and her eyes soft and heavy from tears. Conversation did not flow very freely, as far as the young people were concerned; Mrs. Fane too was preoccupied, and Edward had ample time to reflect on Helen's charms, which to him seemed redoubled to-night, and to smile bitterly as he thought of his mother's menacing words to him. It was Saturday, so Mrs. Fane was not going out, and her tone was extra imperious as she bade Helen come and write some letters for her. She had been exasperated at dinner by Edward's absurd politeness and deference to a "companion," and by Helen's implied acquaintance with people who did not care to visit herself. Moreover she suspected an attachment between the two young people, and yet had no grounds on which to frame a definite accusation. There was no help for it, she must get rid of Miss Spencer, and that without delay. She was about to launch upon the subject with her usual ruthless abruptness, when she was spared the trouble by Helen announcing to her that she was very sorry, but if she was not causing Mrs. Fane any inconvenience she would like to leave her soon—very soon—in fact, as early as possible.

Did Mrs. Fane desire anything better? "You shall go on Monday, Miss Spencer," she said majestically, eyeing the girl suspiciously, and wondering why she was talking in with her own plans in this extraordinary manner. Was she doing so in order to have more freedom to see Edward? If so she should find herself grievously disappointed.

The evening wore away. Mr. Fane came up stairs, but neither his mother nor Helen said one word to him of the latter's departure; and when, on Monday morning, he went out, he had not the slightest idea but that he should find Miss Spencer in Grosvenor place on his return some time in the afternoon. It was late when he did come back, and as he walked up to the door a cab, with two boxes on it, was just driving away. Carelessly he asked Jones who it was that was going to the station, and started, electrified, when that functionary, with outward gravity but with some inward chuckling, responded that it was Miss Spencer who was departing—"for good," he added, after a pause.

"Where is she gone to?"

But, alas! Jones did not know.

To step into a hansom and promise a double fare if the luggage-laden cab were caught up and followed to its destination was the work of a minute, and soon Edward Fane found himself driving close behind Helen Spencer through a network of streets and thoroughfares that led to that far-famed region—the East of London. Past Shoreditch Station, the Bethnal Green Museum, down the Hackney Road, skirting the Victoria Park, until the cab stopped at one of those little houses with bow windows, which in their dreary uniformity form the stiple habitations in that part of London.

As Helen stepped out of her cab, Edward did the same from his; and as she turned to speak about her boxes he advanced to address her. He had meant to upbraid her, but the sight of her pale, sad face disarmed him; and he was only anxious for the time to find out that she had come to some sort of comfort.

"Oh, yes," she answered, feverishly, after she had got over the first start of surprise at seeing him; "Mrs. Abbott is an old servant of ours, she is sure to make me comfortable, and the clergyman's wife here is a great friend of mine. Good-by, Mr. Fane."

But Mr. Fane had no intention of being thus summarily dismissed. He followed her into the house, where Mrs. Abbott was fussing about, into the little sitting-room, all smothered in antimacassars, seating himself on the faded green rep sofa, with a judicial aspect that was almost too much for poor Helen's overwrought nerves. But it did not last long, giving way very soon to a gentle tenderness that was still more trying, and to resist which the girl had to summon all her courage.

Still Edward sat on and on; Mrs. Abbott looked in from time to time, but her woman's instinct had put her on the right track, and she did not intrude unnecessarily. It ended at last in the young man, overwhelmed with pity and shame for his mother's unkind conduct, declaring his love, and asking her to be his wife. At this Helen rose from her seat, and, assuming all the dignity she possessed, although she was trembling from head to foot with suppressed emotion, assured him emphatically that she could never consent to such a proposal, begging him to leave her, and excitedly reiterating that he ought never to have followed her. After such an appeal he could not stay, but he went away, promising to himself that not many hours should elapse before he again found himself in her presence.

When, the following morning, he came down to breakfast, Jones, who liked his master, but cordially detested his mistress, brought him a letter, with the simple communication that it had arrived by the first post, for Miss Spencer. Edward took it with simulated carelessness, that did not for one instant deceive the butler, and after a hasty breakfast, stepped into a hansom and once more drove down to Hackney.

His mother had been at an evening party the night before, and had not yet made her appearance. He would be back in Grosvenor place before she came down-stairs, and she would suspect nothing.

When he at last reached his destination, so comparatively early was it in the day, that Helen, shrinking from the task, had not yet instructed Mrs. Abbott not to admit him should he call, and that worthy woman at once introduced him into her young mistress' presence. He found her busy writing. She started up with a flushed, almost angry face when she saw him.

"Mr. Fane," she said, "I did not expect this from you. It is not kind of you to come."

"This is my excuse," he replied, holding out her letter, "though I own it a poor one. This document which came for you this morning looked to me as like business, that, fancying it might be important, I brought it myself."

"There is the post," she said coldly, and then fell to blushing in a manner that was anything but cold. "Will you excuse me?" she continued, opening her letter to hide her confusion. As her eyes fell on its contents she uttered an exclamation of amazement.

"Oh!" she cried, "what does it mean? it can't be me; it is a mistake; read it, Mr. Fane, and see what it means."

Edward took the letter and read it. It was perfectly plain and to the point. Messrs. Farley & Smith begged to inform Miss Spencer that, according to the will of their late client, Mr. Frederick Paley, she, with the exception of a few legacies, was the sole inheritor of his large fortune, his house in Curzon street, his carriages, horses, etc., etc., and that they would be happy to receive her instructions as to the same.

"Mr. Frederick Paley!" exclaimed Helen, "who is he? I have never heard of him in my life, much less seen him; it must be a mistake, and intended for some other Miss Spencer."

"We shall see," said Edward. "Your best plan will be to go at once to Farley & Smith, and ask for further explanations. I will go with you."

"Oh! thank you," said Helen, as she rapidly disappeared up-stairs to dress, absolutely forgetful that not five minutes ago she was meditating the dismissal of Edward Fane.

Arrived at Messrs. Farley & Smith's Helen found that the letter was no mistake. Mr. Paley had left his money to her, and to no other; and very little light could the lawyers throw on the subject, beyond the fact that their client had been decidedly eccentric, his eccentricity taking a benevolent and musical turn; that he had mentioned that she was much interested in Miss Spencer; that she was a beautiful girl; a brave girl, and a great lover of music, and that for these three reasons he had chosen her for his heiress, and once he had let drop that he had known her mother intimately many years ago. He had died the previous morning almost suddenly.

Helen was in despair. "If I could but know who it is who has been so good to me!" she exclaimed.

"Let us go to Curzon street," suggested Edward; then in a lower voice: "Perhaps you may be allowed to see him."

"I think that would be best," said Mr. Farley, "and I will give you a letter, explaining who you are, to the housekeeper, who has lived there many years. The poor old man has no relations."

So they drove to Curzon street, Edward waiting outside in the cab while Helen went into the house. Did it not seem as though she were already his affianced wife? And yet had not a new barrier arisen between them? He waited patiently enough, too absorbed in his own thoughts to count the minutes till Helen came out. When after some time she did appear, her eyes were full of tears.

"It is my little old gentleman," she said to Edward, in a low, awe-stricken voice.

"What, of the Saturday Popular?"

She nodded her head; she could not speak. He, too, was silent, thinking of the wonderful change that had come to her whom he loved, till recalled to his senses by the cabman inquiring where he should drive to next. Turning to Helen, he asked with a sudden inspiration:

"Where shall I say? to Hackney or to Grosvenor place?"

She looked at him with a deep blush. "I am so lonely," she said falteringly. "Perhaps—your mother would like to know. Let it be to Grosvenor place."

Six months afterward Edward and Helen were married.

Tobacco.

Cigars were not known until about 1815. Previous to that time pipes were used exclusively. Chewing has been in vogue to a limited extent for some time, while snuffing dates back almost as far as smoking.

The first package sent to Catherine de Medici was in fine powder. She found that smelling it in the box affected her similarly to smoking, which led her to fill one of her smelling bottles with the dust. Her courtiers adopted the habit of snuffing small portions of it up their nostrils, and as the precious stuff became more plentiful the snuffing habit became more general, until at last a man or woman was not considered in proper form unless they snuffed.

The custom became so common in England that a snuff-box was no longer a sign of rank. Then it was the law prohibiting the culture of the plant, except for medicine, was passed. About the same time a heavy tariff was placed on the imported article, thereby practically placing it beyond the reach of the common herd and giving royalty a complete monopoly.

Since it first began to be used as a luxury there have been conflicting opinions in regard to its effects. The Roman Church once forbade its use, and the Church of England declaimed against it. The Wesleys opposed it hotly, and at one time it was considered so unclean as to unfit men for membership in the Methodist Church.

Baptist and Presbyterian ministers preached against it, and societies were organized to oppose the spread of the habit, but all to no purpose. Parents disowned and disinherited their children because they used it, and husbands divorced their wives on account of their having contracted the habit of smoking.

It is singular that when women get into the habit of smoking a pipe they prefer a strong one. There are few men who have nerve to smoke a pipe such as a woman likes when she has become a confirmed smoker. When they first begin puffing cigars they prefer them very mild; but it is not long until they want them black and strong and lots of them.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Eskimo Candy.

It would seem very strange, and perhaps not very pleasant, to my young readers to hear a tallow candle or the shin-bone of a reindeer called candy. And yet these things may really be considered as Eskimo candy, because they would delight the children of the cold in precisely the way that a box of bonbons would delight you.

There is a certain kind of water-fowl in arctic countries known as the dovekie. It is about the size of a duck, is quite black, has a prominent white stripe on its wings, and its webbed feet are of a brilliant red. When sitting in rows on the edge of greenish rock, these little red feet are very conspicuous. Sometimes, when the men have killed a number of dovekies, the Eskimo women cut off the bright red feet, draw out the bones, and, blowing into the skins, distend them as much as possible so as to form pouches. When these pouches are thoroughly dried they are filled with reindeer tallow, and the bright red packages, which I assure you look much nicer than they taste, are little Boreas' candy. In very cold weather the Eskimo children eat great quantities of fat and blubber; and this fatty food, which seems to us so uninviting, helps to keep them warm and well.

The only other kind of candy that the Eskimo children have is the marrow from the long leg or shin-bone of the slaughtered reindeer. Of this, also, they are very fond. Whenever a reindeer is killed and the meat has been stripped from the bones of the legs, these bones are placed on the floor of the igloo and cracked with a hatchet until the marrow is exposed. The bones are then forced apart with the hands, and the marrow is dug out of the ends with a long, sharp, and narrow spoon made from a walrus' tusk. I have eaten this reindeer marrow frozen and cooked; and after one becomes accustomed to eating frozen meat raw, it is really an acceptable tidbit; while cooked and nicely served, it would be a delicacy anywhere.—*Lieut. DEATH OF A HUMORIST.

Josh Billings Dies Suddenly of Apoplexy in a California Hotel.

[Monterey (Cal.) telegram.]

Henry W. Shaw, better known as "Josh Billings," died at 10 o'clock this morning, of appoplexy. The body will be embalmed and sent East. About 9:45 this morning Dr. Heintz was summoned to Hotel del Monte to attend Mr. Shaw, who was sitting in a chair in the vestibule, apparently enjoying the best of health. When the physician arrived Mr. Shaw complained of a severe pain in the chest and remarked: "My doctors East ordered rest of brain," and added, throwing back his long hair, "but you can see I do not have to work my brain for a simple lecture; it comes spontaneously." While he was talking he suddenly threw his hands over his head and fell backward unconscious. He was carried to his room, and at the end of three minutes life was extinct. His wife, who accompanied him on his trip to the Pacific coast, was with him during his last moments. His face has retained a perfectly natural expression and bears no indications of pain. He was to have lectured here Friday for the benefit of a local lodge of Good Templars. At the hotel he had made himself a general favorite by his good-natured ways.

Sketch of His Career.

Henry W. Shaw was born at Lanesborough, Massachusetts, in 1818, and was a grandson of Dr. Samuel Shaw, member of Congress from Vermont during the war of 1812. His father was also a member of Congress. His uncle, John Savage, served as Chief Justice of New York. At the age of fifteen Henry went West and became a farmer and auctioneer for twenty-five years, when he settled in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., at the latter vocation. His first production made public was written May 25, 1863, over the name of "Josh Billings," he being over forty-five years of age. Since then his philosophy and quaint spelling have given him a high reputation for originality and a deep insight into human nature. His "Allminax" attained at one time an immense circulation. While editing a small paper in Poughkeepsie, to which place he had come for the purpose of educating his daughters, he compared several of his humorous essays with those of Artemus Ward, and wondered why his own had failed to strike the popular taste. Concluding that the secret of success was in the fonetic spelling, he adopted it in his "Essa on the Mule," and disposed of it for $1.50, his first earnings in the line of literature. The essay was extensively copied, and further efforts in the same line soon made his name a household word.

During the last seventeen years he has delivered a thousand lectures.

Underneath the bad spelling of his proverbs and aphorisms there is at times a depth of wisdom and philosophy which gives him a higher place in the world than that of a mere humorist, and which is often overlooked by those who are amused merely by his peculiarities.

POISONED GUESTS.

They Attend a Swell Wedding and Eat Something Not Down on the Bill.

[Honesdale (Pa.) special.]

A decided sensation is produced here to-night by the discovery that a dozen or more guests at a swell wedding have been poisoned by some food that was furnished by a Scranton caterer for the wedding breakfast. At noon to-day Miss Hattie Weston, daughter of a prominent merchant here, was married to Harry S. Battin, Superintendent of the Consumers' Gas Company of Chicago. The couple left on an afternoon train and had hardly been rolled to the depot before it was noticed that guests began to depart with unseemly haste. They were afflicted with intense pain in the abdominal region that increased so rapidly that some of them had scarcely time to make their adieux properly. At their homes physicians were summoned, and found it necessary to treat for mineral poisoning. Either the lobster salad or the ice-cream absorbed some compound of lead from cans in which it was brought from Scranton, and serious results are anticipated in some cases. At 8 o'clock to-night fourteen persons were under treatment, and all the doctors in the town were busy.

COULDN'T FOOL WITH THE COURT.

A Hoosier Attorney Comes to Grief at Indianapolis.

[Indianapolis special.]

In the Criminal Court to-day the contempt proceedings against Wilbur Royse, an attorney, were disposed of. Royse was defending his brother against the charge of highway robbery. After conviction it was charged that the attorney engineered a scheme for the prosecuting witness to find his supposed stolen pocket-book and money in his coat lining, and then tell the court that the money had never been taken. The alleged plot was exposed in court, and the father of the young men, who was also a party to it, fled. The defense threw themselves on the clemency of the court, Royse saying that he had intended no contempt of court, but was only trying to get a new trial for his brother. Judge Norton reflected upon the act of the defendant in the most scathing terms, and then sentenced him to three months' imprisonment in jail, the full extent of the law, and to pay a fine of $100. The latter was made light because of representations that it would have to be paid by Mrs. Royse, whose property has already suffered severely because of the acts of her husband and father-in-law.

KILLING OFF HORSE-THIEVES.

Two of Them Bite the Dust in Arkansas After a Desperate Fight.

[Little Rock (Ark.) special.]

Farmers in Independence and Sharp Counties, in Northwest Arkansas, have been losing valuable stock for months past, but were unable to prevent the depredations. Last week a number of horses were stolen from the neighborhood of Batesville and at different points in Sharp County. A posse was organized and started in pursuit of the thieves. They were overtaken on Sycamore Creek. They had camped for the night. Though surprised, they made resistance, and a fight followed, which resulted in the killing of two of the band. The remaining three escaped by hiding in the underbrush. None of the pursuers were seriously injured.

GAMBLERS' TRICKS.

Means by Which Professionals Pluck Their Victims.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

No one looks upon a professional gambler as a shining example of honesty, but only few people know what crooked sharpers most professional gamblers are, or the ingenious mechanical contrivances which they employ to aid them in "winning" the dollars of their victims. The man who makes gaming a profession rarely or never depends upon luck for his existence. In faro, roulette, monte, hazard, and in all other games known to the gentlemen of the green cloth, there is a certain well-understood "percentage" in favor of the proprietors. This is understood by all who play, but it is so trifling that they are willing to pay it for the privilege of hazarding their money. There is another "percentage" in all of these games as played at many places that is only understood by the professional dealers, and is never suspected by the players.

In the game of faro the known percentage is very small. When two cards of the same denomination come out of the silver-plated "dealing-box" together, the dealer takes one-half of the bets which happen to be on that card on the "layout." Sometimes an entire deal is played without this occurring, and it rarely happens more than twice in a deal, so that the visible percentage is quite small; so trifling, in fact, that if a faro game is dealt fairly it must have an almost unlimited capital or eventually become bankrupt.

It is to guard against this mishap and to make the game a profitable one that the unknown percentage is introduced. To accomplish his purpose the gambler has both the cards and the dealing-box "fixed." This "fixing" process of the cards is done as follows: A new pack is used, and one in which every card is exactly of the same size to a hair's breadth. There is an almost imperceptible difference in the sizes of the cards in nearly all cheap packs, so that the gambler buys for his purpose expensive cards that have been "sparred" especially for faro. The first step in "fixing" is to separate the low and and high cards; that is, to put in separate piles all ranging from the nee to the six, and from the eight to the king. The seven being neither high nor low is equally divided, two sevens being put with the high and two with the low cards. Then with a pair of sharp shears, made especially for the purpose, the gambler clips a thin slip from the end of each card. The high cards are clipped in this way from the upper right-hand corner to a point on the lower edge, about the thirty-second part of an inch from the lower right-hand corner. The low cards are clipped in the same way, except that the gambler commences at the lower right-hand corner and clips to a point on the upper edge near the right corner. The cards now are wider at one end than at the other, but the difference in which is so slight as to be almost imperceptible except to the touch. The cards are then shuffled, care being taken to keep the wide ends of the high cards and the wide ends of the low cards at opposite ends of the pack. It is an easy matter now for an expert manipulator to catch the wide ends of the cards between his thumbs and forefingers, and so draw all of the high cards into one hand and the low ones into the other. When the game is in progress the dealer shuffles the cards thoroughly, and then in this way separates the high from the low. Next he so shuffles them as to "sandwich" each low and high card, and when the pack is in the dealing-box they should come out alternately.

This wouldn't suit the dealer at all, as he must not only know just how the cards are arranged, but at the same time have perfect control over them. In order that he may have this power a specially arranged dealing-box is procured. The ordinary dealing-boxes have a slit in the side just wide enough to admit of one card passing through it at a time; the special boxes have a slit wide enough to allow two cards to pass through them. Armed with these simple contrivances, all the dealer has to do is to watch where the bets are and win every time by either shoving out one card or two, as occasion requires. If a player bets that a high card will win, the dealer can very easily make it lose or vice versa. Of course the gamekeeper is a confederate, and at a sign from the dealer can tell how to arrange the "cases" so that they will tally with the cards that are out. This is what is called a "brace game," probably because it can only be successfully worked by a "brace" of rogues. Thousands of faro-players who think that luck is always against them are simply victims of the "brace game."

Dealing-boxes and cards prepared in this way can be procured from a Chicago firm, which issues private catalogues to gamblers containing samples of marked cards, with directions for reading the backs. The firm also sells roulette wheels so arranged as to make the red invariably win if the wheel is turned in one direction and the black win if turned in the other. These are known among gamblers as "right and left" wheels, and are used with great success in many places.

In this day and age of our Lord the majority only make a living anyhow, and many there are who are not so fortunate. 'Tis only now and then that any one person amasses great wealth. Don't make up your mind to become opulent without hard work, and you may be gratified if you can then keep your head above the high-water mark, amid the tribulations that for some good and sufficient reasons undoubtedly are to be met with in every and all branches of business.

TRICKS ON THE TRACKS!

Dangers from Which Engineers Save the Public and Themselves.

[From the Railway Review.]

One who is accustomed to railway traveling can scarcely realize how much he is dependent for safety upon the engineer. Added to the responsibility of their station, engineers are also in constant danger of accidents caused by the tricks of jealous rivals.

This rivalry, it is said, sometimes prompts to the doing of utterly mean tricks. A Nickel Plate engineer, after his very first trip, was laid off because he had "cut out" all the bearings of his engine. He was reinstated, however, after he proved that some rival had filled his oiling can with emery. Another new engineer was suspended for burning out the flues of his boiler. Through grief at the loss of his position he died, and then a conscience-stricken rival confessed that he had put oil in the tank so that it foamed and showed water at the top gauge, when in reality there was scarcely a quart in the boiler!

These intense jealousies, together with the terrible anxiety incident to their work, have a terribly straining effect on the nerves, and statistics tell us that, though Locomotive Engineers may look strong and vigorous, they are not all a hearty class. Ex-Chief Engineer A. S. Haupton, Indianapolis, Ind. (Div. 143), was one of those apparently hearty men, but he says: "The anxiety, strain, and jolting came near finishing me." His sufferings localized in catarrh of the bladder, but he used Warner's safe cure faithfully for twenty weeks and now exclaims, "I am a well man." T. S. Ingraham, of Cleveland, Ohio, Assistant Chief Engineer, and other prominent members are also emphatic in its praise.

The Locomotive Engineers' Brotherhood has 17,000 members and 210 divisions. Its headquarters is in Cleveland, Ohio, where Chief Engineer Arthur for twenty years has exercised almost dictatorial sway. It was organized in August, 1863, by the employes of the Michigan Central. It has given nearly two million dollars to the widows and orphans of deceased members.

He Was Left in the Lurch.

"How did you come to give way to the tempter, my good brother?" said a well-meaning minister who was trying to do a little missionary work among Uncle Sam's colony in Canada, as he addressed an Indiana Trustee who had lately joined the gang. "From what you have told me, my dear sir, I infer that you were piously brought up."

"Yes," said the Hoosier, "I was raised all right, and I was always a good average church member, too."

"But there was certainly a cause for your falling from grace, my good friend. Do you know what it was?"

"Yes, indeed, sir?"

"Ah, you do? And what was it, my dear sir?"

"Divine neglect."

"Ah! But I am at a loss to understand your meaning, my good friend. I fear you did not seek help from on high to sustain you in the hour of weakness."

"Well, that's just what I did do, but I was left in the lurch."

"Yes, sir."

"In what way, my dear sir?"

"Well, you see, when Pollard pointed out to me how weak the law was, and how easy it would be for me to scoop in a big pile without much risk, I felt myself slipping from the rock on which I had been standing so long, and I knew at once I was a goner unless——"

"Unless what, my dear sir?"

"Unless I got help from above."

"Very good—very good, my dear brother. You should have prayed for it."

"That's just exactly what I did do."

"Indeed!"

"Yes; I got right down on my knees and I prayed to the Lord to give me strength to resist the temptation."

"Very good. Go on—go on, my good sir."

"Well, sir, the Lord went right square back on me and down I went. He didn't hold me up worth a cent after I'd looked into the law for myself, and found out that Pollard was right about it."—Chicago Ledger.

The Secret of Exercising.

The secret of muscular recuperation is in stopping when fatigue begins. He or she who is not the fresher in body and mind for the exercise taken has had an overdose of what in proper measure would have been a benefit. The gain in strength is shown and felt in the increasing ability to do more and more without exhaustion. The measure of success is not in the greatness of the feat accomplished but in the ease with which the exercise is indulged in, in the absence of exhaustion after it. There are occasions frequent enough in which people in the struggle of life are forced beyond their power of endurance, and there is no need to carry into the pursuit of recreation the fatigue which exacting work imposes. —Philadelphia Ledger.

In most cases failures are not hopeless misfortunes, and, though often bitter, nevertheless profitable experiences, even if the lesson be severe. But few people learn so effectually what their capabilities are, or what "making one's way" means as by experience, and of these ninety-nine out of every hundred will be benefited in a greater or less degree for the reproof—it depending very much upon how well the knowledge gained is applied.

"Sweet Maud Muller."

Whittier's beautiful ballad contains a touching allusion to the many cares and sorrows which wear upon the "heart and brain" of a wife and mother. Thousands of weary, suffering women have found Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" a marvelous recuperator of wasted strength, and of sovereign efficacy in all those derangements and maladies peculiar to their sex, by reason of which the vitality is gradually sapped, and the cheek robbed prematurely of its bloom. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

Ins and Outs.

Nothing is so productive of distressing headaches as the tropical heat of summer. St. Jacobs Oil will remove them at once.

The Reason.

Toper—It seems very strange to me. I have never been on bad terms with liquor, yet it is beginning to cast reflections on my nose.

Friend—Indeed.

T.—Yes, sir, you can see for yourself.

F.—I see and understand the reason.

T.—You do?

F.—Certainly, my friend, certainly. You may say you have been good friends with liquor, but at the same time you have been in the habit of running it down, and that's why it is casting reflections on your nose.—Boston Courier.

When young I was too ambitious to get plenty of the "root," and, following out my inclinations, often overworked, and then put in a season of grunting, aided by "salts." But age is often accompanied by wisdom. Now I let others do the heavy work, while I do the grunting over the light work. Half the wisdom of life, I have found out, lies in not working all the time, unless you have to, without now and then a season of enjoyment.

Can consumption be cured? Yes. One man only, discovered the laws of gravitation. One man only, discovered the virtue of vaccination. And one man after years of study and reflection, has discovered the cure for consumption. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is its specific. Send two letter stamps and get Dr. Pierce's pamphlet treatise on consumption. Address, World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Man in Ruins.—One of the most melancholy spectacles in the world is a human being shattered and broken down by the use of ardent spirits and tobacco. But the dilapidation may be repaired, the ruin restored to perfect soundness, by a course of that most powerful of all vegetable invigorants, Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters.

Fathers, Where are Your Boys?

Prof. Hopkins, has asserted that one-fourth of the dram drinking in the country is done by boys under 21 years of age. Often the habit is formed at so early a period that the boy is a drunkard in miniature before the suspicions of friends are excited.

To illustrate this and also to show the criminal thoughtlessness and easy-going indifference of so-called christian men, the speaker related the experience of a friend who was elected president of a village of about 7,000 inhabitants in the state of New York. Soon, in the discharge of his official duties, he became aware that the saloons were ruining a large proportion of the boys and young men, and he formed the determination to close them by invoking the aid of the best citizens. Going to a good deacon, he urged first upon him the necessity of aggressive action. The deacon deplored the presence of the dramseller, knew he was a great curse to the community, but to meddle with him would stir up an uncomfortable commotion, great difficulty would be found in getting evidence, and, in short, it was easier to tolerate the nuisance than to incur the odium of taking steps to abate it.

Becoming a little exasperated at this selfish easy-going indifferentism, the official said: "Your boy was in a certain saloon last Sunday night drunk." "You are mistaken sir; my boy is a good boy, he never drinks." Just at this moment the boy came in sight, was summoned, questioned and denied the charge. The gentleman hunted up another good deacon, told him also that his boy was drunk on that Sunday night, and met with the same or even more indignant reception. So he went on, meeting indifference, incredulity and resentment until thoroughly aroused, since his veracity was called in question, he had eight youths brought into court, and there these "best boys in town, sons of the first families," when put under oath, swore that they were all in that saloon on that Sunday night, and, moreover, that they were all drunk. Then, having verified his charge, he may almost be pardoned for saying, as he did say, "Now, sirs, if you christian fathers are so lazy, so selfish, so indifferent that you will not risk a little trouble and a little expense to save your sons and the sons of your neighbors, they may go to the devil for aught I care.

This story, undoubtedly a true one, while it illustrates an extreme case, is yet indicative of a spirit all too prevalent among respected citizens, good fathers and sincere christians. Their principles are unquestioned, their personal habits are irreproachable, and it hardly occurs to them as possible that the sons of such fathers as themselves can be led astray and enslaved insidiously by temptations which are no temptations to them. Other good christian citizens, having no sons to awaken their anxiety, are selfishly blind to their obligations to remove temptation from the sons of their neighbors. A little thoughtful study of the life and teachings of the Master whom they profess to serve might clear their vision and healthfully quicken their consciences.

THE KEYS.

The Kidneys and Liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have Headache, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Lame Back or Side, Failing Strength, Languor, Excessive Flow of Urine, &c., remember they are the advance guard and give warning to more serious trouble such as Diabetes, Bright's Disease, &c. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure is a sure cure for all these diseases. Price only $1.00 large bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

NO SCROFULA

Can be so deep-seated, so malignant and stubborn, that Parmelee's Blood Purifier will not be found helpful. It will effect a cure, if cure be possible. And if you are troubled with Boils, Salt-Rheum, Pimples, Rough Skin, or any humor whatever, just give the Purifier a thorough trial and you cannot fail to receive benefit from it. Price $1 per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Rosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lachis H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Eglestun, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 29th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees west, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the beach of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north range six (6) west, intersects said beach, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty (50) links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Peteptom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 336, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Five Little White Heads.

Five little white heads peeped out of the mold,
When the dew was damp and the night was cold;
And they crowded their way through the soil with pride.
"Hurrah! We are going to be mushrooms!" they cried.

But the sun came up, and the sun shone down,
And the little white heads were shriveled and brown;
Long were their faces, their pride had a fall—
They were nothing but toad-stools, after all.
—Walter Learned, in St. Nicholas for June.

AN OCEAN OF FRAGRANCE.

How Hyacinths, Tulips, and Crocuses Are Cultivated in Holland.

Holland has always been and probably will ever be the mother of bulbs. Few persons, while admiring the beautiful flowers produced from Holland bulbs, ever think of the care, time, and trouble taken to grow them. Bulbs have been cultivated there four hundred or five hundred years, as near as can be ascertained, but for several years past they have received more attention than ever. Mr. Beerhorst, a bulb-grower of Lassenheim, near Haarlem, Holland, was interviewed in this city this week. He said:

"Holland, as is well-known, is all low land, the greater part of it lower than the sea. The water is kept off by dykes; you have another name here. Erected here and there on them are large windmills, that pump the water out when it inundates the land. They present a very strange appearance to an unaccustomed eye. We travel by canal boats like, I understand, was once done here."

"What is the soil like, that you are enabled to raise the finest bulbs?"

"The best in the world for bulb-growing—pure, sandy soil. The reason Holland bulbs are best is owing to the soil, temperature, and water, which is as pure as is possible. We have only to dig three feet—I believe you measure by feet here—to find water, not only in one place, but anywhere."

"How do you plant hyacinths to increase their number?"

"We first fertilize the soil, put about sixteen bushels of manure on each twelve feet square, then we take a hyacinth bulb and cut across the bottom several times, plant, and in June we lift. The one bulb will be divided into several small ones of perfect growth."

"When do you plant first?"

"In September. The great fogs from the sea drive the frost away, but we always cover the beds with weeds. We can not use straw, because then the mice destroy our bulbs."

"Are your winters as cold as here?"

"No; we are a great ways further north, yet our winters are not so severe. Probably the fogs help us some. Our summers are not so intensely hot as in this country."

"Are the hyacinths ready for sale after the first year?"

"No, no; I would they were. The first year they are planted close; the second year we must plant them in new soil, as they will not grow two years in the same ground. Every year each bulb gets more space, until five years elapse, when they are then ready to sell."

"What do you do with the ground you can not use a second year?"

"We plant some other species of flower, and at the same time enrich the soil. Thus we change their homes alternately, and can always utilize the ground. Bulbs have about sixteen different diseases, which I can not name in your language. This causes much trouble and loss of money. Sometimes the soil gets tired of the bulbs, and refuses to grow anything. We give it a time to rest, and then we dig up a depth of four feet, put on a double quantity of fertilizing matter, and after another short rest it is willing to start to work again. You know everything in life must have some time to rest, or it wears out, and is no good afterward."

"Tell me something about your tulips?"

"Well, I plant the bulbs the same as the others, only they do not need cutting, as they increase themselves by forming offshoots on the old ones. We separate those and replant. We oftimes grow from seed—that makes the work. From first planting it is four years until they bloom. The strange part is they all bloom a coffee-colored flower for a number of years, when suddenly they will bring forth some fine color, as those see who buy them. Thus we know what our bulb is. They never hold the coffee color, which is quite pretty, any longer than four years. This we are sure of, but what they will be in the end we know not until they show us. Crocuses are raised the same way. The three bulbs mentioned will grow nicely in water. For forcing I always use sandy loam, which is the best."

"How many varieties of tulips have you?"

"Three thousand—just 2,500 too many. I suppose there are more than that."

"What is your native place like?"

"The scenery is grand, elegant; I can't tell you in your language as I would like to. We have lovely trees like here, that is, the same kind. The land is perfectly level. Everybody grows bulbs—the laborer, tailor, shoemaker, as well as the florist. All the houses—some one-story, some two, and none higher—are built of brick. We build no pavements, but we never have any mud, and our roads are always dry and smooth, not full of hard cobblestones like here. In the principal bulb-growing district, my home—Sassenheim—you can see millions and millions of tulips, hyacinths, and crocuses in bloom at once. Their beautiful fragrance is wafted for miles around. On one acre will be planted about 100,000 bulbs. Can you imagine, then, looking over a dozen of acres in bloom, what a vast sea, fit for a paradise, it is? I wish I were able to describe in your talk the grandeur of it."

"What do you think of our country?"

"It is grand, it is grand! Good for a poor man—the rich man can get along anywhere. If I could not get along better than some at our place I would come to America. Our people dress very plain, live plain, and meat is the greatest luxury. Some men who work very hard have this fat rib meat; I think you call it bacon. I am really ashamed to tell you what wages they get. Three dollars per week is the average. Some get $4, and on rare occasions $1.25 and $1.50 per day is paid, but the ordinary laborer here gets twice as much as in our country."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Bivouac in a German Camp.

Hurrying forward, writes R. F. Zogbaum in Harper's Magazine, I reached our bivouac just as the troop was falling in for the evening prayer, although no tattoo had been beaten there, we being too near the enemy, and the music might have betrayed our whereabouts. Quietly our little force moved up in front of the fires, the guard standing to their arms. "Halt! Richt, euch!" and they stood there motionless in one solid, dark block, relieved strongly against the bright light of the fires and columns of smoke and sparks rising almost straight upward to the black heavens. Out of the darkness came a short word of command, "Caps off for prayer!" and in solemn silence, with uncovered heads, the rough soldiers rendered thanks to the Almighty for His mercies.

Lighted candles, stuck in bottles or fastened to rough-hewn blocks of wood, were gleaming brightly on the plain pine boards of the improvised table under the mess tent, when, the men having been dismissed, the officers sat down for an hour's chat and smoke before turning in, and although our seats varied in shape and size from a mess chest to a folding camp chair, and the table appointments were of the simplest description, it would have been difficult to have found a merrier or more comfortable set of men than that of which our little party was composed. A handsome, soldierly lot of gentlemen, these German officers, treating one with the freedom of the camp, but with the well-bred courtesy of their class, and full of eager hospitality to the stranger from far-off America. Many were the questions asked about the land beyond the sea, where so many of their countrymen and their descendants had their homes; about France, where I had been living for a long time, and about Paris, where I still resided; about the French army, their life and habits. Then the yarns about the late war between the two countries, the suffering, the hardships, the fun and the fighting, the good wines, and the fair women of "sunny France"—yarns that made the youngsters of the mess envious of their elders and anxious to take part some day in a like (to them) glorious struggle. There was no boasting, no exultation of the victor over the vanquished, but the natural talk of soldiers over the adventures of a campaign the like of which has seldom been met with in history.

So the evening wore away in a pleasant chat until the major, our commandant, gave the signal for us to disperse; and we sought our beds.

Nearly Lost Saturday.

Last Saturday Ham Cherry arose in the morning, took a bath, put on his black suit, and after breakfast occupied himself reading sacred books. He told his folks that as it was so far to church, and as the off horse had galled his shoulder plowing, he guessed he would not drive thither. Everything was quiet and peaceable about, and Ham was glad there was a day left for man to rest and recuperate. But just after a late dinner a neighbor came along with a load of hay. Ham stepped to the door and called out:

"How is this, John, that you are working to-day? You should go to meeting."

"Hain't got no time to go to meeting on week days," answered John. "Sunday is all the time I can spare for church-going."

The man then drove on. Cherry stood and scratched his head meditatively a few moments, and then entered the house. He told his wife to take a pencil and check off the days.

"Less see—Monday I went to town. Got that down?"

"Yes."

"Tuesday I broke the colt. Wednesday I put up that fence down in the lower field. Thursday I killed the pig. Friday I licked the tramps. Saturd-a-y—Confound it, what did I do Saturday?" In just ten minutes after the above conversation Ham Cherry was holding up the whiffletree with one hand and driving his team down the lane toward the field on a sharp trot.—Aurora Blade.

Five Little White Heads.

Five little white heads peeped out of the mold,
When the dew was damp and the night was cold;
And they crowded their way through the soil with pride.
"Hurrah! We are going to be mushrooms!" they cried.

But the sun came up, and the sun shone down,
And the little white heads were shriveled and brown;
Long were their faces, their pride had a fall—
They were nothing but toad-stools, after all.
—Walter Learned, in St. Nicholas for June.

AN OCEAN OF FRAGRANCE.

How Hyacinths, Tulips, and Crocuses Are Cultivated in Holland.

Holland has always been and probably will ever be the mother of bulbs. Few persons, while admiring the beautiful flowers produced from Holland bulbs, ever think of the care, time, and trouble taken to grow them. Bulbs have been cultivated there four hundred or five hundred years, as near as can be ascertained, but for several years past they have received more attention than ever. Mr. Beerhorst, a bulb-grower of Lassenheim, near Haarlem, Holland, was interviewed in this city this week. He said:

"Holland, as is well-known, is all low land, the greater part of it lower than the sea. The water is kept off by dykes; you have another name here. Erected here and there on them are large windmills, that pump the water out when it inundates the land. They present a very strange appearance to an unaccustomed eye. We travel by canal boats like, I understand, was once done here."

"What is the soil like, that you are enabled to raise the finest bulbs?"

"The best in the world for bulb-growing—pure, sandy soil. The reason Holland bulbs are best is owing to the soil, temperature, and water, which is as pure as is possible. We have only to dig three feet—I believe you measure by feet here—to find water, not only in one place, but anywhere."

"How do you plant hyacinths to increase their number?"

"We first fertilize the soil, put about sixteen bushels of manure on each twelve feet square, then we take a hyacinth bulb and cut across the bottom several times, plant, and in June we lift. The one bulb will be divided into several small ones of perfect growth."

"When do you plant first?"

"In September. The great fogs from the sea drive the frost away, but we always cover the beds with weeds. We can not use straw, because then the mice destroy our bulbs."

"Are your winters as cold as here?"

"No; we are a great ways further north, yet our winters are not so severe. Probably the fogs help us some. Our summers are not so intensely hot as in this country."

"Are the hyacinths ready for sale after the first year?"

"No, no; I would they were. The first year they are planted close; the second year we must plant them in new soil, as they will not grow two years in the same ground. Every year each bulb gets more space, until five years elapse, when they are then ready to sell."

"What do you do with the ground you can not use a second year?"

"We plant some other species of flower, and at the same time enrich the soil. Thus we change their homes alternately, and can always utilize the ground. Bulbs have about sixteen different diseases, which I can not name in your language. This causes much trouble and loss of money. Sometimes the soil gets tired of the bulbs, and refuses to grow anything. We give it a time to rest, and then we dig up a depth of four feet, put on a double quantity of fertilizing matter, and after another short rest it is willing to start to work again. You know everything in life must have some time to rest, or it wears out, and is no good afterward."

"Tell me something about your tulips?"

"Well, I plant the bulbs the same as the others, only they do not need cutting, as they increase themselves by forming offshoots on the old ones. We separate those and replant. We oftimes grow from seed—that makes the work. From first planting it is four years until they bloom. The strange part is they all bloom a coffee-colored flower for a number of years, when suddenly they will bring forth some fine color, as those see who buy them. Thus we know what our bulb is. They never hold the coffee color, which is quite pretty, any longer than four years. This we are sure of, but what they will be in the end we know not until they show us. Crocuses are raised the same way. The three bulbs mentioned will grow nicely in water. For forcing I always use sandy loam, which is the best."

"How many varieties of tulips have you?"

"Three thousand—just 2,500 too many. I suppose there are more than that."

"What is your native place like?"

"The scenery is grand, elegant; I can't tell you in your language as I would like to. We have lovely trees like here, that is, the same kind. The land is perfectly level. Everybody grows bulbs—the laborer, tailor, shoemaker, as well as the florist. All the houses—some one-story, some two, and none higher—are built of brick. We build no pavements, but we never have any mud, and our roads are always dry and smooth, not full of hard cobblestones like here. In the principal bulb-growing district, my home—Sassenheim—you can see millions and millions of tulips, hyacinths, and crocuses in bloom at once. Their beautiful fragrance is wafted for miles around. On one acre will be planted about 100,000 bulbs. Can you imagine, then, looking over a dozen of acres in bloom, what a vast sea, fit for a paradise, it is? I wish I were able to describe in your talk the grandeur of it."

"What do you think of our country?"

"It is grand, it is grand! Good for a poor man—the rich man can get along anywhere. If I could not get along better than some at our place I would come to America. Our people dress very plain, live plain, and meat is the greatest luxury. Some men who work very hard have this fat rib meat; I think you call it bacon. I am really ashamed to tell you what wages they get. Three dollars per week is the average. Some get $4, and on rare occasions $1.25 and $1.50 per day is paid, but the ordinary laborer here gets twice as much as in our country.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Bivouac in a German Camp.

Hurrying forward, writes R. F. Zogbaum in Harper's Magazine, I reached our bivouac just as the troop was falling in for the evening prayer, although no tattoo had been beaten there, we being too near the enemy, and the music might have betrayed our whereabouts. Quietly our little force moved up in front of the fires, the guard standing to their arms. "Halt! Richt, euch!" and they stood there motionless in one solid, dark block, relieved strong against the bright light of the fires and columns of smoke and sparks rising almost straight upward to the black heavens. Out of the darkness came a short word of command, "Caps off for prayer!" and in solemn silence, with uncovered heads, the rough soldiers rendered thanks to the Almighty for His mercies.

Lighted candles, stuck in bottles or fastened to rough-hewn blocks of wood, were gleaming brightly on the plain pine boards of the improvised table under the mess tent, when, the men having been dismissed, the officers sat down for an hour's chat and smoke before turning in, and although our seats varied in shape and size from a mess chest to a folding camp chair, and the table appointments were of the simplest description, it would have been difficult to have found a merrier or more comfortable set of men than that of which our little party was composed. A handsome, soldierly lot of gentlemen, these German officers, treating one with the freedom of the camp, but with the well-bred courtesy of their class, and full of eager hospitality to the stranger from far-off America. Many were the questions asked about the land beyond the sea, where so many of their countrymen and their descendants had their homes; about France, where I had been living for a long time, and about Paris, where I still resided; about the French army, their life and habits. Then the yarns about the late war between the two countries, the suffering, the hardships, the fun and the fighting, the good wines, and the fair women of "sunny France"—yarns that made the youngsters of the mess envious of their elders and anxious to take part some day in a like (to them) glorious struggle. There was no boasting, no exultation of the victor over the vanquished, but the natural talk of soldiers over the adventures of a campaign the like of which has seldom been met with in history.

So the evening wore away in a pleasant chat until the major, our commandant, gave the signal for us to disperse; and we sought our beds.

Nearly Lost Saturday.

Last Saturday Ham Cherry arose in the morning, took a bath, put on his black suit, and after breakfast occupied himself reading sacred books. He told his folks that as it was so far to church, and as the off horse had galled his shoulder plowing, he guessed he would not drive thither. Everything was quiet and peaceable about, and Ham was glad there was a day left for man to rest and recuperate. But just after a late dinner a neighbor came along with a load of hay. Ham stepped to the door and called out:

"How is this, John, that you are working to-day? You should go to meeting."

"Hain't got no time to go to meeting on week days," answered John. "Sunday is all the time I can spare for church-going."

The man then drove on. Cherry stood and scratched his head meditatively a few moments, and then entered the house. He told his wife to take a pencil and check off the days.

"Less see—Monday I went to town. Got that down?"

"Yes."

"Tuesday I broke the colt. Wednesday I put up that fence down in the lower field. Thursday I killed the pig. Friday I licked the tramps. Saturd-a-y—Confound it, what did I do Saturday?" In just ten minutes after the above conversation Ham Cherry was holding up the whiffletree with one hand and driving his team down the lane toward the field on a sharp trot.—Aurora Blade.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Small-pox has caused two deaths at Burlington, Vt., and there are said to be several patients in the pest-house or in sequestered dwellings. The disease was carried directly from Montreal in the clothing of a convalescent.

The number killed by the railway collision near Jersey City is twelve. It is believed that five of the wounded will die. Thomas P. Pratt, the telegraph operator who it is claimed caused the disaster, has been arrested, and is held to await the action of the Coroner's jury.

The graveyard insurance companies of Pennsylvania have been succeeded by a new kind of enterprise, in which the policyholders are divided into classes of five hundred members each. Whenever a birth occurs in the family of a member, the other members in the class are assessed twenty-five cents each. This would give a fund of $125, $100 of which goes to the beneficiary and $25 to the company for collecting, etc.

The total exports of produce from New York last week were valued at $6,138,055.

Near Williamsport, Pa., two passenger trains collided, two employes being killed and several persons severely injured.

Malcolm Hay, recently First Assistant Postmaster General of the United States, died last week of consumption, at Pittsburgh, Pa.

An assignment has been made by Morton C. Warren, a lace importer of New York, who gave preferences for $106,000.

A miner at Plymouth, Pa., entered a dangerous portion of a mine with a naked lamp on his head, causing an explosion which killed one man and fatally burned fourteen others.

The Vanderbilt and Pennsylvania interests contemplate a reorganization of the Reading Railroad. Under the plan in view the debt is to be scaled down $50,000,000, and the stock assessed twenty per cent.

There is said to be an unprecedented emigration to the frontiers of Kansas and Nebraska from the vicinity of Hillsboro, Illinois, on account of several crop failures.

An alleged infernal machine—a piece of gas-pipe filled with powder—was found on the street-car track at St. Louis, a cap being so arranged that a car-wheel would explode the missile.

Thomas Whiteley and his wife, who had been married less than a week, were found dying in a room of a Lincoln (Neb.) hotel, having taken morphine, it is supposed, with suicidal intent. The woman may survive.

A frame house at No. 1,425 Wabash avenue, Chicago, fell to pieces while undergoing repairs. S. C. Gilmore, an engineer, was killed, and John Green was injured internally.

The Cincinnati Price Current states that the number of hogs handled by Western packers from March 1 to date is 4,375,000, against 3,780,000 last year. The movement at the principal points since March 1 is as follows:

Chicago	2,270,000	Indianapolis	170,000
Kansas City	736,000	Cedar Rapids	169,000
Milwaukee	204,000	Cleveland	132,000
St Louis	153,000	Cincinnati	114,000

WESTERN.

The brick cottage of Wm. S. Bates, in Vernon Park place, Chicago, was set on fire by the carelessness of a servant in using a gasoline stove. The frightened girl leaped the fence and was not found for hours. Mrs. Bates took her infant to the house of a neighbor, and returned alone to meet a horrible death. While Mr. Bates endeavored to extinguish the flames, his wife, two sons, and mother-in-law were suffocated, and their charred bodies were found by the firemen. Mr. Bates was picked up in the alley, seriously burned and bruised.

Casper Butz, the noted German revolutionist, died at Des Moines, from blood-poisoning, aged sixty years. He was a resident of Chicago before the war. He took an active part in the agitation against slavery. Later in life he was City Clerk of Chicago, and one of the Commissioners of the Illinois Penitentiary.

A difficulty has arisen at Eau Claire, Wis., owing to the closing of the schools by the Mayor and Board of Health, who feared a spread of diphtheria, thirty-four cases of which are reported. The School Board and school officers protest, and intend to prosecute the policemen who prevented pupils and teachers from entering the building.

Chicago elevators contain 12,698,364 bushels of wheat, 978,941 bushels of corn, 290,522 bushels of oats, 237,221 bushels of rye, and 87,886 bushels of barley—total, 14,292,931 bushels of all kinds of grain, against 9,268,102 bushels a year ago.

The people of Cleveland are greatly puzzled over the hermit life led by a German family of eight persons living on Brooker avenue. Not one of them has been outside the house in the daytime for eight years, and for most of that time they have paid no taxes. Sanitary officers found the place in good order and the children well dressed.

A mob of fifty men took from the jail at Winchester, Ill., F. H. Holler, charged with assaulting two ladies last June. The men shot him in the arm, when he escaped in the darkness.

Professor Edward S. Holden, of Wisconsin University, has been elected President of the University of California.

In a justice's court at Mattoon, Ill., the jury refused to award damages to a colored man for having been refused a shave by a negro barber.

A foot of snow is reported from nearly all parts of the peninsula of Michigan, blockading the railroads. There was a light fall at Galena and Monmouth, Ill.

Messrs. Alvin Hulbert and Willis Howe, of Chicago, have leased the Lindell Hotel at St. Louis for five years from Jan. 1st next, at a rental of $57,000 per annum.

In the criminal court at Indianapolis, a colored man named Harrison Tasker was arraigned for a criminal assault upon a German domestic named Helen Huendling. As the prisoner was being led out in irons, he was fatally shot by a young brother of the wronged girl.

At Fourth and Olive streets, St. Louis, Mr. A. J. Cooper, of Chicago, and certain other gentlemen propose to erect a ten-story structure that will surpass any building west of the Alleghenies. Mr. Stephen Hatch, the New York architect, has been intrusted with the plans. When constructed, the building will be occupied by a bank, Western Union Telegraph Company, safety deposit vaults, and the Jaccard Jewelry Company.

At Youngstown, Ohio, Mrs. Mary Muldoon reported to the police that she had been robbed of over $2,000, and that her fourteen-year-old son, Tom, was missing. Before midnight Tom was found in a shed asleep. His pockets were weighted down with silver, and $2,000 in bills found on his person. He was near the railroad, and it is supposed he was intending to leave the city. The money was restored to his mother, and the boy locked up.

A dispatch from Winchester, Ill., says that "Fred Homer, who was shot by a mob, has died of his wounds. When he was dressed for burial four shot wounds were found in his back. These wounds were not discovered by the physicians who attended him. He died protesting his innocence of the crime for which the mob killed him."

SOUTHERN.

In the vicinity of Somerville, Ala., after a quarrel in regard to the division of property, Wesley Hopper wound his left arm around James Edmonson, and deliberately cut his throat four times from ear to ear.

The death is reported from Baltimore of Capt. Alexander Haley, the only colored man who ever commanded a vessel in the ocean trade of this country. He was eighty-six years of age.

The fourteen Southern States report the expenditure of $52,386,000 within the present year in organizing mining and manufacturing enterprises, or enlarging old plants.

Squirrels are emigrating by millions from Mississippi to Arkansas, swimming the rivers in large bodies. A similar hegira took place in 1872.

By the explosion of a boiler in a sawmill at Ridgeville, S. C., three persons were killed and three others received a terrible scalding.

A party of about one hundred men took from the jail at Holly Springs, Mississippi, and hanged to a tree a man named Robert Doxey, who last August murdered his wife. While the lynching was in progress, Doxey's mother, partially dressed, came rushing to the scene, yelling like a maniac.

A mob surrounded a wooden building used as a jail in Murfreesboro, Ark., in which one Churchill, a murderer was confined. After saturating the structure with oil, they fired it, Churchill perishing in the flames. The victim made piteous appeals for mercy.

WASHINGTON.

A special dispatch from Washington to the New York Times says:

There is a rumor here that some of the Republican Senators have formed a sort of a combination to obtain complete information concerning the removals and appointments which the President has made, with a view to intelligent action when the appointments come before the Senate for confirmation. As an instance of how this matter is being handled, it is reported that a discharged Treasury employe of some prominence has just returned from the West with the information that Senator Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, is gathering the facts concerning the removal of Collector Jesse Spalding, and will take charge of the matter of the confirmation of Seeberger, Mr. Spalding's successor, when it comes before the Senate. The employe in question is looked upon as an agent for the combination.

Complete returns from every county in Ohio give Foraker a plurality of 17,688 over Hoadly.

Representatives of the dairy interest in the East and West are in consultation with the Commissioner of Agriculture regarding measures to prevent the sale of adulterated butter and cheese.

Statistics of the free postal delivery for the year place Chicago far ahead of every city except New York. The average cost of handling letters at Gloucester, Mass., was a half cent., while the service at Dallas, Tex., reached the cheapest point known.

An order from the Treasury Department prohibits the shipment of merchandise from Duluth (except for export) in Canadian vessels.

POLITICAL.

President Cleveland has made the following appointments:

Ernest P. Baldwin, of Missouri, to be Deputy First Auditor of the Treasury—Henry R. West, of Ohio, to be Indian Agent at the Fort Peck Agency in Montana—Samuel W. Langhorne, of Montana, to be Register of the Land Office at Helena, M. T.—Horatio S. Howell, of Montana, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Helena, M. T. Perry, resigned.

General Alexander R. Lawton, of Georgia, has been offered the mission to Austria. When Congress meets an application will be made for the removal of his political disabilities. Lawton was nominated Minister to Russia, but his name was withdrawn when it was discovered that he had never asked to have his disabilities removed.

The Republicans of Dakota, in convention at Huron, nominated the following State ticket: Governor, A. C. Millette; Lieutenant Governor, A. E. Frank; Secretary of State, H. S. Murphy; Auditor, Frank Alexander; Treasurer, D. W. Diggs.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Washington special to the New York Evening Post says of the Depew letter:

The statement of Mr. Chauncey M. Depew as to the relations between Gen. Grant and President Johnson has been read with the greatest interest by Col. Moore, Andrew Johnson's stenographic secretary, who is now the cashier of the Metropolitan Bank of this city. Col. Moore says that in his opinion Gen. Grant rested under a radical misapprehension as to the essential points in Mr. Depew's statement: First, the trip to Mexico; second, Johnson's relation to the Southern aristocracy. "As to the trip to Mexico, Col. Moore turned to the stenographic notes now in his possession of the correspondence between President Johnson and General Grant upon that subject, and he says that these notes show that Johnson, in tendering this mission to Mexico, whatever it was, to General Grant, stated that the latter would not be required to be absent from Washington longer than the meeting of Congress. This, Colonel Moore thinks, effectually disposes of this part of the story. As to the charge of Johnson's association with the Southern aristocracy, Colonel Moore says that from his personal observation no man could be freer from such an accusation; that he was emphatically a man of the people, and that his whole course in the White House refuted this charge.

A special to the Chicago Tribune from St. Louis says:

Gen. Sherman, when asked what he thought of the Depew letter in regard to Grant's charges against Andy Johnson, said that he knew all about the matter, but wouldn't tell what he knew for $1,000,000. He had known of the charges a long time, and had the documents all filed away in proper shape, but the time hadn't come yet to give them to the public. Whether the charges were true or not he would not say, only that Grant had made the charges, and that he had evidence concerning them which would be given to the world in proper time. Further the General would not speak. He thought it dreadful anything at all should have been published about it.

For the current quarter the Pacific Mail Directors have declared a dividend of 1½ per cent. The net earnings for the three months ended August 31 were $104,034.

FOREIGN.

War between England and Burmah seems almost certain.

Austria has asked Prussia to explain the expulsion of Austrian Poles.

The Folkthing of Denmark has rejected the budget by a large majority, and the ministry will be obliged to retire in consequence.

Mr. Parnell promises to bring a strong deputation of the Irish Parliamentary party to the annual convention of the National League in Chicago next January.

British troops in India whose term of service has expired have been retained to await the settlement of the dispute with King Theebaw of Burmah. An expedition to Rangoon with 10,000 men is being rapidly fitted out at Calcutta. France offers no objection to the movement.

The Chinese Government has decided to make haste in building railways throughout the empire, for which purpose a vast amount was recently borrowed in Europe.

The latest advices from Eastern Europe would seem to indicate that Servia is resolved on fighting for territorial aggrandizement. All newspaper men have been expelled from Nissa.

Louis Riel, on being notified of a respite to Nov. 10, was indignant because it was not a reprieve.

Cholera has swept away three thousand French soldiers in Tonquin this summer, and re-enforcements sent thither are only sufficient to make good the losses by disease.

A London Grand Jury has found a true bill against Mr. Stead, editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, and the other prisoners in the Armstrong case, for abduction, conspiracy, and indecent assault.

Mr. Ross Winans, who has gained notoriety by converting a part of Northern Scotland into a deer park, was mobbed and stoned last Sunday by brute Caledonians.

Prince Alexander has ordered out for immediate defensive service all the national militia of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. Thirty thousand men of the Greek reserves have been enrolled, and the people demand hostile action. The Greek Government announces that it cannot passively permit a union between Bulgaria and Roumelia. Russia has made preparations to land ninety thousand men in the Bulgarian seaport of Varna on a day's notice.

The Turkish frigate Iskenden has been dispatched to the Island of Crete with a force sufficient to repress a revolt.

The Pope is said to have decided to give Laval University at Quebec an importance equal to that of the American college at Rome, and ecclesiastics can then complete their theological studies on this side of the Atlantic.

An attempt to assassinate Estrupp, the Premier of the Danish Cabinet, was made at Copenhagen by a young compositor named Rasmussen, who fired two shots from a revolver, neither of which took effect, and was in the act of shooting a third time when seized by detectives.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

President Cleveland has appointed E. V. Long, of Indiana, to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico, to succeed Judge Vincent, removed. The following Federal appointments are also announced from Washington:

Robert P. Waring, to be Assayer and Melter at Charlotte, N. C.; George S. Savage, to be Collector of Customs for the district of Cherrystone, Va.; L. Q. Washington, of the District of Columbia, to be a commissioner to examine a section of railroad constructed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; S. J. Anderson, to be Collector of Customs at Portland, Me.; Louis K. Church, of New York, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota; Wm. W. Porter, of California, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona; Wm. H. Barnes, of Illinois, to be Associate Justice of the Territory of Arizona; John O. Shields, of Michigan, to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona; Israel Green, of Mitchell, D. T., to be agent for the Indians of the Sisseton Agency in Dakota; Wm. H. Bickford, Receiver of Public Moneys at Shasta, Cal.; Sylvester Hall, Register of the Land Office at Shasta, Cal.; Edward Hessinger, of New York, Consul at Beirut; Daniel W. Herring, of Tennessee, Consul at Teneriffa; C. H. Vinelin, Collector of Customs at Sag Harbor, N. Y.; James Tilton, Collector of Customs at Great Egg Harbor, N. J.; T. F. Donovan, Surveyor of Customs for the Port of Patchogue, N. Y.

A Cincinnati dispatch of Oct. 23 says: "The official count of the vote of Hamilton County has been completed, but is liable to change at the hands of the courts. The complexion of the Ohio Legislature hinges upon a decision in two cases. If given the five precincts in dispute, the Democratic legislative candidates will receive the certificates; if the Republicans win in the courts, they will have all the Representatives but one. The unofficial footings complete make Hoadly's plurality 686. Kennedy (Republican), for Lieutenant Governor, has a plurality of 734. M. F. Wilson has the highest vote for Senator on the Democratic ticket, 31,872, and Richardson the highest on the Republican ticket, 34,401. Hurdacre is the lowest on the Republican ticket, having 34,118, and Brashears, on the Democratic ticket, 31,584. For Representatives the variance is not so great, but the Democratic figures are all higher than the highest Republican vote."

Two daughters of Alexander R. Shepherd were married at Washington last week, the bridegrooms being Edward A. Quintard, of Tennessee, and Walter M. Brodie, of Mexico.

President Cleveland will not, it is said, recommend a transfer of the entire Indian service to the military authorities, but while preserving the civil system as to the immediate control, education, and civilization of the Indians will bring in the experience, integrity, and executive capacity of the army officers to provide and distribute food and supplies. This idea is substantially that it is cheaper to feed and cloth the Indian well than to fight him.

At a meeting of the directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company in New York Dr. Norvin Green was re-elected President, and Gen. L. T. Eckert General Manager. Col. Robert C. Clowry, of Chicago, was elected Vice President and made a member of the Executive Committee.

Rev. D. MacGregor has returned to Chicago from a tour of the Highlands and Islands of Scotland, made in behalf of the suffering crofters. He reports the people as imbued with a new determination to obtain their rights, and he finds the remedy for their grievances to be an enlargement of the crofts and a readjustment of the system of land tenure.

At New York, descendants of the Huguenots celebrated the bi-centenary of the revocation of the edict of Nantes, Mr. John Jay presiding. After an historic address by Prof. Henry M. Baird, Secretary Bayard offered a series of resolutions, setting forth the loss to France occasioned by the revocation; thanking God that the Huguenots came to America; hoping that France, with a more tolerant Christianity, would prosper among nations, and showing that separation of church and state was the only true policy of Christian countries.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Reading roller mills are turning out sixty-five barrels of flour per day.

—One ton of dumb-bells has been ordered for the students at Ann Arbor.

—Asa Fowles, one of the pioneers of Ontonagon, is dead, at Cleveland, Ohio.

—C. T. Barber is teaching his fiftieth consecutive term of school near Morenci.

—Warren Chipman, an actor, cut his throat at Flint. His family resides in San Francisco.

—As high as $26 per month has been offered at St. Ignace for men to work in the woods.

—A lady connected with the St. John's apple-drying furnace, pares and cores fifty bushels of apples a day.

—Grand Rapids Universalists will pay off all their debts this year, and will build a new edifice next year.

—An even dozen of Bay City cabbageheads weighed 161 pounds; the same number of Saginaw early growth weighed 240 pounds.

—There are 969 school children in Traverse City, and $17,000 has been invested there in school buildings. The high school is to cost $20,000.

—A Grand Rapids M. D. claims to have bills out for medical attendance which will aggregate over $100,000, which he never expects to collect.

—A Lansing man recently sold some of the deer in his private park. One of them, a fine buck, was frightened to death while they were catching him, and died while they were tying his feet.

—A Reading farmer claims to have raised seven squashes whose aggregate weight was 600 pounds. The largest one weighed 107. A radish weighing two pounds and thirteen ounces also hails from the same place.

—Lieutenant Brownell, who avenged the death of Colonel Ellsworth in 1861 by killing Jackson, the assassin hotel proprietor, was in Tecumseh recently. Lieutenant Brownell served through the war, and is now connected with the Pension Bureau.

—A Hungarian was stabbed to death at Iron Mountain, and two men whom he had ejected from a wedding feast were arrested for the crime. A mob invaded the jail after midnight, intending to lynch the accused persons, but departed after beating them with their fists in a vigorous manner.

—E. F. Ray, of Coldwater, is doing a lively business in the poultry line. He has twenty-seven teams on the road gathering fowls, and has twenty hands in his packing-house. About seven thousand, weighing in the neighborhood of twenty-eight thousand pounds, are killed, dressed, packed, and shipped each week.

—Joel Osborn, a saloon-keeper of Trenton, near Detroit, was shot dead in the street by an unknown assassin who approached him from behind. Ed Flaherty has been arrested on suspicion. Flaherty's wife recently applied for a divorce. It is alleged Flaherty accused Osborn of alienating her affections and had made threats against him.

—At the beginning of the war Phil Sheridan was ordered to Michigan to buy horses for the cavalry. Governor Blair became acquainted with the horse-buyer and made him Colonel of the Third Michigan Cavalry. Six weeks later he was at the head of all the cavalry in Halleck's army and leading a raid to break up the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

—The decrease in the receipts from the State Fair this year shows the usual encroachment upon the surplus of the society accumulated by exhibitions in Detroit, which will soon render it necessary for the fair to be held one or two years in this city in order to recruit its finances again. Detroit is "the old man" to whom the prodigal and speculative young hopeful looks to make good the losses when he goes skylarking around the State with his show and wasting his substance in the smaller towns and cities.—Free Press.

—The Adrian Record publishes the following joke on itself: If there is anything that an editor dislikes it is one thing more than another. Especially is it discomforting to have a man of whom he has written a touching obituary rise up and pronounce the statement a falsehood. Recently the Record noted in tender language the demise of Uncle Billy Talmage, an old fiddler well known about Woodstock. Now comes Uncle Billy himself and pronounces the statement "a —— lie." Well, perhaps the old man may know more about it than we do, but we can tell him one thing—the Record is a very reliable newspaper, and we caution him not to be too positive in disputing its statements.

—At the Arctic Restaurant, a thieves' resort in Detroit, there was a desperate fight between the police and a gang of burglars they were after. The place had long been under surveillance, and officers were detailed to raid the place and capture all who could be found. Over the saloon is a poker-room, and in this were several burglars, who offered resistance. The doors were burst open, but the officers were driven back. With the help of part of the force who were without the building the men were finally forced out of the room. They came out with loaded revolvers, but were received in like manner by the officers, the latter shooting two of the gang, one of them fatally.

REPUBLICANISM.

A Correspondent Gives Numerous Examples of the Rottenness, Jobbery, and Thefts of the Republican Party.

[From the Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The leaders of the Republican party evidently think it the thing to "assume a virtue" if they have it not. The Indianapolis Journal joins in the chorus of the outcry that President Cleveland has ransacked the jails and penitentiaries to find men to fill the appointive offices in the Government. Every person who receives an appointment under the administration is at once assailed as a corruptionist in politics or as a criminal. No correction of the lie ever is given a place in their partisan columns. Is an investigation of the official conduct of Republican office-holders proposed, the editors of Republican organs fly into a rage, as if a Republican could do no wrong. They are too pure to have their official records laid open to the world. These party organs have even been so shameless as to attack Democratic soldiers whose wounds have resulted in almost total disability for drawing a pension. After reading their editorial screeds one would come to the conclusion that a Democrat had no rights in this country worthy of respect.

Let the story of the corruption, and fraud, and public robbery of the Republican party be told. The reminder should cause its leaders to blush with shame—if they are capable of such an emotion—and to silence the blatant and loud-mouthed party editors.

Nearly seventy-five per cent. of the customs revenue is collected at the New York Custom House. As a vast army was employed there, it was a powerful political machine to control elections in that State. That machine has its influence upon the whole country, and was always felt in a Presidential campaign. So scandalous had its management become under Republican administration that an investigating committee was appointed to examine into its conduct. From a statement furnished by General Arthur, then Collector of the Port, and President Cleveland's immediate predecessor in the White House, it is shown that the cost of collecting the revenues was more than four times as great as in Germany, nearly five times as great as in Great Britain, and more than three times as great as in France, the percentage of cost being in the United States 1.33.

The investigation showed, and it was so reported by the committee, that inebriety and bribe-taking by men employed in the custom-house was not uncommon, and Surveyor Sharpe declared that the law against bribery was a "dead letter." It was also shown that the loss in collection was from $36,000,000 to $70,000,000 annually. Mr. Isaac D. Block, Chief Clerk of the Mint, testified before the Commission that complaints had been made against two clerks, and that instead of having been dismissed and published, they were transferred to another department with increase of pay. Such were the methods adopted for the punishment of bribe-takers in Government employ.

Gen. Sharpe, Surveyor of the Port, testified as follows: "I had a letter within the last two weeks from a gentleman holding a high official position, in regard to an officer whom he knew to have been dropped three times from the service for cause. He had also been to see me for him and admitted that he had been engaged in defrauding the revenue, and yet he writes me requesting his appointment."

A high Republican office-holder indorsing a man for appointment in the Custom House whom he knew to be a thief! Wonderful, is it not? Yet this is the sworn statement of Gen. Sharpe, the Republican Surveyor, and Gen. Grant's brother-in-law. Any man who would agree to contribute funds for election purposes could easily secure a place in the Republican partisan machine officially called the New York Custom House.

In a letter on the violations of law by the acceptance of bribes and complicity in frauds, Naval Officer Cornell ingeniously said: "The clerks are but human, and whenever there is a coincidence of temptation, frailty and opportunity, there can be but one result." How touchingly the Republican Naval Officer extenuates the shortcomings of "the boys."

If we recall the whisky ring, the "high official leaders" of which escaped punishment by the removal of honest attorneys for the Government and putting in their places the supple tools of the corruptionists; the band of public plunderers that fattened in Washington for years upon jobs; the fact that the Postmaster at Galveston was removed to make room for a man who had been expelled from the House of Representatives for fraud; that Boss Shepard, branded as a public swindler, was appointed Commissioner of the District of Columbia; that honest and capable men like Bristow were driven from the Cabinet because they refused to sanction the appointment of men proved to have been corrupt, and we marvel that such papers as the Indianapolis Journal, which indorsed all these things, has the effrontery to shriek so loudly about the moral unfitness of the appointees of the present administration. These things attracted the attention of the old world, and were condemned by the ablest and purest periodicals of Europe.

The testimony of a Republican Senator, who also had been a member of a Republican Cabinet, ought to be conclusive. In the impeachment of Gen. Belknap as Secretary of War Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, said:

I have seen five Judges of a high court of the United States driven from office by threats of impeachment for corruption and maladministration. I have heard the taunt from friendliest lips that when the United States presented herself in the East to take part with the civilized world in generous competition in the arts of life, the only product in which she surpassed all others beyond question was her corruption. I have seen in the State in the Union foremost in power and wealth four Judges of her courts impeached for corruption. I have seen the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House rise in his place and demand the expulsion of four of his associates for making sale of their official privilege of selecting the youths to be educated at our great military schools.

Referring to the Credit Mobilier swindle, in which so many virtuous and honest Republicans were entrapped (?)—poor, innocent souls!—Senator Hoar said:

When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together this continent and uniting the two seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two in the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud. I have heard in the highest places the shameless doctrine avowed by men long in public life, that the true way in which power should be gained in the republics is to bribe the people with the offices created for their service; and that the true end for which it should be used when gained is the promotion of selfish ambition and the gratification of personal revenge. I have heard that suspicion haunts the footsteps of the trusted companions of the President.

I have not gone outside the record in presenting the summary of facts herewith. If there be any who can consistently palliate, excuse, or condone the rottenness, the jobbery, the thefts, and the peculations of the Republican party when in the zenith of its power, they surely ought not to be shocked by anything the present administration has done. The corruption and deviltry of Republican rule could not be reproduced, as it never has been equaled.

RAYBURN.

LAFAYETTE, Ind.

VIRGINIA COLORED MEN.

They Withdraw from the G. O. P., and Praise the New Administration.

The following address was adopted at the recent State convention of the colored men of Virginia, held at Lynchburg:

WHEREAS, We, the colored people of Virginia, believing as we do, the time has come for us to call a halt in the unqualified support we have given the Republican party, do here in convention assembled solemnly declare ourselves politically independent in all matters which pertain to us as citizens and voters of this commonwealth. We have for twenty-five years adhered to our former political associates with unparalleled fidelity, because in those dark days of reconstruction the Republican party proved that it was the only party to which the colored man of the South could consistently ally himself. To that end colored voters nobly responded, and raised to place and power men who grew wealthy while administering the laws of the United States Government in the Southern States. We feel ever grateful for what has been done, but now the time has come for us to think, act, vote, and speak for ourselves, and especially so since the Republicans have practically abandoned us in former campaigns, and in all matters where the negro ought to have had recognition in proportion to voting strength and intelligence. We know, too, that many of our race have been murdered in the Southern States, but the causes which led to these sad occurrences which have spilled our blood and created the bitter race antagonism which now retards our progress and makes it difficult for us to live in the land of our birth are largely traceable to mismanagement by Federal office-holders in our section. These foregoing reasons lead us to adopt such methods and so conduct ourselves as to make friends of those whose interests are identical in every way with our own. We, therefore, appeal to the colored people of our native State to look well to the altered conditions of affairs, and in the future make such political alliances as will advance our interests educationally, financially and politically. We feel sure that there is throughout the broad limits of the commonwealth a general disposition on the part of the white people to accord us all our rights before the law, and to meet us heartily in every advance we make for the upholding of our people. It behooves us then to so use our ballots that we may draw out all discordant elements in Virginia, whether they be headed by natives or aliens of the State. We also condemn the raising of the race issue by any class of men who essay to lead the masses, because it can do nothing but prove detrimental to our cause and our interests. We, therefore, ask the hearty co-operation of our people in Virginia to the success of our movement. We have cause to be thankful for the liberality of the present national administration to our people in the South. We also believe our relations to the State debt are such as to justify us in hoping that Virginia will be relieved from financial embarrassment by aid from the Federal Government, which will enable her to provide for all the material interests of her citizens, and bring about that universal good feeling which ought to exist between the two races.

The New York Mugwumps.

The Democratic papers in New York unite in the assurance that there is nothing surprising in the support by the "Mugwumps" of that State of the Republican nominees for State officers. What is surprising is that such an assurance should be thought necessary. It has been the persistent claim of the "Mugwumps" that their support of Cleveland was not opposition to Republicanism but to Blaine. They have insisted steadfastly that they were as good Republicans as ever in respect to any and all party issues. It was a moral certainty, therefore, that at the first opportunity they would resume their relations with the Republican party; and with a candidate to whom no Republican can fairly take exception it would have been very surprising if they had not renewed their allegiance. If they were to do otherwise they would throw a doubt upon the honesty and good faith of the professions they made in cutting loose from Blaine.

The Iowa Republicans.

The Republican platform in Iowa is a most remarkable document. The State has a population of 1,750,000, an assessed valuation of $298,000,000, farms valued at $567,000,000, with an annual farm production of $136,000,000; over 7,000 manufacturing establishments, with a capital of $34,000,000 and upward, a product of $71,000,000, and an annual outlay of $10,000,000 for wages; an immense product of bituminous coal, and some lead. Yet with all this variety and magnitude of State interests there is scarcely anything, according to the Republican Convention, that is of any importance but the appointment of "a State Board of Arbitration for the adjustment and settlement of disputes between labor and capital, including the question of screening coal, and other peculiar mining interests of the State."

Judging by its platform, the issues which the party regards as of burning and overshadowing importance in Iowa are those "growing out of the war for the Union." They invite people to vote for the Republican candidate because of "the adhesion of the Democratic party to the doctrine of State's rights, as evidenced by the character of the diplomatic appointments made by Cleveland;" because it is important that there should be "such modification of the pension laws as shall secure equal treatment to all soldiers entitled to pensions;" because "the old-world theory of classes is abhorrent to the American mind;" because we need "closer commercial intercourse with all nations;" and "the increase of American shipping by all practical means."

What bearing the election or defeat of a Republican candidate for Governor in Iowa can have on these questions or results the platform does not indicate. It would puzzle its framer very much to show that a Republican Governor, if elected, is likely to affect "the character of the diplomatic appointments made by Cleveland;" or that a Republican Legislature will modify the pension laws or abrogate the old-world theory of classes.

They are not likely, however, to puzzle themselves with the attempt to make any such showing. The platform was not framed with any such idea. It was framed simply and solely as it shows in every instance and every line to arouse and inflame the partisan feeling and rekindle, if possible, the sectional animosity and bitterness of the war time. Like the platform of the Ohio Republicans, it is an appeal to passion and not to reason.

In every intelligent aspect, such a platform is a mistake. It is so from the purely partisan point of view. The ashes of the rebellion have been dead and cold too long for any hope of revival even in Iowa. The attempt to revive them is a lamentable confession of inability to come before the people with any real claim to their confidence and support. With the dying message of Grant still ringing in their ears the people of Iowa cannot be excited into a wordy renewal of the conflict so long ago fought out and finished. Ten years ago such a platform might have been acceptable to tolerably rabid partisans. To-day it is an anachronism.—Detroit Free Press.

Monopolies Are Foes of the People.

The Democracy has always been the protector, and the only protector of the people against monopolies and all such foes, so constant and insidious.

The Republicans, conspicuous for so much that is bad, are marked throughout their career for fostering monopolies of every species—of railroads, by immense grants of the people's land and money; of herders, by connivance at immense seizures by them of the people's land; of manufacturers, by exorbitant tariff for their special benefit; of Government ship-building, by giving all contracts therefor to John Roach, etc.

The Democracy has been reinstated in power but a few months, and yet see how rapidly progresses the removal of those intolerable grievances so long heaped upon the people by the Republicans, while proclaiming devotion to the people's interests.

It took a Democrat to throttle that dangerous monopoly, the United States Bank; it takes a Democrat to throttle these dangerous monopolies fixed on the people by the Republicans. Throttle them all the Democrats must and will.

Such resolute boarding of audacious and gigantic monopolists as recently exemplified by our Democratic President would be worthy of Old Hickory himself. It is a splendid exhibition of courageous fidelity to the people, and will live in history side by side with that which made Old Hickory so famous for moral as well as military courage.

If the people should derive no other benefit from Democratic administration than this throttling of Republican monopolies, it would be enough; would justify their confidence in restoring Democratic ascendency, and their determination to maintain it. But this benefit is only the initial of good to be wrought by the Democracy.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

RAILROAD HORROR.

Collision Between Southern and Western Trains Near Jersey City.

Six People Instantly Killed and a Large Number Seriously Wounded.

[Jersey City (N. J.) dispatch.]

When the fast express on the Pennsylvania Railroad, leaving Jersey City at 8:15 to-night, rounded the curve near the Meadow coal bridge, about five miles out, the engineer saw through the thick fog the outlines of a car on the track only a few hundred feet ahead. The express was running at the rate of forty-five miles an hour. The engineer applied the air-brakes as quickly as he could and whistled the danger signal, but his attempt was in vain. The engine struck the car with terrific force, telescoping it and throwing the fragments in every direction.

The panting engine had scarcely stopped when the train bound east, leaving Newark on the Lehigh Valley Road at 8:10, dashed into the forward end of the immigrant. Engineer Owen Hall, peeping through the fog, saw the wreck. He did everything in his power to stop his train on its death-bearing course, but it was too late. With an awful crash the Newark train rushed upon the overturned car and was thrown down the embankment. Over and over rolled the cars of human freight, and upon the night air rose the horrible shrieks of the dying. Dark outlines of the train lying wrecked in the valley, and the cars rolling one on top of the other, presented a ghastly picture.

When the shock had passed the dazed passengers left the trains as best they could and huddled together, too startled to speak. The first to recover was the engineer of the Jersey City train. He gathered the frightened people together and ordered them to render all possible assistance to the injured. All this time the cries of those wholly or partially covered by the wreck made the unmjured turn pale with terror. The engineer and his willing assistants were powerless to aid some of the poor creatures, while their united efforts were sufficient to drag some of the bruised from under the wreck. When the first wounded man was taken from the debris everybody cried for a physician, but in the whole crowd of willing workers not one physician could be found. At 9:30 o'clock a relief train was sent to the wreck from Jersey City, loaded with doctors, reporters, beds, food, etc.

As the relief train neared the scene of the disaster crowds of men and women could be seen through the heavy mist returning on foot to the city. When the medical staff reached the wreck the scene was indeed heartrending. Mixed in a huge mass lay the two trains, while for hundreds of feet around was piled timber of all shapes. Beside the track lay the Jersey City train. The engine was tipped over the right embankment, and in a long, grotesque line behind it lay the derailed cars. To the left of this train, reduced to a mass of splinters, were the remains of what appeared to be an immigrant caboose. The car was shivered to atoms and underneath lay some of the mangled bodies of the dead and dying.

Stretchers were immediately furnished by the relief train, and the injured and dead were carried into the baggage car. It was a horrible sight. The first body to be removed was the headless trunk of a woman. The feet and limbs, with the clothing torn completely from them, protruded from the splinters of the caboose. Strong hands soon cleared the debris from above the mangled form, and it was taken to the car. The next was the form of a man with his head torn completely from his body. Then followed two or three men who were buried completely out of sight under the dead bodies of their companions. They were bruised and broken, and completely saturated with blood. They were moaning pitifully, but subsequently recovered sufficiently to give their history. During all this time the passengers who had escaped kept up their search for the bodies of their friends.

It soon appeared that the only ones injured were from the emigrant caboose, which lay splintered between the engine of the Jersey City train and the last cars of the Lehigh Valley. All attention, therefore, was being bestowed on the emigrants, when low moans were heard coming from under the engine of the Lehigh train. The eager rescuers rushed quickly down the embankment, and there lay the insensible form of Owen Hall, the engineer of the wrecked train. His legs were held down by the heavy framework of the massive engine. Willing hands soon relieved the poor fellow, and his injuries were attended to. In a few moments groans were heard from the Lehigh wreck again, and the bleeding face of Fireman Stewart Bowers could be seen through the long meadow grass in which lay the engine truck. His skull was fractured, and the blood trickled down his upturned face. With difficulty he was dragged to the relief car, and it was found that he had sustained internal injuries. The poor fellow exhibited wonderful energy and pluck. He sat up during the examination, groaning terribly, but thoroughly conscious of his surroundings.

The people known to be dead are described as follows:

An unknown man about forty years of age. His head was completely torn from his body, and both his arms were broken.

Unknown woman about twenty-five years of age. Her head was severed from her neck, and her body was covered with bruises.

Unknown boy about twelve years of age. Both his legs were broken and his skull was fractured.

Unknown girl about eighteen years old. Her skull was fractured.

Ulena Arenoas, 35 years of age; on her way to her father at Madison, Wis. Both her legs were broken and her skull was fractured. She was brought to the depot alive, but died five minutes after reaching St. Francis Hospital.

The wounded are:

Marinus Klinger, head and body bruised.

Christian Wyagbretsen, of Holdstadt.

E. V. Urberoth, conductor of the emigrant train, arm broken.

Stewart A. Bowers, fireman of the Lehigh Valley train, South Easton, Pa., scalp wound.

Owen Hall, engineer of the Lehigh Valley train, Easton, Pa., 35 years, fracture of the foot and bruises.

Three men were taken to St. Francis Hospital unconscious.

Ralph Curry, 23, internal injuries.

Christian G. Bolsted, bound for Minneapolis, Minn.

Laura Redesen, intending to join her husband at Norwood, Iowa; will die.

It is impossible now to obtain a full list of the wounded.

FIGHTING A PRESIDENT.

[New York telegram.]

The Hon. Chauncey M. Depew has furnished to the press the following open letter to Col. F. D. Grant:

NEW YORK, Oct. 12, 1885.

MY DEAR COLONEL: In answer to your request for the particulars of the conversation I had with your father, and to which I alluded in a speech before the Chamber of Commerce, the following is my best recollection:

About four years ago I sat beside Gen. Grant at dinner. There were many courses, slowly served, and the entertainment lasted several hours. We discussed many matters suggested by his trip around the world, and among other things he said to me that when in China Prince Kung, who was Regent and real ruler during the minority of the Emperor, told him of their controversy with Japan. War was about to be declared, and the Prince thought it would be a long and bloody one, and asked General Grant if he would act as arbitrator. The General declined for want of time, but principally because he was a private person and had no power to enforce his decision. He suggested, however, the terms of compromise. When in Japan shortly after, the Mikado's Ministers told him their side of the trouble, and revealed the fact that several of the European Governments were actively stirring up the strife on both sides, hoping to benefit by the war. The same request was made to him on the part of the Japanese Government—to act as arbitrator—and in again declining he stated the substance of the compromise he had advised for China. The two nations adopted substantially the terms proposed by General Grant, and a disastrous conflict was averted.

The conversation drifted into a consideration of his relations with President Andrew Johnson. The narrative of this period was one of the most graphic to which I ever listened, and it is unfortunate for history and posterity that it cannot be preserved as it was told. It had the local coloring of conversations with, and statements made by, the chief actors, and of the situations of parties and persons as the events occurred, invaluable as a portraiture and estimate of the times. I said in my address that Gen. Grant performed services to his country which were unwritten quite as important as any that were recorded, and I think this narrative will bear me out. This is the substance of the story:

Johnson began, the day after the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, to loudly proclaim at all times and places, with constant reiteration, the shibboleth, "Treason is odious and must be punished, and the chief rebels shall be hanged." To give effect to this sentiment, as soon as he was inaugurated he insisted upon the United States Courts in Virginia finding indictments against all the leading members of the Confederacy. He also wanted the officers in the rebel army who had left the regular army to join the rebellion to be summarily dealt with by court-martial. These movements of the President produced the greatest consternation throughout the South. The Confederate leaders appealed to Grant to protect them on the parole he had given. He saw Johnson on the subject, only to be informed that the President was by the Constitution commander-in-chief of the army, and that anything done by the commanding General on the field was done subject to his approval or rejection, and he rejected the terms. General Grant urged that the rebels had surrendered on these conditions, disbanded their organizations, submitted universally to the situation, and were carrying out in good faith their part of the agreement, and every consideration of both honor and expediency demanded equally good faith on the part of the Government. The other course would have led to an endless guerilla warfare, conducted in a country admirably adapted for it by desperate and hopeless men. Johnson obstinately adhered to his view, and assumed the authority of commander, when Grant flatly told him that if there were to be any courts-martial one must be called to try General Grant first; that he would by every means in his power protect his parole and appeal to Congress and the country. In the halt called by this attitude of General Grant a very remarkable change occurred in the views and policy of President Johnson. General Grant discovered that the most frequent and favored visitors to the White House were the men whom the President had proscribed. In the General's opinion Johnson's loyalty was subordinate to, if not entirely dependent upon, his entire enmity to the slaveholding oligarchy. He was a poor white, had been a journeyman tailor, and, notwithstanding the distinguished public positions he had held, he could not break through the class barrier, and was treated socially with contempt by this proud aristocracy. When they plunged into rebellion he saw his opportunity. He believed in the power of the Government, and thought that the time had come when he could defeat his enemies, confiscate their property, humiliate their pride, and possibly destroy them.

The absorbing ambition and passion of his life had been to be received and treated as one of them by the oligarchy. Having failed in that and suffered insult and indignity in the effort, he became one of the most vindictive of men. He saw them foiled in their rebellion, defeated and impoverished, and now he wanted to kill them. While he was devising means to overcome General Grant's resistance to this last purpose, the leaders of the old tendalism called upon him. They admitted their former treatment and justified it. They said that in all ages and countries where caste distinctions existed, conditions were always possible which promoted men who had achieved success from the lower into the noble order. As President of the United States, he became, regardless of birth and ancestry, not only a member of their order, but its leader. Johnson was wild with delight; ambition and pride were both satisfied. He became as anxious to sustain and perpetuate in some form a system which had given the highest social and political distinction to a few great families as he had been to destroy it. Grant did not have long to wait for the formulation of his plan. The President sent for him, and said that the radical measures of Congress were revolutionary and would destroy the country. The war was over, and the Republic wanted peace, and that was possible only by a union of all sections. The provisional governments provided for the seceded States were temporary expedients without constitutional authority, and the States had all the rights and should possess all the powers they had before the war. He had perfected a scheme to accomplish this result, and with Gen. Grant's assistance its success was assured. He would by proclamation direct the rebel States to send to Washington their full quota of Senators and Representatives. He had assurances from enough members from the North who, united with them, would make a quorum of one house at least, if not both. The Congress thus formed he would recognize and install at the Capitol. If the other Northern members did not choose to join, they would be a powerless rump meeting in some hall. To the General's suggestion that this would start the Civil War afresh, the President replied: "They who do it will be the rebels, but if you sustain me, resistance will be impossible."

He appealed to Grant to stand by him in the crisis and they would be the saviors of the Republic. After endeavoring for a long time in vain to convince the President of the folly of such a course and its certain failure, no matter who sustained it, Grant finally told him that he would drive the Congress so constituted out of the Capitol at the point of the bayonet, give possession of the building to the Senators and Representatives from the loyal States, and protect them. If necessary, he would appeal to the country and to the army he had so recently mustered out of service.

Shortly afterward the President sent for Gen. Grant, and said to him that the relations of our Government with Mexico were very delicate, and he wished him to go to the City of Mexico at once on a very important mission. The General knew that this was to get him out of the country, and put it in the power of the President to call, as his successor to Washington, some officer upon whom he could rely. He replied that if the appointment was a diplomatic one he declined it; if it was a military one he refused to obey, because the General of the army could not be ordered to a foreign country with which we are at peace. The interview was a stormy one, but the subject was dropped.

One day the General was sent West on a tour of inspection. He knew that Gen. Sherman was to be his successor, and in him he had absolute confidence. The outspoken loyalty of that great soldier prevented the project ever being renewed.

It is at this date needless to speculate upon what might have happened had Gen. Grant actively assisted or passively obeyed the President. No one doubts the courage or obstinacy of Andrew Johnson, and only a man of equal firmness and determination could have prevented a most calamitous and unfortunate strike at the most critical period of the reconstruction of the republic. Yours very truly,

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

Democratic Newspaper Postmasters.

That there is a keen appreciation by the administration of political affairs in Michigan is apparant from the appointments made every little while by President Cleveland and Postmaster General Vilas of those connected with democratic newspapers. The Herald can recall quite a number of the appointments already made in Michigan, and without exception they do honor to the administration and to the democracy. Hon. A. P. Swineford, of the Marquette Mining Journal, was made governor of Alaska, and is now discharging his duties. D. R. Waters, of the Grand Rapids Leader, will commence the duties of United States marshal for the western district on the first of November. Among the appointments of postmasters in their respective cities are Col. Geo. P. Sanford, late of the Lansing Journal; Maj. W. W. VanAntwerp, of the Jackson Patriot; Willard Stearns, of the Adrian Press; Andrew J. Shakespeare, of the Kalamazoo Gazette; M. Lacy, of the Marshal Expounder; W. T. B. Schemerhorn, of the Hudson Gazette; and Charles J. Strang, of the Charlevoix Journal; while L. D. Sale, formerly of the Detroit Free Press and one of the best newspaper men and democratic orators in Michigan, is now librarian at the patent office in Washington. The appointments already made, and others to follow, are wise ones, and fitting under the circumstances. Michigan has for many years been kept in the republican column by its system of organized federal patronage and support from the "machine." For a democratic paper to hold its own against an opulent republican editor backed by tax sales, nine times out of ten by republican county patronage, and in a majority of places the editor himself ensconsed in the postoffice, has been the severest kind of a task, and more often resulted in failure than success. To this might be added the jeers and scoffings of the seemingly perpetual majority party, with social ostracism predominating; and the county democratic editor endeavoring with each succeeding election to rally the scattered and discouraged forces, and giving freely of his time and scanty means to the cause of democracy; and in many cases having to charge to profit and loss a part or perhaps the whole of his printing bill—truly the life of the democratic editor in Michigan has not been all sunshine for a quarter of a century. But the clouds are breaking away, and the appointments already made indicate that the democratic press in Michigan has a warm spot in the heart of the people's administration.—Big Rapids Herald.

Evidences of Fusion Harmony in Northern Michigan.

Washington, October 21.—Hon, C. S. Hampton returns home to-morrow well pleased with the result of his visit to Washington. He states that he has received satisfactory assurances from the powers that be that Philip B. Wachtel will be appointed postmaster at Petoskey within two or three weeks. Mr. Vilas was impressed by the strength of Mr. Wachtel's indorsements, which include prominent state leaders in addition to the solid local democracy, and promised to take up the case as soon as the president has finished filling the vacancies he is now working upon. Mr. Hampton says that the settlement of this case shows the harmonious manner in which the fusionists of northern Michigan are arranging the difficult question of patronage. There were several deserving applicants for the Petoskey postoffice, including Col. Isaac Toll, a popular and leading democrat, but realizing that Mr. Wachtel had the best claims and the strongest backing the others cheerfully gave way to him.

Notes and News.

Mr. Cleveland has written a short democratic letter to a democrat. In it he signifies his desire for Gov. Hill's election by sending his check for $1,000 to aid it. This is not a political assessment. No one asked Mr. Cleveland for the money as Garfield begged of Brady. It is a voluntary contribution, made for the purpose of accomplishing a much desired object. Money talks.—World.

John C. Shields, formerly of Lansing has been appointed chief justice of Arizona vice Summer Howard removed. The appointment gives universal satisfaction in Michigan.

Robert Bonner, the owner of Maud S. and the New York Ledger, began life as a type-setter, without friends or influence; but with a determination to succeed he finds himself now at sixty odd, the possessor of one of the best paying newspaper properties in the world, and a fortune of between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000.

There will be a special election held in Harbor Springs, November 5th. to vote on bonding the town for $5,000, to erect a building to be used for a town hall, court house, and county offices. Petoskey tried to capture the county seat by offering the board of supervisors to provide suitable rooms for court house and county offices free of rent. The Harbor Springs people made an offer to erect a new building for the purpose free of rent, and they want the $5,000 with which to do it.

Report of the County Clerk.

The following is a brief abstract of some of the principal items contained in the report referred to last week as having been rejected by the board of supervisors, and not heretofore published in this paper:

During the year ending Oct. 10, $4,549.59 were drawn from the county treasurer for all purposes on vouchers issued by the clerk.

At the January session the board of supervisors audited bills to the amount of $260.48; at the special, May 22, $882.85; June 12, $314.73; total $1,458.06.

Total number of cases entered on the circuit court calendar since Jan. 1, 18; number in behalf of the people, 7; amount of county fees for filing 11 cases, $22.

The old court house and lot was rented to Jos. Stevens for two years, for $50 per year. One year's rent was paid in advance, and paid to the county treasurer.

From Jan. 1 to Oct. 10, 14 marriages were reported to the county clerk. In the year ending Dec. 31, 1884, 172 births and 87 deaths were reported to the clerk for this county.

From Jan. 1 to Oct. 10, 55 aliens filed declarations to become citizens.

COSTS OF THE CIRCUIT COURT.

Last February term contained 32 cases on the calendar, as follows: Criminal 3, issue of fact 9, issue of law 6, chancery first class 6, second class 5, fourth class 3. Expenses of term as follows: Paid jurors $243.60, paid witnesses $26.85, sheriff and deputies attending court $36.75, printing calendar $15, total $322.10.

May term 26 cases as follows: Criminal 1, issue of fact 11, appeal from justice court 5, chancery first class 5, second class 3, fourth class 1. Expenses of term: Paid jurors $259.70, paid witnesses $21.90, sheriff and deputies attending court $74.70, printing calendar $15; total $371.30.

To Check Bleeding.

The natural process by which bleeding is stopped is the formation of a blood clot which plugs the orifice of the divided vessel. When an artery is divided the cut end retracts or shrinks so that the formation of clot is facilitated, but the blood current is so strong, unless loss of much blood has diminished the force of the circulation, that it hinders the coagulation. It should, therefore, be the aim of an assistant to check or stop the flow of blood from the artery in order that the beginnings of clot-formation may not be swept away by the current. This may be accomplished by pressing upon the orifice of the vessel in the wound, or by pressing the edges of the wound firmly together, or, in cases where this is not easy and efficient, by compressing the artery which supplies the part from which the hemorrhage is taking place in some part of its course between the heart and the injury. The main arteries supplying the head lie in the neck, one on each side of the windpipe, where their pulsations may be readily felt. In case of a wound of an artery in the neck the cut ends of the vessel should be compressed with the finger, if possible, or the artery, both below and above the wound, should be pressed firmly backward against the backbone. Unless skilled surgical aid can be speedily obtained, there is little hope of saving life in case these great vessels are wounded. —Medicus, in Good Housekeeping.

A correspondent who has had a quarter of a century's experience of traveling in hot countries writes the London Globe: "A man should always try to do as long as ever he can in the early part of the day without drinking; if he does taste water he becomes thirsty again in half an hour. I have often ridden hard, under a blazing sun, in clouds of dust, from daylight until 11 o'clock, but, once tempted to take a drink, have not been able to abstain for half an hour at a time."

A Mexican historian makes a new attempt to show that America was discovered in the fifth century, A. D., by a party of Buddhist monks from Afghanistan, of whom one, Hwui Shan, returned to Asia after an absence of forty-one years. A short account of the land which he visited, supposed to be Mexico, was included in the official history of China. There is proof that Hwui Shan actually visited some unknown eastern region, and the traditions of Mexico contain an account of the arrival of monks.

In days gone by there was often heard a cry from Ireland for a royal residence, but of late "No royalty need apply" has been the prevailing sentiment. There may yet be seen the remains of an abortive attempt at a royal palace at Jiggingstown, near Naas. On account of the excellence of the brick the walls and vaulted cellars have come down to our day. Strafford built it, "deeming" it uncomely his Majesty should not have a house of his own here." Perhaps Princes of the house of Parnell may yet occupy it.

Under the Mexican law a creditor can have a debtor arrested on the day when the debt falls due. The prisoner is chained to a post five days, guarded by an officer. At the end of the time, if the money is not forthcoming, the man's labor is sold to the Government for 40 cents a day for as many days as will be necessary to discharge the obligation. The miserable debtor is sent to the silver mines, where he is chained to a gang of felons and compelled to work underground. He sleeps underground, and never sees daylight again until he is restored to freedom.

Prof Blackie is not the only eccentric master the young men of Edinburg University have had over them. Prof. Christison—whose son became eminent in the Edinburg Medical School—once having caught a student winking in his Latin class, ordered him to stand up and spoke as follows: "No smirking, no smiling, and, above all, no tipping of the wink; for such things are hurtful to yourselves, baneful to the republic, and will bring down the gray hairs of your parents with sorrow to the grave. Hum! by the way, that's a very pretty sentence; turn it into Latin, sir."

As the war in Egypt has already made gum arabic scarce and high in price, those who have peach or plum trees can make their own mucilage. Lumps of gum will be found on every tree, which, when dissolved in water, makes a most excellent substitute. I have been using it all Summer, and find it to answer the purpose first-rate. If this same juice was clarified, and while in the soft state sweetened with pure sugar and a little spice, it would be much better to eat than the pernicious stuffs that are sold by confectioners as gum drops, and which are, no doubt, made of some animal offal, and doctored up with chemicals, and which should have gone to the glue pot at the start. There have been times here, after rainy weather, that pounds could have been numbered.—Samuel Miller, in Rural World.

Bryant Weed started for Manistique on Tuesday, where he will teach a five-months' term of school returning to Charlevoix in the spring.

Jas. O'Brian's machine threshed 412 bushels of oats three bushels beans, ten grass seed, in three hours last Wednesday, for Leopold Miller.

The Sentinel calls the board of supervisors "a body of marked democratic complexion." Eleven republicans to four democrats is very marked.

The floors are laid in the new mills; the boiler is being set this week, the iron siding is completed, and the machinery is expected on the next boat from Chicago.

The W. C. T. U. cordially invite all the ladies who are interested in temperance work to meet with them on Friday at 3 P. M. at the home of Mrs. Suffield, Secretary.

J. Milo Eaton and J. L. Newberry are building stone walls in front of their lots on Main street, and grading and sodding the lots in front of the houses, greatly improving their appearance.

Hon. J. S. Dixon and wife of Charlevoix, almost the first pioneers of that charming resort, have been making brief calls among Lansing friends within the past few days.—Lansing Republican.

C. B. Glass has finished the brick work on E. H. Green's block, and commenced Al. Washburn's new house on Monday morning. Mr. Glass's work will hold its own in comparison with the best in the country.

Pick up the local papers of every thriving city of Michigan and you will find its business men are live advertisers. It is not necessary to occupy a whole page, but advertise continually, be the space ever so small.

The raising of potatoes and other "roots" is the coming industry of the Pine Lake region. Charlevoix potatoes are the best in the market, and thousands of bushels are being shipped, though this is only the first year of the business. Farmers should calculate to increase their acreage next spring, for the Chicago and Milwaukee markets are almost unlimited in demand.

W. C. Newman is raising his house about three feet, and will put a new wall under it. This will give room for the kitchen and dining room in the basement, adding equal to one full story to the capacity of the house.

It is only right that a local newspaper should use all honorable means to boom its own city, invite trade and all worthy enterprises, but it is decidedly up-hill business unless the business men will also speak for themselves through the advertising columns of the paper.

The long dispute as to the title to the lot along the Petoskey road, just north of the village limits, has been settled, A Fox and J. Milo Eaton having each an undivided one half interest. Rev. J. T. Iddings and H. Lee Iddings have selected two lots, and the balance is for sale on easy terms.

A singular and mysterious case of shooting occured at the machine shop Tuesday night. O. S. Washburn and George Pappin were at work at the bench, and were startled to hear a revolver bullet come through the window near them. It was followed in a moment by another which passed over the bench where they were at work. The lights were then put out, and after some moments they went outside. They met George Weaver, who said he had met some one running eastward, and who turned up the hill on May street. At present there is no definite clue as to who did the shooting.

Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society held a very pleasant meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Wood, Friday evening, Oct. 23d. The miscellaneous program prepared by the executive committee was as follows:

Piano duet, Mrs. O. D. Wood and Mrs. F. A. Smith.

Address by the president, E. H. Green.

Guitar solo, Maud Leveday.

Reading, "Old Inventions Revived," Mrs. L. E. Allen.

Intermission, during which the society was entertained by a serenade from the East Jordan band.

Piano instrumental, Mrs. Ella Smith.

Selection from Hiawatha, "The Famine," Prof. Enos.

Vocal quartette, executive committee.

After the transaction of some business, the society adjourned to meet next Friday at 7:30 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bennett.

The principal feature of the program will be a debate on the question, "Resolved, that the Chinese should be expelled from the United States." MAUD L. A. LOVEDAY, Secretary.

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

An Explanation.

The item in the Sentinel indirectly charging me with conducting a gambling room demands a little explanation. Having no further use for the stand, I left it unlocked, and the parties who were playing there, were doing so without my knowledge or consent.

A. L. HAMILL.

M. E. Services, Sunday, Nov 1.

Preaching at 10:30, o'clock followed by Sunday school. Young people's meeting Sunday evening at 6 o'clock, followed by a sermon to the people. All are invited.

☞The Library Magazine, published by John B. Alden, New York, occupies a distinctive place in our periodical literature. Its aim is to present in an attractive form, and at a very moderate cost, the most valuable parts of the current foreign periodical writings of the day, with such original American papers as may be required to keep its readers abreast of our home thought. The plan of the magazine excludes fiction, but includes every other form of literature. It is, as its name imports, designed for preservation in libraries, as well as for mere temporary persual. Each number consists of 96 pages, and contains reading matter about equivalent to that in Harper's, the Century, or the Atlantic, at a cost of about one-third of either of these magizines. G. W. Crouter, agent, Charlevoix.

☞Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 35 cts. Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton. 32-143

DIED.

CLARK.—Oct. 4, 1885, EARNEST, infant son of Joseph and Mary Clark, aged 8 months.

Rest, darling Earnie, gently, sweetly, rest;
Thy dear hands folded o'er thy pulseless breast,
Thy dear voice stilled which we have loved so well,
With love which words of ours can never tell.

Gathered into our hearts deep anguish now
For death has set his signet on thy brow.
How we shall miss thee, earth seems dark and drear,
Without the form we loved so dear,
Yet still we think that heaven will seem more fair,
To know our darling will await us there.

God giveth what he knoweth will be best,
And so he giveth to thee; sweetest rest,
God knoweth best. O! from each aching heart,
Let these words of comfort ne'r depart,
And though through life we'll miss thy presence here,
Fond memory'll keep counsells ever near,
And when at last life's work is o'er
We'll meet thee, Earnie, to part no more.
Selected.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 102

SADNESS AND GLADNESS

There was a glory in my house,
And it is fled;
There was a baby at my heart,
And it is dead.

And when I sit and think of him,
I am so sad,
That half it seems that nevermore
Can I be glad.

If you had known this baby mine,
He was so sweet,
You would have gone a journey just
To kiss his feet.

He could not walk a single step,
Nor speak a word,
But then he was as blithe and gay
As any bird

That ever sat on orchard bough,
And trilled its song,
Until the listener fancied it
As sweet and strong

As if from lips of angels he
Had heard it flow;
Such angels as thy hand could paint,
Angelic!

You cannot think how many things
He learned to know
Before the swift, swift angel came,
And bade him go.

So that our neighbors said of him,
He was so wise
That he was never meant for earth,
But for the skies.

But I would not believe a word
Of what they said;
Nor will I even now, although
My boy is dead.

For God would be most wicked, if,
When all the earth
Is in the travail of a new
And heavenly birth,

As often as a little Christ is found,
With human breath,
He, like another Herod, should resolve
Upon its death.

But should you ask me how it is
That yours can stay,
Though mine must spread his little wings,
And fly away,—

I could but say that God, who made
This heart of mine,
Must have intended that its love
Should be the sign

Of His own love, and that if He
Can think it right
To turn my joy to sorrow, and
My day to night,

I cannot doubt that He will turn,
In other ways,
My winter darkness to the light
Of summer days,

I know that God gives nothing to Us for a day;
That which He gives He never cares
To take away.

And when He comes and seems to make
Our glory less,
It is that by and by we may
The more confess

That He has made it brighter than
It was before;
A glory shining on and on
For evermore.

And when I sit and think of this,
I am so glad,
That half it seems that nevermore
Can I be sad.

SLY WIDOW BISBEE.

BY LILY M. CURRY.

There was nothing remarkable in the fact that the Misses Asher had never married. Wealth abundant was theirs, and friends and the esteem of the community entire. They lived the most serene life imaginable. They never disagreed—and there were three of them, of ages ranging from thirty-six to forty-two years. They never irritated one another. Abigail, Dora, and Fidelia were their respective names. Their individualities blent as happily as white and azure and sea-shell pink. Their existence was one harmonious round of sisterly affection, unostentatious charity, and devotion to their three pet cats.

That is, until Cosgrove appeared. Cosgrove was the new organist of Trinity, the most important church in Pottersville, and the church whereof the Misses Asher were communicants. Trinity Church stood directly across the wide street from the Asher residence, a noble old house with its colonnade veranda sheltered by superb horse chestnuts. However, the ladies in question had taken a decided fancy to the new organist, and evinced a disposition to second his efforts at obtaining a choir of boys. After a little they had even prevailed upon Mr. Cosgrove to come and make his home with them. Mr. Clinton Cosgrove was a dark, handsome-browed and handsome-eyed gentleman of thirty-three. His other features could not in strict truth have been termed handsome, though a graceful droop of mustache barely concealed a melancholy curve of lip which many had found attractive.

But there were, as the new organist discovered after a time, a number of the congregation not thoroughly in sympathy with his boy-choir arrangement. This it was which pointed the desirability of a compromise. Mr. Cosgrove determined upon a soprano soloist, and wrote at once to the metropolis.

And so one balmy day in June Joy Folsom came down to Pottersville. Cosgrove had never met the lady, but she came highly recommended.

He hardly knew what he thought, when he had had his first interview. "Slim, timid, and a face like Saint—somebody's," he said rather indefinitely, as he walked slowly home to dinner at Ashers', where he now made it his home. He wondered if she could really have sufficient voice in that slight body.

The Misses Asher were much interested to hear about the new soprano. In personal appearance there was little difference between Miss Abigail and Miss Dora, or between Miss Dora and Miss Fidelia. A few more gray hairs, a deeper wrinkle, a lower voice, perhaps. Their toilets were quite similar, sedate, steel-colored silks, soft laces, and some quaint, old-fashioned jewels. Yet they were by no means old women; a little art—oh, never so little art—might have transformed Fidelia at least.

But Cosgrove was not thinking of this. His mind dwelt upon the newly arrived, and the probabilities of her filling acceptably the position in question. Supposing she should fail. How he would dislike telling her she would not suit. The big brown eyes that looked so earnestly at him that afternoon—he could not forget them.

"Joey," said Miss Abigail, "I suppose that is a shortening of Josephine."

"No—not Joey," said Cosgrove, slowly; "Joy: odd name, is it not? But I think we shall like Miss Folsom. I suppose you ladies will call on her."

"O, to be sure," said Miss Fidelia.

Joy Folsom sang her first solo the following Sabbath, and sang it to the satisfaction of the organist. Slightly tremulous at first, her voice grew steadier by and by, and rose clear and pure as the voice of an angel. Everyone said afterward how beautiful she looked—dressed in pure white, and with such an innocent countenance. There was no question as to her suiting the people. Cosgrove felt vastly relieved. He got on excellently with Miss Folsom. She had no "quirks" about her, as have most musical individuals. She left everything to his judgment.

It was the most natural thing in the world that they should become friends. And as they became friends, it was quite as natural that she should tell him about herself. She was an orphan; she had been supporting herself as music-teacher in the great city. She had practiced the strictest economy that she might continue to study under a good teacher. She was poor! * * *

The summer had slowly drifted by. Happy hours are not always swift. Sometimes so much occurs in short space that one cannot realize the actual length of time. They are days that seem like months—so full are they of strange surprise and joy.

That was the way Joy Folsom found it. In the late August days she walked with quick step and bounding pulse. She sang with a new thrill in her voice. She was nineteen and tasting the happiness of first love. Ah, yes! In all the after years nothing half so sweet or pure may come to woman. One never again may know the same feeling of perfect trust and security. Look back to it through tears, O ye who have since lived and suffered, who have learned to doubt and to dread, who have stood face to face with selfishness, heartlessness, betrayal!

He loved her. They had not as yet discussed marriage, but he loved her. That was sufficient. * * * Joy had made any number of friends since coming to Pottersville. Or, to speak more accurately, had accepted them. For she was by nature too shy and retiring to make advances in any quarter. The Misses Asher had called upon her, and she had dined with them twice or thrice. But they were all so much older than herself and so stately in dress and manner that she had not become very intimate with them. She felt a certain awe in their presence, which was by no means lessened at the thought that they were so friendly to Clinton Cosgrove.

Among others who had made kindly overtures to Miss Folsom was an elderly soul named Bisbee. She was a widow, and something of a gossip. Perhaps she had her eye on the soprano and the organist. Perhaps she had a vague notion how Trinity's organ loft stood veiled in shadow those still midsummer afternoons, when Joy Folsom's slim white-clad figure in the gloom moved slowly to and fro like a lily, and Clinton Cosgrove played soft interludes and whispered tender sentences while playing. At all events it was Mrs. Bisbee who met Joy that morning—a morning she never afterward could put out of mind—a horrid morning of shock and darkness. Mrs. Bisbee had walked home with her from the postoffice to Joy's boarding-place. And there Joy had gone straight to her own room, dazed and choking.

Mrs. Bisbee had naturally enough spoken of church affairs; of the music; of Mr. Cosgrove; of the boy-choir; and of the Misses Asher's devotion to the organist.

"Every one understands it, of course," the wily widow had said, carelessly. "And really it is a very good arrangement, you know. He has nothing but his salary; he is as poor as any one."

"You mean Mr. Cosgrove is poor," said Joy, a sudden color creeping up over her cheeks. "I don't quite understand what arrangement you mean, though."

"You don't? Why I thought everybody knew—I mean about Fidelia, of course. She is a year or two older than he is, but that doesn't matter much considering her fortune. O, yes, Miss Fidelia will be the making of him. * * * I don't quite know when the marriage is to occur."

"Miss Fidelia to marry Mr. Cosgrove," Joy repeated slowly, as if the intelligence were too stupendous for comprehension.

"Why, I supposed every one knew," the widow made answer.

Then, as they had reached Joy's home, no more was said.

The girl went slowly up the board walk to the house. It was as if a thunder-cloud had settled upon the fair world. Everything was black and hideous. All the sweetness had gone out of the flowers; the very tree leaves seemed to hang stupidly, as if death had touched their life source.

Suppose it were true. Then he had only been trifling with her. He had never asked her to marry him, because he had meant to marry Miss Fidelia Asher, who was rich. He had amused himself with Joy Folsom, because she was poor. Ah, yes! she was poor. In the city her home had been an attic chamber, bleak in winter, stifling in summer. Her work had been hard and incessant. Her progress had been so slow. O, life had been a pitiful struggle. And now the cup of happiness was dashed from her lips. The world was made suddenly dark and terrible.

Joy remained all day in her room—to suffer. Pride came to her assistance, and, though it made the pain no easier, was something of a prop. The young all have this pride; as they grow older they get over having it. Sometimes they get over it too much. I know a woman whose husband has deserted her and swears he will never live with her again, and tells her he wishes she would die, because he never loved her, but married her against his will. And yet that woman keeps writing to him and pleading with him to come back. That woman has gotten over having pride—too far.

Joy felt that her life was wrecked completely. He should never again find chance to amuse himself with her. She would leave Pottersville at the earliest opportunity. She hoped she need not sing too many more Sabbaths. She hardly knew how she could ever sing again—she felt so crushed so hopeless.

The afternoon wore slowly by. She was forced to appear at tea-time, lest her action be remarked. After tea she had promised Cosgrove to meet him at the church to rehearse a new solo.

The Ashers always dined at seven. Their midday luncheon was a most informal repast. Cold meats and fruits and pastry were set forth, from which one should help himself precisely as he felt inclined.

At luncheon that particular morning the ladies had mentioned Miss Folsom in connection with an entertainment about to be given for some charity.

"She would sing, I suppose?" Miss Abigail remarked.

"O, certainly, she would sing!" said Miss Fidelia, the most energetic of the three.

Miss Dora offered no objection, but continued to make her luncheon off cheese and some hard ginger cakes.

Mr. Cosgrove spoke absently.

"I presume she would gladly take part."

"If it were not so warm, I should call on her this afternoon," Miss Fidelia declared.

* * * * * *

"We practice to-night," said Cosgrove, as absently as before.

"Then," said Miss Fidelia, "I will come over to the church and see her."

"We shall have a heavy storm to-night." Joy heard some one utter this prophecy, as she went down the board walk, when tea was over. She heard the words, yet gave them scarcely a thought. She cared little for gathering shadows in the sky; her world was already as dark as it ever could be. When evil news is brought, one always reaches out for little attendant circumstances to witness or disprove its truth. Joy had been tortured all the afternoon with the recollection of a thousand trivial acts and sayings of her lover. And so she had little interest in the color of the sky or the way the wind began to blow up the dust in the street. She went on, unconscious of now and then a single drop of rain flying against her cheek, on toward the church. She went in, as usual, through the little door facing toward the rectory. She heard voices in the organ-loft, and felt no surprise at discovering Miss Fidelia in conversation with Clinton Cosgrove.

But all the bitterness she had choked down during the day seemed now to rise up and suffocate her. She hesitated; they had not heard her enter. Cosgrove was playing his favorite "Largo"—playing very softly, and Miss Fidelia stood looking over his shoulder. The gas burned dimly.

Joy retreated softly to the little study. She could not bring herself to face them. She felt as if she had lost all self-control. She would go away quickly. She opened the door—but rain was falling in very large drops. No, she must wait a little. The wind was blowing terribly, moreover. She could not see a yard in advance. She would wait till the shower was over. The study was now pitch dark, save where the light glimmered faintly through the half-opened door—the light from the organ-loft. And she could still hear him playing "Largo." She sank down in the rector's arm-chair, overpowered and heart-broken. The storm without grew wilder. She could hear the wind lashing the sides of the edifice and tearing away the strong old English ivy. The music ceased; Cosgrove and Miss Fidelia came down the steps from the loft into the study. Joy sat motionless and heart-sick. What would they think to find her there? Would they perhaps accuse her of eavesdropping? Oh, if only they might not observe her!

They did not appear to. Miss Fidelia opened the door.

"What an awful storm," she said, in a shocked voice. "Do you think we can get across the street?"

"Better to wait here," said Cosgrove. "It will soon be over."

"But Abbie and Dora will be nervous. I think we'd better try."

Cosgrove hesitated.

The lady opened the door a second, and was passing out.

Joy could never explain to herself, or to others the singular impulse of the ensuing instant. Swift as lightning all thought of self had left her; she knew nothing but one blind, unaccountable impulse, to reach out and hold Miss Fidelia back. This strange impulse, or instinct, seemed to thrust her from her seat and force from her a wild cry.

"Wait! Come back!"

Miss Fidelia turned; at the same moment came a frightful rush and crashing sounds which lasted for some seconds.

"Joy!" cried Cosgrove, amid the din. But the girl had fainted.

* * * * *

"A terrible storm," said every one, the following morning. Quite a respectable crowd came to take a look at the church steeple. Moreover, it was whispered about that the youngest Miss Asher had barely escaped from under.

"A regular Western cyclone," said some one. "We don't very often see our churches pulled down like that."

Just about the same time Clinton Cosgrove was calling on Miss Folsom.

"Won't you please explain how you came to appear so suddenly for Miss Fidelia's benefit?" he began, in a tone that puzzled the girl.

She looked at him, with a pale sort of desperacy.

"I had been there some time," she said, slowly. "I was waiting for you to be at leisure. I saw you were conversing with your affianced."

"My affianced!" repeated the young man in stupefied accents. Then the truth may have dawned upon him. And so much may be read in glances!

"Joy," he said reproachfully, "some one has been telling you tales—and you have been listening." Miss Fidelia is an estimable lady, and a devoted friend—but Joy * * * I shall never have * * * any affianced * * * except * * * yourself."

* * * * * *

And when they were married, in October, glorious month, the steeple had been rebuilt, and a reception was given them by the Misses Asher, who appeared in church in the richest of new dove-colored satins, the quaintest of laces. And if these estimable ladies ever had entertained any such hopes or plans as the widow Bisbee had asserted, they forthwith packed them away in lavender and common sense, and buried them under the recollection that Miss Fidelia probably owed her life to Joy Folsom.—Chicago Ledger.

The Baggage-Check.

The American's earliest experiences in England with his baggage provoke him. He wants to "check" it, and he cannot do it. At home, if he is going from New York to Boston, for instance, he buys a ticket at one of the numerous ticket offices which are scattered over the city, states what train he is going on, and is informed of the hour at which the baggage-wagon will call for his effects. When it does call, the messenger in charge of it gives him a little brass plate on which is a number, and the words "New York" and "Boston," and attaches to his trunk, by means of a little leather strap, a duplicate of it. If the traveler drives directly to the depot, he buys his ticket, presents his baggage at the baggage-counter, and receives his brass check for it, the exhibition of his ticket being a warrant for the transfer of the trunks or parcels he has to the point to which he is going. If he is leaving an hotel, the porter who carries his trunk from his rooms will hand him the checks before he leaves the house. In any case he has no further concern with his traps until the end of his journey. Half an hour before he reaches Boston, an express agent—"parcels delivery clerk" they would call him in England—comes through the train, and, if the traveler wishes, takes the address at which he desires to have his things delivered, and taking his check, gives him a receipt on a small printed form. Within an hour or so everything is at the hotel or residence. If the traveler's personal comfort requires that his effects should accompany him at once from the train, he gives his checks, when he alights in the station, to his hackman, or to the badged and labeled employe of the hotel he means to visit.

All of this is of course thoroughly familiar to Americans; but English people know nothing of it, and have almost nothing in their system of travel which resembles it. To Americans the baggage-check is one of the greatest comforts of travel, and when they go abroad they miss it painfully.—Harper's Magazine.

Like His Father.

The other evening there were several visitors at Col. Gradson's house. The Colonel takes great delight in "showing off" his little son, and when the boy appeared at the parlor door the Colonel said:

"Come in, Henry. Speak to the ladies and gentlemen. Ah, that's a man."

"He is a fine little fellow," said Mrs. Graftney, one of the visitors. "Come here, my little man."

The boy approached her and permitted her to lift him onto her lap.

"Why, you are heavy. How old are you?"

"Six years, goin' on seven."

"Yes, and you'll soon be a man. What are you going to do when you become a man?"

"Do like pa does."

"How does he do?"

"O, sometimes when he comes home at night he falls over a chair——"

"Henry!" exclaimed the Colonel.

"Falls over a chair, and when maw gits mad he says it's a pretty way for a woman to go on just because a man takes two beers and——"

The Colonel had seized him.—Arkansaw Traveler.

How to Swim.

A gentleman of our acquaintance tells us the following good story, which goes to show that the average Austin boy has what Mrs. Partington would call a "judicious" mind. He, the boy, wanted to go in swimming.

"But, my son," rejoined the anxious parent, "swimming is unhealthy. It was only this morning that you were complaining of a pain in your stomach."

"That's so, pa; but I know how to swim on my back."—Texas Siftings.

EPITAPHS.

On a Poet.

Put away his pens and paper,
Ink and blotter, everything;
Now extinguished is life's taper—
No more lays on "gentle spring."
There are no more threats to shoot him;
He is done with earthly cares;
Editors no more will boot him
Down the editorial stairs.

On an Editor.

Here his remains his friends have placed,
To poet's he's no longer crusty,
The festive cockroach eats his paste,
His faithful shears are dull and rusty;
No more with the knife of his wit doth he slay
"Our loathsome contemporary, over the way."

On a Reporter.

With gentle hands we laid him here to rest,
For he was genial and esteemed by all;
We heard the clods they heaped upon his breast
With a dull thud upon his coffin pall.
And here he sleeps, all peaceful, safe from harm,
No more assigned to base-ball, trots or other sport;
No more to hasten at the fire alarm;
He's gone where there are no fires to report.

On the Devil.

He came for "copy" with demeanor civil,
And waited for it with unruffled brow;
On earth he did his duty as a devil,
In heaven we trust he is an angel now.

On a Selfish Man.

Few people ever tasted of his cheer.
Few were the tears of grief that for him fell;
His health was never drank while he was here,
But now, undoubtedly, he's toasted well.
—Boston Courier.

In "Brain Rest," Prof. J. L. Corning gives seven rules whereby mental bankruptcy may be avoided. Avoid, first, excessive indulgence of the emotions; second, frantic, desultory efforts to accomplish in one hour an amount of mental work appropriate to double that amount of time; third, avoid every species of excess which experience has proven leads to general constitutional drain; fourth, avoid attempting to do two things at one and the same time; fifth, avoid petty social and other engagements which interfere with the function of sleep; sixth, avoid constipation, as experience has abundantly proven that this condition is productive of abnormal depression; seventh, avoid indigestible food.

A southern physician has studied the subject of a difference between the northerners and southerners. In tropical countries the complexion of the people is that of convalescing from fever, and indicates that the conditions of the blood are no longer susceptible to febrile influences. The number of red corpuscles in the northern blood rapidly disappear in tropical regions subjected to malaria.

Grief ennobles. He who has not suffered can never have thought or felt.

TWO NOTED MINSTRELS,

Who Have Won Fortunes, and What They Say About Stage Life.

[From Stage Whispers.]

"Billy" Emerson has recently made a phenomenal success in Australia, and is rich. Emerson was born in Belfast in 1846. He began his career with Joe Sweeney's minstrels in Washington in 1857. Later on he jumped into prominence in connection with Newcomb's minstrels, with whom he visited Germany. He visited Australia in 1874, and on his return to America joined Haverly's minstrels in San Francisco at $500 a week and expenses. With this troupe he played before her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and royalty generally. After this trip he leased the Standard Theater, San Francisco, where for three years he did the largest business ever known to minstrelsy. In April last he went to Australia again, where he has "beaten the record."

"Billy" is a very handsome fellow, an excellent singer, dances gracefully, and is a true humorist.

"Yes, sir, I have traveled all over the world, have met all sorts of people, come in contact with all sorts of customs, and had all sorts of experiences. One must have a constitution like a locomotive to stand it.

"Yes, I know I seem to bear it like a major, and I do, but I tell you candidly that with the perpetual change of diet, water, and climate, if I had not maintained my vigor with regular use of Warner's safe cure, I should have gone under long ago."

George H. Primrose, whose name is known in every amusement circle in America, is even more emphatic, if possible, than "Billy" Emerson, in commendation of the same article to sporting and traveling men generally, among whom it is a great favorite.

Emerson has grown rich on the boards and so has Primrose, because they have not squandered the public's "favors."

INVENTOR OF THE BELL ROPE.

The First Bell in an Engine Cab Was a Cow Bell, and a Clothes-Line Jingled It.

"Did you know Capt. Ayers?" said a well-known railroad man. "Well, he was famous for two things. He was the conductor on the first through train on the Erie from tide water to the great lakes, and he was the inventor of the bell rope by which train men signal the engineer. He was familiarly known as Poppy. Trains on the Erie, when Capt. Ayers was first employed, were few and far between. Passengers never thought of buying tickets, but paid fares on the train. In case a passenger was obstreperous and refused to pay up, there was no way of stopping the train to eject him, and so people were frequently carried from one station to another without paying anything for it.

"Poppy Ayers was running a train between Piermont and Turner's, which was the western terminus of the road at the time. The engineer of the train was a big burly German, who, like all engineers in those days, regarded himself as the master of the train, the conductor being simply a machine to take fares. One day Poppy had been bothered more than usual on his train by stubborn passengers, and he got to thinking how he could establish communication between himself and the engineer while the train was in motion, and the idea struck him. When he got to Turner's he obtained a section of clothes-line long enough to reach from the engine to the rear of the train. He tied a stick of wood to one end of the rope, and fixed it in the engineer's, cab so that when he ran the rope back over the train and pulled on it the stick would be agitated. Then he explained to the engineer the idea, and told him whenever he saw the stick move up and down he must stop the train, for there would be some one on the train who ought to be thrown off. This innovation was resisted by the engineer as an infringement on his rights and the dignity of his office. It was virtually placing the train at the order of the conductor—a thing that could not for a moment be tolerated. So when the train started he removed the stick of wood that dangled near his head, and tied the rope fast. Poppy Ayres persisted in tying on the rope and the engineer persisted in ignoring his authority, until one day Poppy, after tying the wood to the rope and hanging it in the cab, turned to the engineer, and, taking him by the throat, exclaimed:

"Now, you pig-headed idiot, which will you do: Let that stick alone and stop the train when I pull the rope, or will you take the d——dest licking you ever heard tell of?'

"The engineer weakened and said he'd mind the signal, and he did. Shortly after that Poppy fitted a cow-bell in the cab and threw out the stick of wood. Whenever that cow-bell sounded the train was brought to a stand in short order, and some passenger knew that he must either come down with his fare or get hustled out between stations regardless of circumstances. At one stroke Poppy Ayres subordinated the engineer and increased the revenue of the company."—New York Sun.

Houses in the National Capital.

It is easy to obtain a home in Washington, because most of the real estate agents will take a small cash payment and arrange the remainder of the debt at a low rate of interest, in some cases as low as 5 per cent. Certain lot-holders have a very great advantage. Scattered throughout Washington there is a very large number of little plots of ground which belong to the public reservations. These bits of parking are given rent free to the lot-owners, who build up close to them. They have the practical use of them for nothing. They can fence them in, ornament them as they please, and enjoy everything about them except building on them. In many instances these little public strips are the only yards that certain house-owners have.—New York World.

An Early Eviction.

A little Austin boy, whose impecunious parents are always moving from one house to another, was asked by the Sunday school teacher:

"Why did the Israelites move out of Egypt?"

"Because they couldn't pay their rent, I reckon."—Texas Siftings.

Germany the Foremost Nation.

So far as military power and political influence goes Germany to-day is confessedly the foremost nation of the earth. When Russia had almost destroyed the military power of the Turks and Constantinople was within her grasp, she was deprived of the fruits of her victory by Germany. Bismarck formed an alliance with Austria and England, and these two latter powers profited more by the discomfiture of the Turks than did Russia. But Great Britain in turn has been made to feel the power of Germany. When the project was under way for opening Congo land to the commerce of the world, England made a treaty with Portugal, which would have given those two powers a monopoly of the trade of Central Africa, England, of course, to have the lion's share; but Bismarck promptly interfered, and insisted that a congress should be held in Berlin to settle the question as to the rights of the various powers in the new scene of trade enterprise. Great Britain submitted humbly, and in the conference subsequently held matters were so arranged that all nations would have equal rights in any new commerce that might be created. Should Bismarck die, Germany in all probability would lose her pre-eminence. He is the state. But with him, as with all great men, his successors will probably seem small and feeble by comparison.—Demorest's Monthly.

Living Monuments.

On the tomb of Sir Christopher Wren, architect of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, is the inscription in Latin: "If you ask for his monument look around you." The thousands and hundreds of thousands of people whom we see to-day free from rheumatism and kindred diseases are living monuments to the power of St. Jacobs Oil—the Conqueror of Pain.

A Dollar a Year.

"Doctor," he said as he entered the veterinary's office, "I am about to sell a horse to a grocer, and he wants you to pass on the animal's age."

"How old is he?"

"Sixteen."

"How old does the grocer want him to be?"

"Seven."

"Ah—I see. A dollar a year for nine years is nine dollars. What an abstinate fellow the grocer must be! He might as well have wanted a horse nine years old, and thus save you $21"—Detroit Free Press.

Don't Lie Abed.

One of the most dangerous habits people can indulge in is that of lying in bed. Nine-tenths of all the deaths occur in bed. Nearly one-half of all those who are murdered are murdered in bed. It is while you are in bed that your house is robbed and your chickens stolen. It is while you are in bed that the bugs bite you and the bad dreams haunt you. Therefore, dear reader, never go to bed.—Punxsutawney Tribune.

Satan's Five Degrees.

One of the most numerous of the great classes of civilized society is the D. O. O. D., which may be otherwise expressed as the Dependent Order of Drunkards. It comprehends persons of all grades and classes of society. It draws its membership from bar and pulpit, from forum and senate; but, differ as they may in social surroundings, ability or culture, they are brought into one fellowship and reduced to one common level. We lay before the readers the five principal degrees of the D. O. O. D.:

First, we see the young man, intelligent, courteous and polite, accepting the cup at the hand of some young lady, and drinking her health in liquor that ruins his own. Well dressed, respectable, with fair promise and bright prospect before him, we see nothing that should hinder him from rising to the highest stations and occupying the most influential positions were it not for that cup which contains within itself the promise and power of all sorrow, degradation, shame and death.

The scene shifts and another degree is taken, and he who learned his first lesson in the parlor of the gay and refined, has taken another in the gilded saloon, where jovial visitors accompany and vulgar jokes and nameless vices wait to drag the unwary victim of intemperance down to the tomb. A little later we see him again; a third degree is taken; he drinks deeply, and his battered hat, buttonless vest, patched garments and look of general seediness tell us the effect of the maddening poison upon him.

A short journey brings him to another degree. The relics of his old gentility are gone; coatless and ragged, his shaking hand and gross and reddened countenance shows that he has drank up everything that made life joyous or this world a place of peace and blessing.

One more degree shows us what strong drink will do for the strongest man. No man was ever mighty enough to wrestle with the bottle. He is always thrown at last. His body a mass of bloated disease, his heart a den of foul and beastly passions, his countenance marred and sensualized beyond all power of description, in rags and tatters, homeless and friendless, he travels his short journey to the darkness of the tomb. Some day the tidings come that he is found dead—dead by the wayside, with the bottle in his pocket; dead in the snowdrift, coming home from a drunken debauch: dead in his wretched hovel, with no one to smooth his dying pillow or minister to him in his closing hours. The end has come; the warnings of God and man have been in vain; he has passed through the varying degrees of evil habit; he has been initiated into the mysteries of satan's lodge, and at last his existence is wrecked, his life is lost, and he awaits the sentence of the mighty Judge who has taught us that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven.—T. Dewitt Talmadge.

THE KEYS.

The Kidneys and Liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have Headache, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Lame Back or Side, Failing Strength, Languor, Excessive Flow of Urine, &c., remember they are the advance guard and give warning to more serious trouble such as Diabetes, Bright's Disease, &c. Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diaebtes, Kidney and Liver Cure is a sure cure for all these diseases. Price only $1.00 large bottle.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees east, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the beach of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north, range six (6) west, intersects said beach, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty [50] links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petequom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

Cleveland Sustained.

Glorious Democratic Gains Everywhere.

New York Sustains Cleveland's Administration, and Elects Hill Governor by 30,000 Majority.

MAHONEISM REBUKED IN VIRGINIA.

Lee Elected Governor by 20,000 and the Democrats Carry Both Branches of the Legislature.

Large Democratic Gains in the Connecticut Legislature.

Maryland Gives 15,000 Democratic on State Ticket.

A Day of Glory in Detroit.

The election on Tuesday demonstrates that the conservative, careful administration of Grover Cleveland has strengthened democracy everywhere.

In New York, instead of democrat ic defeat, as has been freely predicted, Gov. Hill is re-elected over Ira Davenport, republican by about 30,000, and the democratic lieutenant governor, secretary of state, comptroller, attorney general, treasurer, and other officers are elected by good majorities.

In Virginia the democrats elect Fitzhugh Lee governor by 20,000, and will have two-thirds of the senate, and at least 60 out of 100 in the lower house, which will insure a democratic successor to Senator Mahone.

Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Iowa are still republican, but by reduced majorities.

The city election in Chicago shows democratic gains.

The republicans of Massachusetts elect governor, but the democrats make large gains in the legislature.

In Connecticut the democrats gain four senators and sixty-two representatives in the legislature.

In Maryland, the democratic majority on state ticket is 12,000 to 15,000.

Detroit elects the entire democratic city ticket except one.

☞ We have received from George Stinson & Co., of Portland, Maine, the well-known Art Publishers, a magnificent, full length, steel engraving of General Grant. It is after Anderson's celebrated photograph, which was made while the general was still in full vigor, and represents him in his sturdy, manly strength, as the people wish to remember him. It is, undoubtedly the best portrait ever made of the general Messrs. Stinson & Co. are in need of agents for several important, popular, new publications, and offer inducements that should be heeded by those in need of profitable work; those who write to them will receive, free, full particulars.

LEECHES.

The History and Present Condition of a Peculiar Trade.

Of the two firms in London—and there are only two—to whom the foreign leeches are consigned from Hamburg, one practices as a dental surgeon and the other sells pipes, tobacco, and other trifles. Both are of sufficient standing to recall les beaux jours passes of the trade, the great times of indiscriminate blood-letting, when, whether the patient suffered from a black eye, a headache, a liver, or a heart, he lost a couple of ounces of blood and was declared to be better. Now scarcely one is used where a century ago a hundred flourished, and the sixpenny leech of even so recent a date as 1860 has fallen to something less than a halfpenny at wholesale price.

No completer proof of the popularity of the leech with the early practitioner can be afforded than by the fact that the verb "to leech" means to treat with medicine and to bleed, while the doctor himself, even so late as the days of Shakspeare, borrowed the name of his favorite instrument of healing. The slender, meager, hungry leech comes from Turkey, within a radius of fifty miles of Constantinople, and from Buda-Pesth, where the country people bring them in, like watercress, by thousands from the ditches and sell them to the dealers. They are found there in all ditches and ponds, and wherever there is pure running water, weeds for shelter, and muddy banks and bottoms. They are, as a rule, netted in nets prepared with bait, though we are also informed that it is not rare for the hardy peasant to walk barelegged through the water and strip them off as fast as they can adhere to the calf.

However they are caught,—by plain, honest fishing or by human artifice,—from Buda-Pesth, without distinction of age or size, they travel to Hamburg, where they lie in vast ponds or reservoirs until the time for their selection arrives. In these reservoirs they lie generally for a year, and during all that time, if they are properly cared for, they should receive no food, or rather no more than they can find for themselves in the water. But this is a rule that is not always observed as it should be, for there are many merchants who give them blood, and some liver, so that all tastes may be satisfied, the entire body of a horse thrown among them; with the result that on arrival in this country their appetites are fatigued, and they are found to need certain stimulants to performance. From Hamburg, when their time of probation is over, they are imported here direct in bags and boxes, and at the back of the surgery in Pentonville or among the pipes and tobacco of Houndsditch they lie in shallow earthen vessels tightly covered with gauze or linen, the halting stage on the way to the wholesale druggist and the hospital.

With the importer they rarely tarry for more than four or five days, but are sent out almost as fast as they come in, in small wooden boxes similar to those used by fruiterers for honeycomb. From the wholesale druggist they pass again to the chemist and apothecary, and when the perils of travel and the variations of climate they go through are considered, the intending purchaser must not be surprised if he finds himself asked sixpence for an animal that cost the first dealer a shilling for a couple of hundred. Many die on the voyage and many in the short time they remain with the importer, and though in theory the selected leech will stand an extreme of heat or cold, many of the five-and-twenties and fifties ordered by the chemist, carefully treated as they are, do not live to fulfill what seems to be the sole reason of their existence—that of drawing blood.

The leech should never properly be applied more than once, and can be applied anywhere. It fills in about a quarter of an hour, and will absorb altogether from forty to eighty-five grains of blood, or in all about half an ounce. There is an ingenious instrument known as the artificial leech, once occasionally used, but now scarcely ever met with. It consists of a small, sharp steel cylinder worked by a spring, with which a circular incision is made, and with an interior glass cylinder capable of being exhausted by a piston worked by a screw. It is not a good instrument, and is, as we say, not used now. There is a specimen to be seen in the museum of the College of Surgeons among the "Surgical Instrument Series." In England there is a less powerful species commonly found, though now never used. It is known as the horse leech, from its habits of attacking the membranes lining the mouth and nostrils of animals drinking at the pools it haunts. It is in its way venomous, and, when applied to the human subject, inflammation, leading to erysipelas, has been known to follow its bite. There must be something in our waters unfavorable to the growth and culture of the parasite, for not only is the indigenous leech useless, and indeed harmful, but the foreign specimens which efforts have been made to acclimatize have never come to any good. Thirty years ago a prominent English firm projected and founded a farm at Norwood for the breeding and cultivation of the Turkish and Hungarian leech, but, either from ignorance of treatment or changefulness of climate, they all sickened and died, and the scheme collapsed.—Cornhill.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A horrible story of fire and loss of life comes from Hobart, Delaware County, New York, which is best told in the words of Martha Jubeck, a 12-year-old girl, who gave the following details to the Coroner's jury:

The day before the fire my mother and the baby and myself were up on the hill. Mother laid baby on the ground and piled a lot of dry brush together. She took some matches out of her pocket, and said she intended to burn herself and baby on the brush pile, and that if I wanted to go with them to heaven she would put on more brush, and I could lie down and burn, too. I snatched the matches out of mother's hands and took the baby up in my arms, and would not let mother have him, and I coaxed her to go home with me. On the morning of the fire I woke up, hearing baby cry. The house was all smoky. I jumped out of bed and called for mother. She did not answer me. I ran to her door and it was locked. I could hear her soothing baby and crying. I ran back to my room and waked my little brothers, and dressed myself quickly. I then went to get them out of the house, as I knew it must be on fire. When I got them to the front door I found that a barrel of flour had been placed against it, so that it could not be opened. I heard fire crackling, and was almost choked with smoke. I do not know how I ever moved the heavy barrel of flour, but I got it away enough to open the door so we could get out. When I got my brothers out of the door I ran to a window in my mother's room and looked in. I could hear the baby screaming. The room was black with smoke, and mother was lying on the floor. She had firewood piled up around her like a bird's nest. It was blazing high. It was so awful that I think I must have gone crazy, for I do not remember anything more. When Mr. Hanford asked me where mother and baby were, and I told him they had gone to the hill, I think the scene with mother and the brush pile, and what she said there, must have been on my mind. We all lived happily together always.

The case of Ferdinand Ward, the New York bank wrecker, was given to the jury at New York on the evening of the 28th ult., and a verdict of hreeny in the first degree was returned about midnight. The penalty may be imprisonment for ten years.

Boston Buck, aged 70, and half a dozen of his gang of counterfeiters, who for years have been operating in Clarion and Forest Counties, Pennsylvania, have just been sentenced at Pittsburgh to terms in the penitentiary.

Emory Thayer, who resided near Hamilton Station, N. Y., was awakened at night by burglars, and in attempting to grapple with one of the robbers, Thayer was shot dead.

Stephen MacPherson (colored) at Philadelphia attacked with a hatchet Robert J. Cook, Treasurer of the Press Company, fracturing his skull. The victim, who had been for several years captain and trainer of Yale College crews, had censured MacPherson for permitting gas to escape.

WESTERN.

August Bienlow, who was arrested in Cleveland for passing counterfeit money, hanged himself in the cell.

The city of Evansville has failed to pay the interest coupons on $3,000,000 of water bonds. The holder of the security is an Eastern life insurance company, which is privileged to take possession of the waterworks at its pleasure.

An interview lasting an hour was held in St. Louis, between Samuel N. Brooks, of Hyde, England, and his son, Hugh M. Brooks, who is charged with the murder of C. Arthur Preller. Only a deputy sheriff witnessed the scene. The elder Brooks expresses his belief that the trial will result in an acquittal.

The order of the Chief of Police of Cleveland, Ohio, closing all saloons on Sunday, was generally observed.

The rear car of a Wabash passenger train left the track near Laporte, Ind., tumbling over several times and rolling into the ditch. Thirteen persons were seriously injured.

C. J. Hayes and S. O. Prescott, of Chicago, have commenced suit against the city of Waterloo, Iowa, for $50,000 damages. In 1884 they were arrested and imprisoned for seven days for peddling goods without a license. The point made is that the ordinance under which they were prosecuted infringes upon civil rights. The ordinance in question is based upon Iowa statutes, but the latter does not provide for punishment in case of refusal to pay license.

Without cause, J. C. Henning shot and killed his mistress, Mrs. Lottie Volner, at Rockville, Ind. The murderer, who is a peculiar character, and by some considered insane, attempted to conceal himself, but after a diligent search by citizens he was captured and placed in the jail. The mob surrounded the structure, determined upon a lynching, but wiser counsels prevailed, though for hours the greatest excitement was exhibited. The husband of the victim was shot and killed two years ago by Charles Rutledge in a quarrel relating to Mrs. Volner, whom her husband considered to be unduly intimate with Rutledge.

Eighty lodges, representing several States, celebrated at Cleveland, Ohio, the seventeenth anniversary of the organization of the A. O. U. W.

Chicago elevators contain 12,953,663 bushels of wheat, 1,004,459 bushels of corn, 212,413 bushels of oats, 238,428 bushels of rye, and 129,643 bushels of barley; total, 14,525,606 bushels of all kinds of grain, against 9,777,033 bushels a year ago.

At Chicago A. P. Burrus shot and fatally wounded Miss Lillian Walter and Mrs. Ray Good while the young ladies were leaving the office of R. G. Dun & Co.'s mercantile agency, at No. 144 Monroe street. The day before Burrus had been dismissed from that office because he gave utterance to slanderous remarks about the character of his victims, and the shooting was done in a spirit of revenge. Burrus fled after the shooting, and was chased by a great crowd of people who wanted to lynch him, even after police officers had taken him in custody.

SOUTHERN.

Jacob Kauffman, a well-known musician, committed suicide at Denver, Colo., by divesting himself of his clothing and crawling several times back and forward through a barbed-wire fence. When discovered the body was shockingly lacerated, the wires being covered with blood and shreds of skin and flesh.

While B. J. Shay, a prominent real-estate dealer of San Francisco, was at dinner in the Nevada restaurant with Mrs. James C. Brown, of Healdsburg, Cal., the husband of the latter walked in, drew a revolver, and fired two bullets into him. Shay's wounds are believed to be fatal. Jealousy caused the trouble.

E. M. Cox, a prominent lawyer of Petersburg, Va., whose health had become greatly impaired, killed himself with a revolver. He left a large family, and carried life insurance to the amount of $15,000.

A Fort Worth, Texas, official says a contract has been made with an English syndicate for the delivery on the wharf at Galveston, fortnightly for the next five years, of 3,000 frozen carcasses of beef cattle. The price stipulated is six cents per pound for the beef, and nine cents for the hides. The delivery, it is reported, will begin at once.

Prairie fires are raging in Texas, and have so far burned over 500,000 acres.

J. C. McFerran, a noted horse-breeder of Kentucky, died on his farm near Louisville, aged 53 years. He leaves an immense fortune.

The Catholics of Richmond have taken steps to inform the Spanish Government in regard to the utterances of Rev. Dr. Curry, recently appointed Minister to Madrid.

John Thompson, a murderer, was taken from jail at Kingston, Tenn., and hanged by a mob.

The Governor of Arkansas has grown weary of having prisoners cremated by mobs in Pike County, and has offered rewards for the capture of the persons who have twice burned the wooden jail.

The wholesale and retail grocery business at Augusta, Ga., having been monopolized by Chinamen, the citizens are petitioning the Council to devise means to stop the yellow tide of immigration.

WASHINGTON.

The Naval Board appointed to examine the unfinished cruisers, the construction of which was begun by John Roach, report that the fair market value of the Chicago is $725,646; amount necessary to complete the vessel, $268,046. The value of the Atlanta is fixed at $620,387; amount necessary to complete the vessel, $41,591. The Boston is worth $610,023; amount necessary to complete the vessel, $50,135.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue appointed Godfrey Jaeger, of Elmore, Ohio, to be an Internal Revenue Agent, vice John W. Phelps, resigned.

The Secretary of the Interior has made the following appointments of Special Examiners in the Pension Office under the civil-service rules: Eben E. Clark, of Maryland; Travis F. Hensley, of Missouri; Thos. A. Stocklager, of Kansas; John H. Anthony, of Illinois; George P. Smith, of Kansas; E. D. Gallion, of Virginia; F. W. Edwards, of Illinois; Jacob F. Klugh, of Pennsylvania; Arch McGinnis, of Indiana; O. E. Browning, of Illinois, and Howard S. McCandless, of Virginia.

It has been ordered that the postal cards bearing a special delivery stamp shall be delivered the same as letters with the extra stamp.

The Postmaster General has decided that only first-class mail matter—that is, letters, postal-cards, and sealed packages—shall have the benefit of the special delivery service. Clerks who may be employed to deliver special-delivery letters will not be entitled to compensation therefor unless they are paid out of the private funds of the Postmaster. The words "special delivery" must be written by the Postmaster on the dispatching envelope in which a registered letter or package is placed.

POLITICAL.

The following was promulgated by the President on the 27th ult. for the information of the public:

For nearly eight months a large share of the time of the President has been devoted to the hearing of applications for office and the determination of appointments. Much of the time thus spent has undoubtedly subserved the public good; some of it has been sacrificed to the importunity of people in their insistence upon useless interviews, and some of it has been unjustifiably wasted. The public welfare and a due regard for the claims of those whose interests in the Government are entirely disconnected with office-holding, imperatively demand that in the future the time of the President should be differently occupied; and he confidently expects that all good citizens will acquiesce in the propriety and reasonableness of the following plan adopted to that end:

After Nov. 1 the President will decline to grant interviews of those seeking public positions or their advocates. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, during that month, from 10 to 11 o'clock in the morning, he will receive such other persons as call on strictly public business, and on the same days, at 1:30 in the afternoon, he will meet those who merely desire to pay their respects. On all other days and times during that month he will receive only Cabinet officers and heads of departments.

James Hoges (Democrat) has been elected Mayor of Baltimore by a plurality of 2,000 over the fusion candidate, the vote being one of the heaviest ever cast. Both branches of the City Council have Democratic majorities.

The work of reorganizing the civil-service commission is found by President Cleveland to be one of great difficulty, especially as the salaries are limited to $3,500 per annum. Among a number who have declined to serve are M. L. Saltonstall, and Charles Codman, of Massachusetts.

The Louisville Courier-Journal publishes a lengthy interview with Senator Beck upon the Johnson-Grant-Depew matter. Mr. Beck was a Representative from Kentucky in Congress during Johnson's impeachment, and all of his recollections are contrary to the theories of Mr. Depew. In regard to Johnson's imbroglio with Grant about the Stanton matter, Mr. Beck says the President gave him a letter from Gen. Sherman, "which, together with his charges and Gen. Grant's admissions, proved, as he and I thought, that Grant had agreed to turn the War Department over to him, and not give it up to Stanton, and that Grant and Sherman, by their action on the 18th and 19th of January, virtually confessed this fact by insisting, for the good of the service, on the resignation of Stanton." This letter is as follows:

No. 352 K STREET, WASHINGTON.

I neglected this morning to say that I had agreed to go down to Annapolis to spend Sunday with Admiral Porter. Gen. Grant had to leave for Richmond on Monday morning at 6 o'clock. At a conversation with the General after the interview wherein I offered to go with him on Monday to Mr. Stanton and say that it was our joint opinion that he should resign, it was found impossible, by reason of his going to Richmond and my going to Annapolis. The General by his course will call on you to-morrow and offer to go to Stanton and say for the good of the service he ought to resign. This on Sunday. On Monday I will call upon you, and if you think it necessary I will do the same—call on Mr. Stanton and tell him he should resign. If he will not, then it will be time to consider ulterior matters. In the meantime it also happens that no necessity exists for precipitating matters. Yours truly, W. T. SHERMAN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ex-Gov. Paige, of Vermont, died at Rutland, and Miss Ettie Villas, sister of Postmaster General Villas, at Madison, Wis. The funeral of Henry W. Shaw (Josh Billings) took place at Lanesborough, Mass.

Work has been suspended on the Pacific end of the Panama canal, but one half of the excavation has been made for a stretch of three miles on the Atlantic side.

Mexico continues to wrestle with the tariff question, and a committee on revision has been appointed, which is expected to work a reduction of duties. A plan for taxing rural property and forcing colonization is also being discussed.

An expert appointed by the Canadian Government to investigate reports of hog cholera found an infected herd near a watering-tank, on the Southern Railway, where stock from the Western States has been regularly fed and watered.

Some lumber operators in Maine will not receive men into their camps who have not been vaccinated. Quarantine has been established at Oswego by Federal officials. The Montreal Board of Health has decided that sailors arriving in port shall not be allowed ashore without a certificate of vaccination. The deaths in that city within five days numbered 1,370.

During a storm on the Ladrador coast, which raged from the 11th to the 15th of October, twenty vessels were wrecked and 100 lives lost. Nearly 2,000 shipwrecked persons are on the shore in a destitute condition.

It is now reported that seventy vessels and 300 lives were lost during the recent hurricane on the Labrador coast. Several of the castaways have perished from exposure, and hundreds who escaped from the wrecks are in a starving condition.

A statement of the business done by the Grand Trunk Railway for the six months ended June 30 last was laid before the annual meeting of the company at London by Sir Henry Tyler. There was a decrease in earnings and an increase in working expenses. This was attributed to the low rates brought about by unnecessary competition.

FOREIGN.

Prince Bonaparte has issued a manifesto urging his friends to uphold the republic of France, as the monarchists are at present too weak to secure the government, and should not precipitate a revolution.

All the European powers have accepted the Porte's invitation to attend a conference at Constantinople upon the annexation of Roumelia by Bulgaria. A body of Servian troops have crossed the Bulgarian frontier, and an opposing force has been sent out to meet them.

Mr. Bleazby, an extensive land-owner in the county of Cork, Ireland, joined the Parnellites, and abated his rents 15 per cent. In addition to the reduction of 30 per cent. made by the courts.

The Patriotic Union of Dublin has issued a manifesto denouncing the Irish National League, and appealing to the people to maintain the integrity of the empire.

The ship-building trade on the Clyde is greatly depressed, over seventy per cent. of the workmen being out of employment.

The Pope recently sent a letter of thanks to the Mikado of Japan for protecting missionaries. In reply it was announced that a Japanese embassy will soon be dispatched to the Vatican.

At Perigneux, France, the Chancelade quarries suddenly fell in, destroying a village situated on the ground above the stone-pits and killing many people.

A naval officer who was sent from Washington to visit the principal stations of Europe reports that the stronger powers have each one hundred or more torpedo-boats, and their coasts are divided into districts. France has twenty-four dry-docks, completely equipped, where convict labor is largely employed. Russia ranks third among the naval powers, with 270 vessels, and Germany has within twenty years risen to the fourth place.

The steamship Great Eastern, the largest vessel ever built, has been sold at auction in London for £26,260.

A dispatch from Portsmouth, England, announces the arrival of the Genesta at that port. She displayed three first-prize flags won in her contests with American yachts. Great enthusiasm was manifested by the crowds on board the men-of-war and yachts in the harbor.

The Earl of Kenmore refuses to reduce rents on his estates in the County Kerry, Ireland, and it is feared that the tenants will resist payment to the point of bloodshed.

HERE AND THERE.

First Auditor Chenoweth is still engaged in pursuing his investigations into the operations and expenditures of the scientific bureaus supported by the Government. He finds additional evidence as he goes along of an utter lack of knowledge on the subject of legal disbursements, which will, in his opinion, result in suits for recovery, similar to that brought against ex-Commissioner Loring, of the Agricultural Bureau, for perverting an appropriation.

Noah Porter has tendered his resignation as President of Yale College, to take effect at the next commencement. He has held the position since 1871.

Mormon missionaries continue to make their appearance in Central Illinois. They travel in pairs, and appeal to the charitable for subsistence.

In the Grand Street Museum at Brooklyn, the elephant, which had on previous occasions evinced a great dislike for the lion, burst his shackles and made an onset on the lion's cage. The latter beast seized the elephant's trunk and a fierce fight resulted, the elephant being finally got under control by the keepers, but not until he had smashed both tusks and suffered lacerations of the head. One of the lion's legs is broken, and Keeper Goodwin is confined to his bed from bruises which he received during the conflict.

The Loyalist Unions in Ireland have already arranged to put twenty Parliamentary candidates in the field to oppose the Parnellites.

A gang of burglars entered the residence of Sir Frederick Ulrich Graham, at Carlisle, England, and had packed up nearly all the valuables when a servant rushed out for help. A fight took place between the robbers and the police, in which two of the latter were fatally wounded.

An attempt was made at Paris to assassinate M. de Freycinet, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs. The shot proved harmless, and before the culprit could fire again he was arrested by a police officer. When the would-be assassin was examined at the police station he confessed he did not know M. de Freycinet personally, and refused to give his name or occupation.

The President has appointed Frederick H. Winston of Chicago to be Minister Resident and Consul General to Persia.

Carl Schurz is said to have made overtures for the purchase of the Boston Post (Democratic), with a view to making it an independent paper.

The assignment of Jacob Kuhn, manufacturer and wholesale dealer in jeans clothing at Louisville, is announced, with liabilities of about $60,000.

A frightful accident is reported from East Saginaw, Mich., the particulars of which are contained in the following dispatch from that city: "Fire broke out on the tug C. C. McDonald, lying at the dock about two hundred feet south of Genesee avenue bridge and a large number of persons rushed upon the bridge to witness the fire. The draw was open to let the fire tugs through, and a moment later a portion of the foot-walk of the bridge gave away with a crash, precipitating forty to sixty people into the swift current of the river, which is fifteen feet deep. The night was dark and no lights near, while people struggling and shouting in the water amid the broken debris of the bridge made up a scene that baffles description. As quickly as possible help was obtained, row-boats manned, boards and planks thrown out, and the work of picking up commenced. Only one grappling-iron was on the bridge, but a supply sent down from the Tittabawasse booms was put into use as soon as possible. The current is very strong, and many of those picked up had drifted some distance down stream. A number of those rescued were more or less injured. Two bodies have been recovered, and a half-dozen others are still missing. One person, who was rescued at the time of the mishap, will die from injuries sustained."

The agreement among the base-ball managers to cut down base-ball players' salaries to a maximum of $2,000 is a very bold step. It was hardly to be supposed they would be equal to it. It is very much as if railroad corporations should refuse to pay railroad lawyers more than $20,000 a year. At this rate base-ball playing as a livelihood will be quoted below plumbing, Niagara Falls hack drivers, and the ownership of Michigan pine lands.—Free Press.

Probably the three youngest criminals ever convicted in East Saginaw are Delos Frost, Eldie Booth, and Wesley Brown, who have been sentenced to the Reform School until eighteen years of age. The oldest boy is fifteen years old; the youngest twelve. One night last week the boys entered the residence of Mrs. Booth, grandmother of one of the boys, and stole $71, and started for Texas. They were arrested next morning while at pistol practice.

—Said a brother recently, speaking of the disinclination of ministers to accept a humbler field than they have once occupied, or that they think their talents should command, "there is no stepping down in Christ's work. An angel does not question whether he is sent to a king or sent to a peasant—the only requirement is obedience." "But all ministers are not angels," was observed. "True in one sense, but they are God's messengers. They have a work so grand that angels might also envy them. The richest fruits of my ministry were borne on a field which I had been warned not to enter, of which I had been told that no minister could stay there."—Detroit Christian Herald.

Capital and Labor.

From the Harbor Springs Republican.

Below we give a table showing the loss to laboring men in the Saginaw Valley during the recent strike, as compiled by Commissioner of Labor C. V. R. Pond, as follows:

Report concerning the so-called Saginaw strike, having its commencement July 5, and final termination Sept. 1, 1885, as compiled from information furnished by the mills affected in Saginaw and Bay Counties, showing the loss in wages to employes:

Number of mills addressed	86
Number of mills reporting	79
Number of mills not reporting	7
Number of mills not affected	—86
Tittabawassee Boom Co not reporting	1
Location of mills not reporting
Bay City	3
West Bay City	1
East Saginaw	2
Saginaw City	1—7

Products of the mills not reporting for the year 1884:

Lumber, feet	26,100,000
Shingles	1,813,000
Total days closed, 76 mills	2,226½
Average days closed, each mill	29¼
Greatest number of days closed, one mill	46
Least number of days closed, one mill	2½
Daily wages, when closed, of 76 mills	$9,197.14
Total wages not earned because of closing 76 mills	282,015.50
Lumber not cut, because mills being closed, feet	181,232,000
Shingles not cut because mills being closed, number	25,739,000
Estimated cost of putting same on vessels or cars	$43,399.31
Total loss to wage-earners by stopping of 76 mills	$325,331.80

GEN. GRANT'S LAST WORDS.

Counseling Peace and Harmony Between the Federals and Confederates.

A reunion of the veterans of General Grant's old regiment—the Twenty-first Illinois Volunteers—was recently held at Neoga, Ill. Colonel Fred Grant was present and in response to requests for a speech said:

"I do not intend to make you a speech, for I have not been trained as a public talker. I have here a document that I would like to read to you. It is the last line written by my father upon matters pertaining to the war, and has never before been made public. As he entered into the war with you for his first companions, and as he always spoke of your regiment with affectionate interest, it is fitting that you should be the first to hear his parting words. This is what he wrote upon the pages I hold here:

"I feel that we are on the eve of a new era, when there is to be great harmony between the Federals and the Confederates. I cannot stay to be a living witness to the correctness of this prophecy, but I feel it within me that it is to be so. The universally kind feeling expressed for me at a time when it was supposed that each day would prove my last seems to me the beginning of the answer to 'Let us have peace.' The expressions of these kindly feelings are not restricted to a section of the country nor to a division of the people. They came from individual citizens of all nationalities, from all denominations—the Protestant, the Catholic, and the Jew—and from the various societies of the land, scientific, educational, religious, or otherwise. Politics did not enter into the matter at all. I am not egotist enough to suppose all this significance should be given this matter because I was the object of it. But the war between the States was a very bloody and a very costly war. One side or the other had to yield principles they deemed dearer than life before it could be brought to an end. I commanded the whole of the mighty host engaged on the victorious side; I was, no matter whether deservedly so or not, a representer of that side of the controversy. It is a significant and gratifying fact that Confederates should have joined heartily in this spontaneous move. I hope the good feeling inaugurated may continue to the end."

A general amen went up from the audience, and then the meeting quietly adjourned.

Chickens Come Home to Roost.

The Democratic advantage that worries the Republicans so much is having the solid South, which they envy, bemoan, and curse. It worries them the more, knowing it was in their power to have this advantage themselves, and that they, recklessly cast it away as a thing too despicable for them. They did seek to solidify her for themselves, and were sanguine of success, but made the blunder of selecting carpet-baggers and scalawags, white and black, as their agents to execute so imposing a task. These did make her solid, but not for their master. Having failed with the South, the Republicans then tried to solidify the North, and failed with her, too. We see, therefore, that they cannot solidify either North or South for themselves, though effective in such work for the Democracy. The Democracy having received a formidable element of strength from the Republicans, are duly grateful for the great favor, especially as they know they could never have given it themselves.

The Democrats accepted it in good faith, and now that it has turned out so good, the Republicans demand that it be broken up and big pieces given back to them. The Democracy find it too good to give back a particle, and hold with Lady Bray that when a real good thing be thrust on you, keep it.

In ridding themselves of it, the Republicans should have thought of its prospective value and preserved it well for themselves, which they could so easily have done. Not having done it confirms what was already known of them—total lack of statesmanship, and even of sagacity.

When the rebellion ceased the South was utterly prostrate at their feet. They dominated in every branch of the Government, doing as they pleased irrespective of the constitution or aught else. The misery of the South at that time made her long for charity. With absolute power in their hands, and with such a victim under their feet, it was easy for them then, by show of a little charity, such as Christians are wont to show the vanquished, to conciliate her and attach her solidity to themselves, as she is now to the Democracy; but madness ruled them, and being then, now, ever, purely sectional—conceived, born, and bred in sectionalism—their sectional hate would tolerate no prayer for charity to their helpless victim. With barbaric glee they let loose, and upheld with military, swarms of ravenous knaves, known as carpet-baggers and scalawags, to victimize still further their victim already crushed with every woe.

The crimes of these knaves, and their mockeries of legislation, of justice, of government, are a glaring blot on the nineteenth century; and against this madness the Democracy, being powerless, could do no more than entreat, and as Christians they could do no less. Their humble entreaties were met with vile epithets and opprobrium. With a barbaric goad, the Republicans drove the South to take refuge, for her life, in solitude and in the nationality of the Democracy. What else could the victim have done, or where else have gone?

Having solidified the South in the Democracy, they now howl like injured innocence at their own work. Such conduct is worthy only of carpet-baggers and scalawags.

Habituated to violation of laws of the land, they believe they could violate with impunity those of nature too. They got a set of demons, black, grizzle, red, to set solidly on an egg, and thought, by such a combination, to get a powerful, supernatural rooster that would give them constant triumph; but the egg, true to itself and to Democratic warning, gave a very natural chicken that comes home to roost, but walks only in the good neighbor's yard, where there are no bad children to trouble him.

Cause will have effect, and the best way to remove a disagreeable effect is to remove the cause. Republican sectionality being the parent of Southern Democratic solidity, all that is required to get rid of the latter is to get rid of the former. If the Republicans be truly patriotic they will make this sacrifice—disband and reform in nationality—which is, of course, Democratic domain; but the Democracy is generous and will grant them broad margin on their good soil.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Republican Cant.

Hypocrisy and cant seem to be the chief stock in trade of Republican candidates and platform-makers this year. In no State where a platform has been adopted has the party dared to make a square, manly utterance on the liquor issue, lest by so doing it might lose the vote either of the Prohibitionists or anti-Prohibitionists. Its general attitude is substantially that described in the Iowa platform. It proclaims itself "the steady upholder of the right and duty of the State to regulate the traffic in liquor by such methods as will suppress most of its evils; but has never made the support of prohibition a test of party fealty." In other words, it wants the support of Prohibitionists, high-license men, and all who believe in any method of suppressing the liquor traffic, but does not propose to commit the party to suppression in any form. This differs a little from the attitude of the party in Michigan, where it declares with emphasis for the right of the people to vote in favor of a prohibitory amendment, but holds itself absolved from any obligation to support the amendment. The object, however, is the same in both cases; and the canting hypocrisy is the same.

The platforms in Massachusetts, Ohio, and New York are no better; but the most notable exhibition of cant is furnished by the Republican candidate for Governor in the latter State. He has been arraigned by the prohibitionists for his presidency in a wine-making company, and the charge seems to him serious enough to call for a defense. He makes one, therefore. And the pith of it is that he is not and has not been a wine-maker in any wicked sense, but simply as an act of friendship and pure philanthrophy. A cousin of his, who was engaged in the wicked business, died suddenly and left him to execute his will. When he came to look into the affairs of the deceased he found that the only way in which anything could be saved for the widow and children was to take the presidency of the wine company and continue the business. He did so, for four years, and then, having wound up the estate and gotten the business into a prosperous condition, resigned. And this canting plea that he conducted, not for gain to himself but to others, a business which the Prohibitionists regard as immoral is his only answer to their indictment.

It was comparatively unimportant, perhaps, what answer to make so far as his support to the Prohibitionists is concerned, for there has been no likelihood from the first that he would receive any support from them. But knowing this he might, it would seem, have given him an honest, manly answer. The plea which he makes would have quite as much force from the standpoint of the Prohibitionists if his deceased cousin had been engaged in the lottery business, or carrying on a receivership of stolen goods. If the wine business is immoral—and he cantingly asks the Prohibitionists to believe that he so regards it, his carrying it on under the cloak of philanthrophy was still more immoral.—Detroit Free Press.

"Honeycombed with Corruption."

During these trying times of conventions and elections it should not be forgotten that the work of "cleaning the Augean stables" goes merrily on unchecked. There appears to have been as much need for the shovel and broom in the outlying bureas as in the main departments of the Government, as the corrupt and wasteful methods which prevailed under Republican misrule seem to have penetrated every branch of the public service. It was scarcely thought in the beginning of the era of reform that the purely scientific bureaus were corrupt. The revelations regarding the geodetic and geological surveys demonstrate that even science was blended with politics to the profit of the ringsters.

It appears that the largest percentage of tangible results of the bureau of geological survey is found in the publication of scientific works at Government expense, which have no connection with the objects for which the survey was established. On such books nearly all the appropriation made by Congress has been wasted. The notorious Hayden was the originator of this precious bureau, and he found it very handy for junketing trips at public expense. It is stated that the survey, depending for its existence upon the goodwill of Congress, year by year, and not having a definite, recognized status under the Government, indulges in ordinary lobbying to procure funds, and that money is thus wasted every year to get and keep the good-will of Congress. The method adopted for consulting and flattering the average Congressman consists of distributing books and photographs and taking Congressmen's sons and relatives on expeditions in the name of science. So far as the actual survey of the Territories is concerned, the results are extremely meager in comparison to the money expended.

The overhauling of this cumbersome and expensive bureau clearly demonstrates that the administration can scarcely be too vigilant and determined in making a thorough investigation of every department and bureau, if all the leaks are to be stopped and the swindling and extravagant practices fostered by Republican administrations are to be entirely eliminated. The allusion in the platform of the last convention to the Government being "honeycombed with corruption" meant more than mere words, and the party's pledge to purify it must be faithfully redeemed.—Omaha Herald.

The Ohio Result and the Administration.

From two classes comes the claim that the result in Ohio is a rebuke of President Cleveland and his administration. One class is made up of the Blaine Republicans, who have not yet recovered from the bitterness of defeat, and are anxiously casting about for such crumbs of comfort as can be extracted from political events. The other class is composed of the Democrats who regard the President's administration as a failure because he has not replaced every Republican in office with a Democrat. For this neglect it is claimed the Ohio Democracy has rebuked him by not supporting the party ticket.

The claim is absurd. There is slight ground, if any, for a claim that the Ohio result has any bearing whatever upon the President or his administration. The election was about as distinctly a State election, and about as free from any complication with national issues, as any that was ever held in Ohio or elsewhere. The State is Republican and the Republicans carried it. They may have been aroused by Sherman's appeal to passion. They probably were to some extent; and to that extent national considerations entered into the canvass and affected the result. But nobody will be foolish enough to claim that revived fanaticism on the subject of the Southern vote means approval or disapproval of the President. If the Southern Republican does not get his rights at the ballot-box, as John Sherman so vociferously and dogmatically declares, it is not due in any sense to the administration now in power. If it is chargeable to any administration it is to that of President Arthur and his Republican predecessors; for it was under them that all the alleged outrages which grieve the sensitive soul of Sherman occurred.

So far as the Republican claimants are concerned, this claim that the Ohio result bears upon President Cleveland is as unimportant as it is untrue. In the case of the Democratic claimants it is fortunate the claim is untrue. For if the Democratic defeat in Ohio does mean anything special in connection with the administration it means approval and not rebuke. Whatever else may be said, either for or against the Democratic candidates and leaders in Tuesday's contest, this is true beyond question. They represent unequivocally what there was in the Ohio Democracy of opposition to the reform principles of Cleveland and his administration. If the Ohio Democracy had proposed any rebuke for the President the effective way to administer it would have been to elect the men who shelved Pendleton for his reform record, not to permit their defeat.—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Lincoln Was an Offensive Partisan.

Before President Lincoln had been in office six weeks the victors had all the spoils worth taking. Not a Democratic postmaster with a salary of more than $400 was anywhere to be found, and from that day until the 4th of March last Democrats have not been permitted to hold an appointive Federal office. There seemed nothing extraordinary or out of course in the prediction that in event of Democratic success there would be what was called a clean sweep.

The new administration has been in operation six months, and there has been no clean sweep—there has been no clean sweep at all. In the 2,323 Presidential postoffices there have been but 487 changes, and a large percentage of these were appointments made to fill vacancies created by death, resignation, or expiration of term. There are 48,421 postoffices of the fourth class; that is, offices in which the postmasters are appointed without the advice and consent of the Senate upon the nomination of the President, but by the Postoffice Department. In these there have been but 6,400 changes, many of these appointments being made to fill vacancies arising from ordinary causes.—Chicago Herald.

Davenport's Record on Labor Questions.

The first flush of Republican satisfaction over having a barreled candidate for Governor of New York is wearing off, and it is becoming evident to the enthusiasts that they are going to have very hard work to save Mr. Davenport's distance in the race. Mr. Davenport has a record, and the workingmen who have been looking it up are not at all satisfied with it. While Mr. Davenport was a member of the New York Senate, he dodged voting on every bill in the interests of labor offered except one, and that he voted against.

GRANT AND JOHNSON.

Further Concerning the Misunderstanding Between the President and the General.

Gen. Sherman Interviewed—What Ben Butler Says of the Impeachment Trial.

Sherman Sheds Light.

[St. Louis special.]

The Globe-Democrat this morning contains the following interview with General Sherman on the pending controversy as to the relations of General Grant with President Johnson:

"What was your understanding of President Johnson's intention in sending General Grant to Mexico?"

"Grant was being spoken of for the Presidency, and it was supposed that the intention was to get him out of the way. I do not think, however, that Johnson feared any political foe. It was thought that Seward most dreaded the power of Grant and was most anxious to get rid of him."

"How was it you were sent to Mexico instead of Grant?"

Before replying to this question, General Sherman rose and retired to a room in the rear of the library, into which he had first ushered the reporter. When he returned he held in his hand some proof-sheets of his forthcoming book, "After the War." "I have all the documents here," he remarked, "and they will be published in time." Referring to the proof-sheets, he continued:

"In the year 1866 I was summoned from New Mexico to Washington. When I arrived at Washington I called upon General Grant at his house in I street, and asked him the reason of my being ordered to Washington. He explained that President Johnson wanted to see me, but that he did not know the why or wherefore. He supposed, however, that it had some connection with an order he had received to escort the newly appointed Minister, Hon. Lew Campbell, of Ohio, to the court of Juarez, the President-elect of Mexico, which country was still in possession of the Emperor Maximilian, supported by a corps of French troops, commanded by Marshal Bazaine. Gen. Grant denied the right of the President to order him upon a diplomatic mission unattended by troops. He stated to me that he would disobey the order and take the consequences.

"I then went to President Johnson, who received me with great cordiality, and said that he was very glad I had come. He stated that Gen. Grant was about to leave for Mexico on business of importance, and that he wanted me to remain in Washington and command the army in Gen. Grant's absence. I then informed the President that Gen. Grant would not go. He seemed amazed by that statement, and observed that it was generally understood that Gen. Grant considered the occupation of Mexico by French troops and the establishment of an empire there with an Austrian prince at its head as hostile to republican America. The President added that the administration had arranged with the French government for the withdrawal of Bazaine's troops, which would leave the country free for President Juarez to occupy the City of Mexico, and the fact that Mr. Campbell was accompanied by so distinguished a soldier as Gen. Grant would emphasize the act of the United States. I then reiterated that Gen. Grant would not go, and that he (President Johnson) could not afford to quarrel with Gen. Grant at that time. I then suggested that Gen. Hancock or Gen. Sheridan could perform the same office, and that, if neither of them was acceptable, I myself would go. The President answered, 'If you will go, that will answer perfectly.' Accordingly the following order was issued:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, Oct. 30, 1866.

"To the Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

"SIR—Gen. U. S. Grant having found it inconvenient to assume the duties specified in my letter to you of the 26th inst., you will please relieve him and assign them in all respects to William T. Sherman, Lieutenant General of the armies of the United States. By the way of directing Gen. Sherman in the performance of his duties, you will furnish him with a copy of your special orders to Gen. Grant, made in compliance with my letter of the 26th inst., together with a copy of the instructions of the Secretary of State to Lewis D. Campbell, Esq., therein mentioned. The Lieutenant General will proceed to the execution of his duties without delay. Very respectfully yours,

ANDREW JOHNSON."

"In pursuance of that order, I went to Vera Cruz in the United States ship Susquehanna. We then cruised to Matamoras, where the Minister was in communication with friends of Juarez, and from there I returned to St. Louis. At New Orleans, however, I received the following dispatch from Secretary Stanton:

"WASHINGTON, Dec. 21, 1866.

"Lieutenant General Sherman, New Orleans:

"Your telegram of yesterday has been submitted to the President. You are authorized to proceed to St. Louis at your convenience. Your performance of the special and delicate duties assigned to you is cordially appreciated by the President, the Cabinet, and this department.

"EDWIN M. STANTON."

"Have you the instructions to Grant of which you received a copy?"

"Yes, I have copies of them somewhere, but they are on file in the State Department at Washington. Some time subsequent to my return—I do not remember the date—Mr. Stanton was suspended under the tenure of the civil-office bill, and General Grant was appointed by President Johnson to be Secretary of War ad interim. He exercised the functions of that office until January 14, 1868, when, after some proceedings in the Senate, Mr. Stanton was reinstated as Secretary of War. This caused trouble between Gen. Grant and the President, which was probably never healed. That quarrel was the beginning of the trouble which resulted in the impeachment of President Johnson, who was regularly tried by the Senate and acquitted. After that Mr. Stanton resigned and Gen. Schofield was appointed Secretary of War, and he remained in that office to the end of the Johnson administration.

"No, I never understood Gen. Grant to express any fear that Mr. Johnson contemplated any violence. Mr. Johnson firmly believed that the Constitution and laws then existing were all sufficient for the reconstruction of the Southern States. Congress thought otherwise, and in the quarrel between Congress and the President, Grant was in danger of being made the scapegoat."

Gen. Sherman again returned to the rear of his library, and this time he emerged carrying a large file of Gen. Grant's letters. These letters from Gen. Grant cover the period in question. They are all of a friendly and confidential nature, but there is nothing in them which could go to show that Grant ever apprehended any national danger. When Stanton was restored to office, Johnson accused Grant of having surrendered his office without sufficient resistance. That was the cause of the quarrel. It was a fight between the President and Congress, and Grant was not willing that they should wage it over his shoulders. Stanton being backed by Congress, Grant retired. Johnson was hostile to Stanton, and he did not want him in his cabinet. Grant concluded that the best way out of the difficulty was to let the President, Congress, and Stanton fight it out among themselves.

"I think the papers are making too much of this controversy. It is simply an effort to rekindle the embers of a fire which has long since died out. I do not believe Mr. Chauncey Depew intended to do more than repeat from memory a statement made by Gen. Grant at a dinner table. He is a very honorable gentleman, but he, no doubt, thought there was something in this matter. But there was nothing more in Mr. Johnson's attitude than the ordinary political differences which will exist between men of different parties.

"I repeat again, there was no violence intended. Everybody was sick and tired of war. Nobody thought of fighting, except on paper. After Stanton was removed, I wanted President Johnson to nominate Gen. Jacob D. Cox as Secretary of War, and his confirmation by the Senate would have settled the whole controversy. Mr. Beverly Johnson coincided with me in this particular, but the President would fight it out in his own way.

"As I have already stated, Mr. Johnson was impressed with the belief that with the constitution and the laws he could successfully reconstruct the South. Mr. Lincoln, I think, was of the same opinion. Congress, however, wanted to provide the machinery and dictate the terms upon which the States that had seceded should be received back into the Union."

Gen. Schofield's Reminiscences.

[Chicago special.]

Maj. Gen. John M. Schofield, who succeeded Stanton as Secretary of War under President Johnson, was in a position to know as much, perhaps, as anyone else concerning the unwritten history alluded to in Chauncey Depew's account of his interview with Gen. Grant. Like Gen Sherman, however, he declines to tell all that he knows.

"It is true that I was intimately associated with President Johnson, Gen. Grant, and the Cabinet officers during a portion of the period you mention," he said yesterday, when questioned by a reporter for the Times, "and knew all that was going on. I may say that there are records in existence which would explain everything, but they are of a confidential nature, and cannot be made public. For the same reason I do not feel at liberty to speak. It is an indisputable fact that that was a very critical period in the history of the nation. Johnson was understood to be a candidate for another term, and nobody doubted that the Republicans intended to run Grant for the Presidency. Under the constitution the President was Commander-in-chief of the Army, while Grant was the General in command, and there were fourteen States practically under military rule. The friends of both these parties were terribly in earnest, and at such a time—so shortly after the close of the war—there was nothing absurd in the apprehension that the contest might develop into a collision of arms. I was aware that Gen. Grant believed that President Johnson's plan of sending him to Mexico was a ruse to get him out of the country, but what foundation he had for such belief I do not know. My mission to France was in relation to the Mexican affair, and was in harmony with the views of the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and Gen. Grant. The purpose of my visit was to terminate the occupation of Mexico by the French. I went in November, 1865, and returned in May, 1866, so that I arrived in Washington while the impeachment trial was in progress. In the following fall I was made Secretary of War. My position was that of a mediator; that is, I was put at the head of the War Department to conciliate both parties by divesting the office of any pronounced political color. It was a measure deemed necessary at that time to keep down, as much as possible, the bitter feeling on both sides.

"President Johnson," continued General Schofield, "was the firmest, most obstinate man in his adherence to his political views that I ever knew, and of course he would have carried out his views if it had been possible. I have no reason to believe that he was not conscientious in his views. Personally I have never believed that he contemplated any treasonable measure, though, as I said before, I do not know on what grounds General Grant based his opinion."

Col. Sam Small Defends Johnson.

[Atlanta (Ga.) telegram.]

The Atlanta Constitution prints an article from Col. Sam W. Small on the revelations of the Depew letter. When President Johnson retired to his home in Greenville, Tenn., he set about arranging his papers so that his biographer might have no trouble in dealing with the incidents of his life. About the events now under discussion he was especially particular. He called Col. Small to his aid in that work, and thus the latter came into the most intimate relations with the ex-President. Since that time all of Mr. Johnson's family have died save Mrs. Patterson, who was mistress of the white house. For the purpose of refreshing his memory Col. Small has visited Mrs. Patterson, and the present statements are the result: First, Andrew Johnson, on reaching the presidency, adopted the policy of Lincoln, as attested by Gen. Grant himself in evidence before a Congressional committee in 1867, full extracts from which are given. Second, at the time when Depew alleges that ex-Confederates were swarming around Washington, they could not have done so because their paroles kept them at home. Third, Johnson never favored martial trials for Confederate leaders. He secured the written opinions of Evarts, Charles O'Conor, and like men, by which he was guided. Fourth, the naming of Gen. Grant to accompany Lewis D. Campbell was done at the written request of Campbell, who thought Grant's military prestige would aid him. Fifth, the statement that Grant, in Johnson's presence in the cabinet, declined to go because it was a diplomatic mission, and the alleged scene which followed, was declared by Mr. Johnson to Mr. Small, in a conversation before the death of the former, to be false in every particular. Grant did not go because he feared that General Hancock might be appointed Secretary of War in place of Mr. Stanton. Sixth, Mrs. Patterson utterly denies all the alleged secret history concerning her father which has been published. In this she is sustained by the widow and son of the late Gideon Welles, who was Secretary of the Navy. Col. Small produces abundant documentary evidence to sustain all his statements.

Gov. Hendricks Talks.

The Indianapolis News contains an interview with Vice President Hendricks about the story put into circulation by Chauncey M. Depew to the effect that President Andrew Johnson contemplated the establishment of a congress composed entirely of rebel sympathizers.

"That story won't do," said Mr. Hendricks, "and public opinion will not sustain any such charges made twenty years after the alleged events happened, and after all the persons who were directly connected with them are dead. Personally I know nothing of Mr. Johnson's opinions or intentions further than the information that came to me in the position that I held. I was in the United States Senate, and I both spoke and voted against the impeachment of Johnson. While I never had any conversation with him on the subject referred to by Depew, I am sure that Johnson had no such intentions. He believed in restoring, and not in reconstructing, States, and that the Federal Government had no right to change or abrogate their constitutions. I think Mr. Lincoln had this view also. I have no doubt Johnson wanted Mr. Stanton removed, but it was on personal grounds, for they were not friends. I cannot believe he had any such purpose as that attributed to him, and I have never heard it charged before the last few days. It is not likely that such an important political matter could have remained silent for twenty years. I have read the various statements about it in the papers, and I am inclined to give the greatest credence to that of Judge Goodin, of Greenfield, whose recollection about such matters is always accurate, and who was then in a position to know what President Johnson wanted to do."

Ben Butler Interviewed.

[Boston special.]

Gen. Butler said to-day that there were many reasons why the Grant-Johnson matter was not brought into the impeachment trial. Johnson was not charged with the offense of which Grant mistrusted him, and the evidence they could have produced would have been incompetent. There was no legal evidence by which it could have been proven. Gen. Grant could not have disclosed it. There was another project of President Johnson's, as to revolutionizing the Government, which was not brought into the impeachment proceedings. "I had some very strong moral evidence," said Gen. Butler, "which I did not care to make known in the impeachment proceedings. The facts, however, were not so conclusive that I deemed it proper to exhibit an article of impeachment, founded on them, against the President. I still retain some of the instruments of evidence that strongly tend to support my belief. The proposition of Mr. Johnson to control the Government, differing from that of Gen. Grant, it now seems to me, for the first time, must have been made after Gen. Grant had refused to accede to it. What was known to me was not in shape to be brought before the public."

General Opinion.

[New York telegram.]

The Herald of this city prints a long installment of interviews with persons on the Depew matter relative to President Johnson. Frank Thompson, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Col. Fred Grant reiterate their former statements. The latter said: "I have heard my father say again and again the same things in very much the same language. I have documentary evidence in my possession that would be collateral proof of the facts referred to in the conversation my father had with Mr. Depew, and I intend to collate them and my recollections upon that subject."

Frederick W. Seward, secretary of Secretary Seward, said he never heard anything of the story in question, and, like Hugh McCulloch, the story being new to him, he doubted its correctness.

Gen McClellan said he knew nothing of the charges, as he was in Europe.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Bontecou's Nose.

The last Petoskey Record pitches into Hon. C. S. Hampton, and attempts to show that he alone was wholly responsible for the change in postmaster at Charlevoix, and for the appointment of Mr. Strang instead of Mr. Eaton. The only thing proven by the article is that neither Mr. Bontecou nor those who "posted" him know anything about the matter. That Mr. Hampton hastened the settlement of the question is a fact, but that is all he did do. Mr. Strang was appointed on the petition of Charlevoix democrats, and without any apparent opposition. We believe the appointment is entirely satisfactory to the democracy of Charlevoix. The only "kicking" we have heard of is by those republicans who hope to distort the facts and create a factional fight and a division of the local democracy. Mr. Eaton's services for democracy in the past are well known, and from present indications his rewards are likely to be just as substantial as those of any other man in the county. Mr. Hampton is a greenbacker, a fusionist, and a shrewd, successful manager. He is feared by the republicans more than any other man in the district. As to his meddling propensities as charged in the headlines to the Record article, Bontecou better make no comparisons. Bontecou's nose is frequently found poking into other people's business. He is all the time meddling. He meddles with Petoskey democracy as well as Charlevoix democracy. He is to-day, we are told, in collusion with certain dissatisfied democrats trying to influence appointments. If democrats must accept the assistance of those outside their own party, it is certainly better to listen to the advice of those working for the same end and purpose as themselves, than to submit to those pretended friends who are at heart their enemies, and are leaving nothing undone to destroy them as a party. Bro. Bontecou, just keep your own nose at home, and remember: when Charlevoix democrats make up their mind to accomplish something, they don't ask advice of their enemies, but quietly go to work and do it themselves.

The Death of Gen. Geo. B. McClellan.

Major Gen. Geo. B. McClellan died at 2 o'clock Thursday morning at Orange, N. J., of neuralgia of the heart. He had for the past two weeks suffered occasionally from pains at the heart. Wednesday he felt in good spirits and with his wife and daughter visited friends in the neighborhood. Before returning to his home he made an appointment with a gentleman to meet him this morning at 11 o'clock. On his return home he ate heartily and spent the evening in conversation with his wife and daughter, retiring at 10 o'clock. At 11 o'clock the pains returned so severe that a messenger was dispatched on horseback to the general's physician. The doctor came at once, and for four hours endeavored to give him relief. His efforts were unsuccessful. At 3:10 A. M. the sufferer sighed, smiled and said. "Thank God, I have pulled through. I am now feeling relieved." A moment later he raised himself up on one hand, opened his eyes, looked about the room, and fell back dead. He was 59 years of age.

A great and chivalrous spirit has passed from earth. One of the most brilliant soldiers of modern times has lain down to rest. Simple and single hearted in his private life, frank, brave and knightly as a Chevalier Bayard in his military character George B. McClellan was a model citizen and a commander worthy to be loved as no other commander of the union armies was.

Whatever may have been his faults, Gen. McClellan's partial failure as a commander was not due to his own lack of ability to cope with a foe like Lee. He was not cordially sustained by the administration. Political enemies at Washington were constantly seeking to poison the mind of President Lincoln against him by disparaging his qualities as a military chieftain. They even went further than that. They pretended to question his loyalty to the union cause! As strong a partisan as James G. Blaine tardily concedes in the first volume of the superb historical work on wkich he is still engaged, that McClellan was the victim not only of the government's half-hearted confidence in him but also of the machinations of political enemies at the national capitol. We are profoundly convinced—and it is the deliberate opinion of the best military authorities—that if McDowell had been allowed to re-inforce McClellan, Richmond would have fallen within a week after the junction. That was the greatest blunder of Lincoln's administration. McDowell himself protested against the order directing him to return to the Shenandoah Valley to intercept Stonewall Jackson. He clearly pointed out that he could not get back in time to inflict any damage on Jackson. The latter's descent in the valley was simply a ruse of Gen. Lee to alarm the government and frighten it into recalling McDowell's force to the defense of Washington. The truth is, the Zach. Chandlers and the Ben. Wades, the fierce political warriors who were denouncing McClellan as a traitor, etc., were nearly scared out of their wits when they imagined that their precious carcasses were in danger, and they got around the president and by their frantic appeals influenced him to order McDowell to retrace his steps. This the redoubtable political warriors believed would serve a double purpose, viz., it would keep Jackson away from Washington, thus insuring their own personal safety, and it would weaken McClellan and force him to abandon the campaign against Richmond. They were afraid of "Little Mac's" prestige with the people, and they wanted to crush him.

At 36 years of age Gen. McClellan was called to the exalted and responsible position of commander-in-chief of the union armies. He organized the Army of the Potomac into one of the best fighting forces the world ever saw. He gained the love and confidence of his troops; he inspired hope and enthusiasm where before had been fear and distrust; he forced back the ablest general in the confederate service to the fortifications of Richmond; he fought a score of severe battles and never lost one; he whipped Lee at Antietam in a square fight; and he would eventually have crushed him if he had not again been relieved by an administration which weakly listened to the evil counsels of the politicians. He retired to private life, but not to flaunt his real or fancied wrongs in the face of the public at every opportunity. He quietly and unostentatiously entered upon as honorable a civic career as ever graced the annals of American citizenship. He was nominated for president by the democratic party in 1864, but was defeated. He engaged in business pursuits, and in 1877 was elected governor of New Jersey, serving with distinguished credit in that honorable office until 1881. The last four years of his life were devoted to his family, his domestic relations being of the happiest character. He was truly a grand and good man, and his fame will become the proud heritage of a grateful people.—Lansing Journal.

Plants Used by Man.

It is stated that the number of plants used by man at the present time does not exceed three thousand. Of these about 2,500 are cultivated in America. The varieties used for food do not exceed 600. Of edible fruits and seeds there are 100 classed as vegetables, 100 as roots and bulbs, 50 varieties of grain, about 20 of which produce sugar and syrup. In addition to this perhaps 30 kinds will yield oil, and 6 kinds wine. The number of medicine-supply plants is nearly double that of the fruit-yielding, amounting to 1,140, about 350 of which are employed in the various branches of industry. Of the latter, 76 furnish dye-stuff, 8 wax, 16 salt, and more than 40 supply food for cattle. There are no fewer than 250 kinds of poisonous plants cultivated, among which are only 66 of a narcotic sort, the remainder being classed as deadly poisons.

STUDY OF LEGS.

Living on a Hill Advantageous to Calves —Langtry's Crooked Limbs.

The women and the men too, of course, who live on the hilly side of town, have calves shaped entirely unlike the calves of those who live on the flats. It results from a cause which every man who has paid much attention to physical training understands. Hill-climbing develops the muscles on the side and upper portion of the calves, which level walking never exercises, and which consequently never develop. Olympic club men, to develop side and upper muscles on the lower leg, do trembling-board exercise, springing from the balls of the feet. In that exercise the same muscles are prominently employed as in walking up hill, hence the hill women have legs developed in such form as to reduce, by comparison, the size of the ankles. The swell of the calf is more pronounced in the dwellers on the flat side of town, who are sometimes open to the criticism made by a local French shoe-dealer, who, speaking to the reporter of a wealthy patron, said: "Madam has a beautiful foot, but her leg begins too soon.

In the days when men, at least, were given full license in the matter of dressing their legs to show them and their taste to full advantage, the French had this proverb: "Cela lui fait belle jambe;" literally, "That makes him a handsome leg." This was said of a man's fortune: "He has 100,000 francs of his own and 200,000 which his mother left him." Answer—"Cela lui fait belle jambe." In those days it is plain that the kind of beauty that money took the place of was the beauty of the leg; therefore, how highly priced the handsome leg By an easy reversal might not a handsome leg take the place of a fortune in furthering a man's success in life? As it is now, a man with a love of a mustache, soft, brown, curling, but with an unspeakable leg, will make more headway in a ball-room full of marriageable girls than a man with a perfectly-shaped leg, bagged up in straight-cut broadcloth. This is obviously wrong. One's barber controls one's mustache, but the shape of the leg depends upon the manner of life, the habits and practices of the owner of the leg. That beauty of face indicates simply nothing as to the beauty or ugliness of the leg was signally proven by the case of Mrs. Langtry. After dazing two continents with the beauty of her face, the famous Lily once played Rosalind in proper costume, and has ever since played it, to the amazement of the critics, in a costume including a skirt, which came below her knees. The reason for this is that it would be an easy trick to hang your hat on either of the Lily's knees. An uglier leg than hers was never undraped before an astonished audience. Possibly Lily never knew how ugly her leg is. This commonly occurs, and for a very simple reason. Every man or woman examining his or her legs does so from a front and upward point of view. This is very deceptive, as the side muscles of the calves thus seen give an impression of rounded contour which a side view may totally lack.

The beautiful Langtry might have taken a front view of her legs until the end of time without discovering the dreadful forward shoot of her knees. It is a side view that makes the test. Then the side muscles are no longer deceptive, and the knee, if it is too prominent, stands out, literally, like the nose on a face. Therefore, madam, stand in front of your pier mirror, or, if you have none, lean a washstand mirror against the wall, resting it on the floor, taking care to stand, yourself, so as to get a profile view of your legs. It may give you a surprise. A front view you are of course familiar with, and know whether or not your legs have an accountable attraction for each other at the knees. Man has only a limited opportunity to study this peculiarity—why so many women are knock-kneed. Even his opinion that so many are is founded on observation largely confined to the stage, and it is possible that there may be an affinity between the stage and women with knock-knees. Of course, the professional girl and burlesquer are not included in this study, as they have all been trained how to stand in order to overcome any disposition on the part of their knees to come together. But when the legitimate actress for the first time dons "shape" clothes, a new pair of caressing knees is disclosed. Those who remember Belle Pateman's performance here as Hamlet will remember as straight a pair of legs as has ever carried a legitimate across a California stage, yet there was a noticeable tendency to flock together displayed by the small, shapely legs. Whether this peculiarity obtains in the same proportion among women in private life as among actresses will only be known when women dress so as to display as much from the feet up as they do now from the head down. It is their style of dress, totally hiding their legs, which makes the women so much more difficult to study than men. When one looks at Toby Rosenthal's Constande de Beverly it is her legs which indicate not only her feelings at the moment when she is portrayed, but also much of her character.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Dyeing Silk.

Dyeing silk is always a hand process, as the color of a dyer's hand suggests, and here machinery does not attempt to interfere. Long troughs fill the sloppy and steamy room, in which the great skeins of silk yarn are dipped from cross-sticks, by party-colored human beings, who move them occasionally to and fro to make sure all parts have a fair chance. The muddy hues suggest little of the brilliancy of color that is to be the glory of the completed fabric, and we will not enter into any trade secrets of their composition. But there is good dyeing and bad dyeing, honest dyeing and false dyeing, and a silk-maker who has intent to deceive can make his yarn take 300 per cent of extra weight by the use of metallic substances in the dye-pot. This accounts for some of the cheapness as well as the bad wear of certain foreign fabrics which look as well at first sight as goods at a much higher price. Some of the foreign black silks are so highly "loaded" with nitrate of iron as to give color to the belief in "spontaneous combustion" in silk which caused the North German Steamship Company in 1879 to refuse the weightier foreign silks. The carbon of the silk and the nitrate make a compound closely parallel to gun-cotton, which is simply cotton fibre soaked with nitric acid. American manufacturers challenge consumers to test the purity of their fabrics, which may be done by ravelling the silk into threads. If heavily loaded they will break easily, feel rough to the touch because of the particles of dye, taste inky to the tongue, and burn smouldering into a yellow, greasy ash instead of crispy into almost nothing. These are tests lady buyers of a silk dress should not forget. The range of tint in colored silks is remarkable, and the variety of shade required from year to year by fashion makes a curious pictorial history of the times. One dealer at the Centennial showed a rainbow in silk threads.—From "A Silk Dress," in Harper's Magazine for July.

The Independent

The Largest, the Ablest, the Best

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY WEEKLY.

The most influential religious organ in the States.—The Spectator, London, Eng.

THE INDEPENDENT is one of the best papers in the world. Its good points are many and striking. They have only to be stated to be appreciated; and for proof of our claims appeal may be taken to any of the fifty-two issues for the year. Any number of The Independent will show that its contents are marked by—

ABILITY, VARIETY, AND INTEREST.—The great thinkers, the great story-writers, the great poets, men of the highest reputation in all departments of human knowledge, make up its list of contributors. Religion, philosophy, art, science, literature, travels, discoveries, stories, and all conceivable topics are embraced in the contents, and everybody, old or young, learned and unlearned, without regard to sex, employment, or condition, will find something of special interest in every issue.

COMPREHENSIVENESS.—It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined.

BREADTH, CANDOR, EARNESTNESS.—The Independent is tied to no denomination; it is the organ of no clique or party in state or church. It is free, therefore, to discuss all questions, and to speak its mind candidly. It is not swerved by fear or favor. It is a vigorous defender of the Evangelical faith, it preaches practical righteousness, and earnestly supports all moral reforms. All its columns—the advertising as well as the reading—are free from everything of doubtful or objectionable character. No matter what a person's religion, politics, or profession may be, if he desires to keep up with the times and know what the brightest minds are thinking of, the ablest pens are writing about, and what the world at large is doing—he should read The Independent.

It enumerates the leading manufactures of each state and county, and also gives the number of manufacturing establishments, the amount of capital invested, the number of hands employed, and the value of annual products in each state, territory and county. Price $3. N. W. Ayer & Son Philadelphia.

Editorial correspondence Harbor Springs Independent: "At Beaver Fall just as day was breaking I saw the first natural gas I had ever seen burning. The gas is brought from the gas wells miles away in large pipes and is burned in the furnaces of the manufactories instead of coal. The pressure on the pipes is so great that the flow of gas can not be shut off when it is not needed in the furnaces, and consequently it is burned at the waste pipe, sending up a ruddy flame to a great hight, and brilliantly lighting up the vicinity. Lying in my berth and watching it through the window a brilliant idea struck me. Now there is my good friend Brother Bontecou. He is an inexhaustible natural gas well. His gas cannot be shut off at the end of the campaign but he continues gassing just the same. Why not tap him and light Petoskey with natural gas instead of electricity? Any one is welcome to apply this invention. I don't care to. I tapped Bontecou for a quarter one time and he didn't have it."

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magizine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment, or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

CASH CLUB RATES.

Those of our readers who want a city paper for the coming year can be accommodated by the JOURNAL'S club list. To get the benefit of these reduced rates, all arrears must be paid to date of subscription, and one year in advance in cash.

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

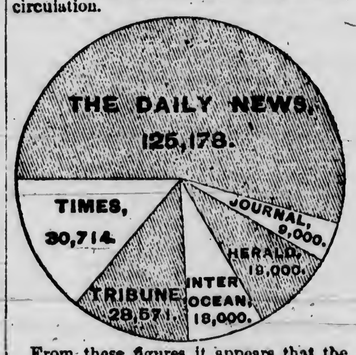
The Chicago Daily News

Has the Largest Daily Circulation in America.

Its issue for the year 1884 averaged 125,178 copies daily, and it is now regularly printing over 130,000 papers a day.

The magnitude of this unequaled circulation is best appreciated when it is said that it exceeds the circulations of all other Chicago dailies combined. Taking from the three standard newspaper directories—Ayer & Son's Annual, Rowell's Directory and Hubbard's Directory—the quotations which most nearly represent the actual circulations of the Chicago press, the following diagram correctly illustrates their relative positions as to extent of circulation.



From these figures it appears that the circulation of THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS exceeds the combined circulations of all the other Chicago dailies by 19,873 copies daily. The reasons for this phenomenal success are obvious:

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a complete newspaper in all that constitutes the best type of American journalism.

It is a member of the Associated Press, and is the only 2-cent paper in the West that possesses this first essential to a complete news service. In addition, it has its own private wire (by lease from the Western Union Telegraph Co.) connecting its Chicago office with New York and Washington, at both of which points it has its own news bureaus. THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS prints ALL the news.

It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS is a "short and to the point" paper. It believes that newspaper reading is but an incident of the day, not its chief business. It accordingly leaves to the "blanket sheets" the monopoly of tiresome and worthless amplification. It seeks to say all that the reader should care to read, and to say it in the shortest possible manner. It is a daily paper for busy people.

It is a clean paper, fit for the family circle. It is a cheap paper—2 cents per day, 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month, $6.00 per year. Sold by all news dealers throughout the Northwest. Mailed to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price.

Where the facilities of a daily mail are not enjoyed THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS is recommended as "the next best." It is a large 8 page, 64 column paper, carefully made up to meet all the varying needs of the family circle. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in America. It is equal to the best.

HER LOVERS.

BY BACHELOR BEN.

My first, my very first, his name was Will—
A handsome fellow; fair, with curling hair,
And lovely eyes. I have his locket still.
He went to Galveston and settled there,
A letter I heard so. Ah, dear me—dear me!
How terribly in love he used to be!

The second, Robert Hill, he told his love
The first night that we met. 'Twas at a ball—
A foolish boy. He carried off my glove.
We sat out half the dances in the hall,
And flirted in the most outrageous way.
Ah, me! how mother scolded all next day.

The third woke up my heart. From night till morn,
From morn till night I dreamed of him,
I treasured up a rosebud he had worn;
My tears and kisses made his picture dim.
Strange that I cannot feel the old, old flame,
When I remember Paul—that was his name.

The fourth and fifth were brothers—twins at that;
Good fellows, kind, devoted, clever, too.
'Twas rather shabby to refuse them flat—
Both in one day, but what else could I do?
My heart was still with Paul, and he had gone
Yacht sailing with the Misses Garretson!

He never cared for me—I found that out—
Despite the foolish clingings of my hope;
A few months proved it clear beyond a doubt.
I steeled my heart; I would not pine or mope,
But masked myself in gayety, and went
To grace his wedding when the cards were sent.

So these were all my loves. My husband? Oh,
I met him down in Florida one fall—
Rich, middle-aged, and prosy, as you know;
He asked me, I accepted; that is all.
A kind, good soul; he worships me; but then
I never count him in with other men.

THERE'S DANGER IN DELAY.

BY STELLA GARR.

The sun had never shone upon so fair a June. The skies were never so blue, the flowers so sweet, the breezes so soft, the hours so rosy. So thought Lorraine Lorrimer.

She lifted her eyes to her companion's face at that moment, and met his looking down at her. The eyes into which she looked were ordinarily laughing and blue, but their expression was intensified just now. Dark and soft, there was an electrical fasination in their gaze that caused the warm blood to tingle in her cheeks and flush over her forehead. Her eyes drooped swiftly. He smiled, and passed his hand caressingly over the small brown one that lay on his arm.

They were not lovers, these two; they were "only friends," as Lorraine would have said, then.

They were paeing with slow, lingering footsteps a long country road, which was shaded by arching trees that met and embraced far above their heads.

The air was charged with the odor of honeysuckle, and vibrant with the song of a lark which had escaped the confines of mortal vision, and was beating its little heart out somewhere beyond the curtained fringes of foliage, in the depths of ethereal blue through which the setting sun was pouring a glory of gold and red; but these facts, though instinctively recognized as fragments of the general harmony, made no very distinct impression upon the consciousness of either of them.

That dusty highway, with its tall enclosing hedges and its whispering leafy avenue, might have contained the whole sum of life, so little they desired or thought of anything beyond it.

But life holds more than a succession of peaceful footsteps, even on a fair June day. A few steps more brought them to a stile, and it had to be crossed.

"You are tired," said the young man. "Sit on this stile and rest awhile. I will not let you fall."

He leaned on the stile beside her, and held her hands, until his eye was attracted by some flowers that grew luxuriantly in the hedge on the opposite side of the road.

"I must get you some of that woodbine," he said; "I like the pale-colored bloom better than that tinged with red; it is sweeter. Do not move until I return."

She sat still and watched him. He came back soon, with a fragrant, creamhued cluster in his hands.

"Do you like them?" he said, smiling up at her, and caressing her cheek with the dainty blossoms.

Between them they fastened them into the folds of her fichu. Lorraine tried first, but her hands trembled, and the flowers fell, and were scattered into her lap.

He smiled as he gathered them up, and held them while she secured them.

"Everything is better done when we do it together, Lorraine," he said, as he again folded her hands in his.

"Shall we come home?" he asked softly.

"I am ready," she said.

"Yes, Lorraine, we must go," he answered; yet still he lingered, while the sweet, nameless odors of the summer twilight hovered about them, the red flush of the sunset fell over them like a benediction, and the warm air palpitated with the last thrilling notes of the weary warbler as he sank toward his nest.

"Lorraine, you look happy."

"I feel happy. Everything is so beautiful to-night," replied the girl, dreamily.

"Yes, everything; the trees, the birds, the sky, the sun, the flowers, and—you. Lorraine, I don't want to go home."

He drew closer, and again his eyes sought hers, with the subtle, indefinable magnetism in their depths which caused the color to stir so uneasily in her cheek.

"Rex, we must go home," she said, nervously.

"Come, then; let me lift you down."

"No, Rex; please don't," she said, startled.

"Why not?" he whispered. And lifting her in his arms he held her close and kissed her.

* * * * *

Eight weeks later, Lorraine stood in her bed-room, reading a letter from Rex. She was paler and thinner than she had been in June, and there was a heavy, wistful look in her large eyes which then had been strange to them.

She read the letter through twice, and then she put it down. It was a customary thing for Lorraine and Rex to correspond, but this was the first letter he had written since they had met in June. It was a long letter. A large part of it was filled with a half-serious, half-jesting apology for the long silence. "You will see," wrote Rex, "that my holiday has been exacting all my time."

"'My holiday has been exacting all my time!'" Lorraine's lip curled with something like contempt, of herself and of Rex, too. "How great must Rex's regard for me be!" she said; and then the memory of the June evening which now seemed so very far away rushed upon her, and the tears fell over her face like rain.

At Christmas she saw Rex again. He came and went in the same day.

"Lorraine," he whispered as he bade her good-by—"Lorraine, do not forget me!" and he was gone; while she stood trembling, with his kiss warm upon her lips.

For awhile Lorraine was happy. No word had Rex spoken, but the language of lip, and hand, and eye was unmistakable. Every gesture, every glance, every intonation said to Lorraine's heart, "You belong to me, and I belong to you." And Lorraine's heart responded. That was enough.

But week after week went by; Easter came and passed; Lorraine had many letters, but the one so constantly looked for never came.

Lorraine sought distraction in study. Far oftener than not, her light burned late into the night. Foolish, was it? Yes, very foolish. Young and eager spirits are so apt to be foolish until life's stern discipline has taught them how best to be wise.

By June, Lorraine was very ill. During the first days of her illness came the letter which had tarried so long. "I hear that you have been ill," it said; "I am sorry for that. You have been working too hard. If life is short, there is no need to deprive one's friends of one's presence any earlier than is absolutely necessary."

He was sorry that he had kept her letter waiting an answer so long; he was always sorry for that. He spoke pleasantly of an anticipated holiday in Madeira. Between friends of no extraordinary degree, the letter would have passed muster; from Rex to Lorraine, at the hour of Lorraine's extremity, it was heartless.

Lorraine crushed it under her pillow, and turned her face to the wall. She knew the truth at last.

It was not so much the loss of Rex that she grieved over. She could have borne that. She would have thought scorn of a love that placed its own happiness before that of its object. It was the loss of her faith that she mourned; the loss of her faith in Rex; and through him of her faith in all things human. She almost lost her faith in God. Ay, she did lose it for awhile. She groped in the darkness that shrouded her for a hand to hold by, and she found none. It was a bitter time for Lorraine.

And, meanwhile, what of Rex? He meant no harm. He had the best of intentions. He was not wicked; only weak.

The idol and darling of half the women he knew, perhaps he was a little careless of the mischief worked by his beautiful face, his bewildering smile, and rare charm of manner.

Easy, luxurious, self-appreciative, it suited him to be worshiped by women. He liked change; it was a necessity of his nature. Change of scene, change of friends—these things eased life of its monotony. It pleased him to see fair faces flush and fair eyes droop at his eloquent glances and exquisitely modulated words—such study of human nature interested him.

He possessed the faculty of attaching himself to people easily; but the large, long-suffering, high-souled love of a heart such as Lorraine's was beyond his comprehension. When he was with Lorraine he was honestly "in love" with her—for the time. When he left her, his passion cooled. In his normal condition of mind, such an idea as that of allowing himself to be entirely appropriated by one woman seemed preposterous.

Ten years later, Rex and Lorraine met again. It was again June; Rex was waiting for Lorraine in her own summer parlor. It was a pretty room—made beautiful by all the graces which a woman of refined nature and delicate tastes gathers about her instinctively.

The years had brought Lorraine their success. The seed sown in sorrow and tears so long ago had brought forth an abundant harvest—as the world counts abundance. Lorraine had waked one morning to find herself famous; the finger of material want could never touch her while she had power to use her pen.

To Rex, as he paced restlessly backward and forward in the pretty room, it seemed a long time that he waited.

At last he heard a light, slow step, and the rustle of a woman's dress. The quiver that ran through his strong frame told him that Lorraine was coming. The man's very hands trembled.

Half-way across the room she stopped. He rose; and they stood and looked at each other.

She held out her hand. Rex bent low over it, and touched it reverently with his lips.

For a little they talked of old times, and of old friends whom they both had known. Then Rex said:

"Lorraine, I have come with the hope that it is not yet too late for us to live the old days over again." She read his meaning in his eyes. "Lorraine, we used to be happy together; let us be happy again. You think I have been long in coming; but tell me it is not too late. Let me claim what is mine—mine by the right of love."

He stopped nervously. She looked so pale, so cold, as she sat there. But she did not speak.

"Lorraine," he continued, gathering courage from her silence, "you love your work, but it does not satisfy you. You are contented, but you are not happy. Your face tells me that. Do not refuse my love; be my wife; my life shall be spent in the care of yours. For the sake of our old friendship give me what I ask, Lorraine."

The words were warmly, passionately spoken, but they made no impression upon Lorraine's marble calm.

"I am sorry you spoke of this, Rex," she said; "I have chosen my path in life, and chosen it deliberately; it is too late to change it now."

"Do you fear that I should not give you sympathy in your work? Lorraine, my greatest, my most constant sympathy shall be always with you in this thing, as in all others. Ah, Lorraine! you used not to be so hard to move in the old days."

"Your sympathy would have been life to me then," she said; "now I have learned to live without it."

Rex's forehead flushed. "Perhaps I have deserved this; I have deserved it; but you cannot think that I should not have come to you all the same now had I found you in different circumstances? Lorraine! I wish I had. You would not have misjudged me then."

"No," she said slowly, "I do not believe that. I never have thought that you intended to do me injustice, except perhaps at first. I have seen how it was for a long time now. You could not make up your mind, Rex. You disturbed our friendship—the friendship we were happy in—without being sure that you wished for anything more than friendship."

"And will you always bear me a grudge for that, Lorraine? Can one interest so fill your life that you need no other? The care and protection of husband and friend, the love of little children—are these things nothing to you? Lorraine, was your life meant to be so cold and loveless?"

Rex's voice had lost nothing of its old winning sweetness and persuasive power. A close observer might have seen an increase in Lorraine's pallor, and her fingers closed round the arm of her chair with painful intensity.

"I find no fault with my life; let that suffice for us both," she said. "It is as useful a one as I ever have hoped to make it; more so; and I am perfectly happy in my work."

"I do not doubt that you are happy in your work. Heaven knows I do not overestimate my own power to make you happy. But, Lorraine, it is a poor life, after all, that lives only for itself, and to itself, even in the noble way that yours is lived. If you allow other lives to starve for what you have it in your power to bestow, your life, live it how you will, is still a wasted one."

"Is my life a wasted one?" she said, slowly; "I do not think it is."

"In one sense it is wasted, if not in another. Yours is a life of intellect merely; you live no life of heart; it is the union of the two that makes life complete Were hearts given us to be steeled to affection, Lorraine?"

"You mistake," Rex, she said gently; "there are other affections besides this one you speak of, and my life does not want these. But, in justice to you, let me tell you that ten years ago I lost a friend, 'only a friend,' that was dearer to me than anything on earth can ever be again. He is dead."

"A friend! And he is dead! Lorraine, will you permit the specter of a dead friend to come between you and my living love?" he said impetuously.

"Hush!" she said. "You can have no conception of what his friendship was to me. No man's living love could requite me for the memory of it. It is my most precious possession."

He was silent for a moment, almost awed by her tone, and her pale, lofty look. Then the sense of what he had lost rushed over him, and half maddened him.

"Friendship!" he cried; "you are trifling with me. Tell me the truth, Lorraine; I demand it as my right that I should know; are you wasting your own life and spoiling mine over a fond and foolish fancy, or did you love this man, your friend?"

The color rose into her fair, pale cheek, but she gazed at him with steady eyes.

"It may be so; I cannot tell; it is not necessary that I should analyze my feeling. It is enough that no earthly thing can ever come between me and that most sacred memory."

"Ah, Lorraine!" he said, sadly; "if I had died ten years ago you would have said that of me. Now you will allow a shadow to spoil our lives. Have you no little love for me left?"

"Hush! Rex; is it I who have spoiled our lives?"

"You used to believe in the old-fashioned notion of one love, and one only."

"One love; it is possible that it may be transferred," she said.

"At least, your love is not large enough to embrace ordinary human nature with its faults and follies," he said, bitterly; "I have discovered that. The objects of your regard must be free from blemishes—faultless."

Her eyes lightened. "No, Rex; love does not regard faults. Believe me, I do not willfully refuse what you ask. But the friendship abused, the love slighted ten years ago, are beyond my power to recall. Spare me, Rex. Do you think I do not suffer also? Does it cost me nothing to deny you now what then I so gladly gave?"

Rex rose, and held out his hands. "There is no hope for me then, Lorraine? Ah! dear, give me the right—give me the right that I want, for old love's sake," he pleaded.

She shook her head sadly. "There is only one thing that makes the bond of marriage tolerable," she said, "and that between us two is impossible. The past can never be recalled. We are better apart."

Curious Features of Glaciers.

The periodical growth and decline of the frozen rivers of the Alps are the most remarkable and least understood of glacial phenomena. For nearly thirty years most of the Alpine glaciers have been diminishing. Many of them have been reduced in length by hundreds and even thousands of feet, and have decreased in volume by millions of cubic feet. Between 1871 and 1875 every known glacier was decreasing in size. Then began the period of enlargement. The Bossons glacier of Mont Blanc commenced to creep down the valley again. Within the next four years three more glaciers began to grow. In the past two years fifty glaciers have begun their season of advancement. The period of diminution has entirely ceased in the western and central Alps, but the glaciers of the Austrian Alps and a few others are still decreasing.

These phenomena are not merely of scientific interest. To the inhabitants of many an Alpine valley the periodical growth of the glaciers is a season of dread and solicitude. Twelve great disasters that within the past two centuries swept many hamlets out of existence were all due to glacial growth. The great ice streams in their resistless progress tumble vast rocks down the mountains, uproot trees, shove the turf before them, and tear dwellings into splinters. Thrice has the valley of the Sass been desolated by a glacier that completely dammed the river, and thus flooded the country. Villages have been overwhelmed by great masses of ice that have tumbled from the advancing glaciers. While the period of glacial recession is one of comparative security, the season of growth brings almost constant anxiety and inquietude to the inhabitants.

The Swiss Alpine Club has been engaged for some years in efforts to discover the laws that govern these phenomena. Its President, Prof. Forel, in a recent report, says that some indications of the nature of these laws have been obtained, but they cannot be satisfactorily investigated until much more data have been secured. The society is accumulating a great number of observations, and Prof. Forel invites the co-operation of all scientific mountaineers and Alpine travelers in these interesting and important researches.—Anon.

The Charming Oriole.

The bird's song consists of four notes, and it is curious that, although there is a peculiar, rich, flute-like quality by which the oriole notes may be recognized, no two sing alike. Robins, song sparrows, and perhaps all other birds sing differently from each other, so far as I have observed, but none differ so greatly, in my opinion, as orioles. The four that I have been able to study carefully enough to reduce this song to the musical scale, though all having the same compass, arranged the notes differently in every case. The oriole is, of course, not limited in expression to his song. I have spoken of his cry of distress or of war, which was two tones slurred together. The ordinary call, as he goes about a tree, especially a fruit tree in bloom, seeking insects over and under each leaf or blossom, is a single note, loud and clear. If a pair are on the tree together, it is the same, but much softer.

An oriole that I watched in the Catskill Mountains regularly fed its mate while she was sitting, and as he left the nest, after giving her a morsel, he uttered two notes which sounded exactly like "A-dieu," adding, after a pause, two more which irresistibly said, "Dear-y." There was a peculiar mournfulness in the bird's strain, as if he implied "It's a sad world of cats and crows, and inquisitive people, and we may never meet again." Perhaps it was prophetic, for disaster did overtake the little family; a high wind rocked the cradle—which was on a small maple tree—so violently as to throw out the youngsters before they could fly. The accident was remedied as far as possible by returning them to the nest, but whether they were injured by the fall I never learned.

Scolding is quite ready to an oriole's tongue, and even squawks like a robin's are not unknown. The female has similar utterances, but in those I have listened to her song was weaker, lacked the clear-cut perfection of her mate's, and sounded like the first efforts of a young bird. In the case of those now under consideration, the female reproduced exactly her partner's notes, only in this inferior style, which seemed rather unusual. The sweetest sound the oriole utters is a very low one, to his mate when near by, or fishing away with her, or to his nestlings before they leave home. It is a tender, yearning call that makes one feel like an intruder, and as if she should beg pardon and retire. It is impossible to describe or reduce to the scale, but it is well worth waiting and listening for.—Olive Thorne Miller, in the Atlantic.

A Lucky Invalid.

The New York doctors charge a great deal more than do the Texas doctors. Col. Sumpter McBride Sumpter, of Austin, who was quite ill during his recent visit to New York, is our authority for the assertion.

He was in bed three or four days at his hotel, and when the bill was presented he took a piece of paper and a pencil and figured out how much more he had to pay in New York than he would have had to pay in Texas for the same amount of indisposition. Having got through his calculation, he folded his hands resignedly and said:

"I am lucky in being sick here in New York instead of being laid up in Texas."

"Ah!" said the doctor.

"Yes," responded Sumpter, "for all this money I'll have to pay you I'd had to be sick in Texas for more than two months."—Texas Siftings.

On Account of Sickness.

Stockton Judge (speaking to prisoner)—You are drunk.

Prisoner—Yes, your honor; but I am obliged to drink on account of sickness.

"How long have you been sick?"

"I haven't been feeling well, Judge, for twenty years."—Stockton Maverick.

A GENTLEMAN in conversation said that his dogs were A 1. Shouldn't they have been rated K 9?

The Perfect Human Figure.

Baron von Humboldt, who had studied men and women in every quarter of the habitable globe, used to say that the notion that the female figure was of better proportions and more graceful outline than that of the male was a delusion. Women did not believe it, averred the great scientist, and men only said so out of natural gallantry. Humboldt was right on a great many points concerning which his views were scouted by the wise men of his day, and perhaps he was equally correct in thus attributing superior physical beauty to men. But since his time nobody has ventured to urge or defend his theory, and it has naturally fallen into disrepute. Besides, the modern world really has no use for "pretty men" as such. They may be counter-jumpers and animated tailors' blocks, and infest at will the public promenades and places of general resort, but the present masculine fashion favors the strong, square-built, quick-witted, and agile fellow who never thinks for an instant whether he conforms to the model of the Apollo Belvedere or not.

With the softer sex the question of form is quite another affair. The possibilities of dress have been developed to such an extent that within reasonable limitations a woman may take on pretty much whatever outward shape seems best and most becoming for her. While the creations of the modiste have stimulated a taste for the beautiful, they have ministered also to the love of admiration and harmless instinctive vanity appertaining to every feminine nature. They have also created ideals of contour that are decidedly at variance with classical ideas of perfection; and these departures from the antique standard have been to many theorists and a few otherwise sensible women a source of profound disquiet. There has been, it is affirmed, a departure from the "classic figure" that is as disfiguring as it is reprehensible; and in many quarters are pleadings more or less cogent for the return to the lines of beauty wrought by Phidias and Cleomenes long before physical distortion became a fashionable art.

American maids and matrons have thus been led to study the requirements and measurements of the perfect female figure, with results, if current draperies correctly indicate, altogether distasteful to the classicists, who point with pride to the master works of the ancient sculptors as embodying the beautiful in feminine contour. A living counterpart of the Venus de Medici would be less than five feet in height, while wearing a No. 25 corset and No. 7 shoe. This, to the woman of to-day, would mean hopeless clumsiness. The Popular Science Monthly, in a recent issue, descends to particulars, and affirms that to meet the requirements of a classic figure the proper dimensions should be: height, 5 feet 4½ inches; bust, 32 inches; waist, 24 inches; armpit to waist, 9 inches. This is further improved upon by giving the proportions of a "queenly" figure, thus: height, 5 feet 5 inches; bust, 31 inches; waist, 26½ inches; over the hips 36 inches. These figures are interesting only as they illustrate the vagaries and contortions of the purely scientific mind when floundering through the uncongenial realm of taste. It will be difficult to persuade ladies of an inquiring turn that the scientific constructor of these classic proportions has not been endeavoring to perpetrate a solemn joke upon the select circle of literary females whom he addresses. The "queenliness" of a tall woman with a hollow chest and an exceedingly thick waist is an attribute likely to be discovered only by an observer whose head is perpetually among the stars.—Philadelphia Record.

Tile Fish.

Rather more than five years ago, one of the vessels employed by the United States Fish Commission dredged up from the depths of the ocean, about one hundred miles east of Cape Hatteras, specimens of a fish which had never been seen before. The discoverers called it the tile fish, from its extraordinary shape. Until quite lately other deep-sea dredgers in the same neighborhood have frequently found the fish; but it appears that since the beginning of the present year the species has, in some way, been destroyed. In the early summer, scores of ships arriving in New England ports from the South brought news that the surface of the sea over an immense area off Cape Hatteras was covered with dead fish of an uncommon variety. Investigation proved that the defunct were tile fish, and ever since, although the tile fish has been repeatedly dredged for in its old haunts, not a single specimen has been brought up. Prof. Baird, who has already pointed out that there are many deep-sea fish that cannot survive a variation of four or five degrees of temperature in the waters they inhabit, is of the opinion that a cold current must have penetrated the domain of the unfortunate tile fish, and thus caused the apparent extinction of the race.

"Orpheus C. Kerr."

The story is denied that "Orpheus C. Kerr" is in straitened circumstances. One who knows him says of Mr. Newell that "he is not old, but, on the contrary, young, hale, merry, and the delight of a charming circle of which his family is the center and most devoted to him. In other words, Orpheus C. Kerr lives an ideal life: he writes when he pleases, and besides his family, who adore him, he has many friends.—Chicago Tribune.

A WOMAN who claims to know says it takes more strategy to marry off a family of girls than it does to secure reelection to Congress.

The Increase of Insanity.

Boston supports 869 insane, says Mr. T. B. Sanborn, not 75 of whom will recover.

This is frightful. Insanity has increased forty per cent. in a decade, and most of the cases are incurable. Whatever the individual cause may be, the fact remains that Uric Acid blood sets the brain on fire, destroys its tissues, and then comes some form of fatal lunacy.

Nothing is so pitiable as a mind diseased. Most brain troubles begin in the stomach; then if the blood is filled with uric acid, caused by failure of kidney action, and the consequent destruction of the blood life —albumen—you have the fuel and the flame and a brain in full blaze as when one raves, or, in slow combustion, as in milder forms of insanity. Rev. E. D. Hopkins, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few years ago was confined in an asylum. He took a terrible cold while aiding in putting out a fire in a neighbor's burning house, and for twenty-five years that cold was slowly filling his blood with uric acid, and finally the deadly work was done. The case looked hopeless, but he happily used Warner's safe cure and recovered. That was three years ago, and having ridden his blood of all surplus uric acid, he has remained well until this day.

It is indeed a terrible thing to lose one's mind, but it is a more terrible thing to suffer such a condition when it can be so easily prevented.

Old Newspapers.

The Indiana Farmer having stated that the first newspaper ever published west of Cincinnati was the Vincennes Sun in 1806, the next the Missouri Gazette, of St. Louis, in 1808, afterward merged into the present Republican, and the third the Illinois Gazette, at Kankakee, Ill., C. F. Clarkson, in the Des Moines Register, comments as follows: There are two slight errors in the foregoing paragraph from the Indiana Farmer, and they may as well be corrected while men are living who can do it. The Vincennes Sun was commenced by Elihu Stout, in 1804. And the Missouri Gazette, the first paper published at St. Louis, Louisiana (now Missouri), was started July 12, 1808. In the year 1800 Congress divided the Northwest Territory and established the Territory of Indiana, including all of what is now Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and the seat of government was established at Vincennes, and Gen. Wm. H. Harrison was appointed Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs. At that time there were about 9,000 white inhabitants in all that vast Territory, and the Indian title was extinguished to but a small part of the Territory. But Gen. Harrison went to Vincennes, and soon found it necessary to have a man with a few printing materials to print the various documents he found necessary in the administration of the Territory. About 1803 he induced a young man by the name of Stout to go there and occupy one corner of the blockhouse with a press and type, not with the idea of printing a newspaper, but of job printing. The writer has talked with General Harrison and also Mr. Stout about the first printing and the commencement of the first paper in the Northwest Territory. Some time in the latter part of the year 1804 Mr. Stout, probably being out of employment, published the first number of the Vincennes Sun. It was a small concern, and was published semi-occasionally for the next nine years, during which time the inhabitants there were in constant dread of their lives from hostile Indians, constantly stirred up by British agents and the turbulence of Tecumseh and the Prophet. Most of the time, except when the soldiers were in camp there, the inhabitants had to keep their block-houses constantly barricaded, so a very limited edition of the Sun could have been circulated if printed. But it was so irregular in its publication that the Indiana Farmer would be safe in saying it was started in 1806, or even in 1810, or really not until after the battle of Tippecanoe, in 1813.

But the writer has pretty clear evidence of the date of the commencement of the Missouri Gazette, as he has before him as he writes, No. 3, dated July 26, 1808, and, as it was a weekly, would make the date of commencement July 12, 1808, by Joseph Charless.

It was the impression of Mr. Stout that he published a paper at Vincennes before one was started in Cincinnati. But it must have been but a short time before, if at all. We have before us a copy of the Liberty Hall, published at Cincinnati, June 3, 1816, and it is a weekly paper, and this is No. 35 of the twelfth volume, which makes it at that time eleven years and thirty-five weeks old, which would fix the date of its commencement about December, 1805. Probably there may be older men, or older records, that may correct these dates. But history requires their being put upon record correctly now.

TWO YOUNG ladies were singing a duet in a concert room. A stranger, who had heard better performances, turned to one of the guests and said: "Does not that young lady in white sing awful?" "Excuse me," replied the other, "I do not feel at liberty to express my sentiments; she is my sister." "I beg your pardon, sir," said the first speaker; "I mean the lady in blue." "You are perfectly right there," replied the gentleman; "she is my wife."

CINCINNATI.—The Times-Star says: "A remarkable discovery made last winter is attracting widespread interest. As it involves a most important question, that of public health, it is being discussed by eminent physicians and publich men. It is shown conclusively that throat and lung troubles can be cured without resorting to the use of morphia or opium—especially dangerous in the case of children, as arresting development and poisoning the system. The Governor of Maryland and all the officials of that State indorse the remedy; the State chemist of Delaware pronounces it the purest and most effective, and hospitals and charitible institutions in Philadelphia and other cities use it with remarkable results. The remedy, which is only twenty-five cents a bottle, is Red Star Cough Cure. It is purely vegetable; it contains no poison or narcotics, and is a positive cure.

Canine Intelligence.

"It is truly amusing," says the London Truth, "to see the assembled wiseacres of the British Institution making discoveries in the canine intelligence, which must have been common knowledge to dog-fanciers in the days of Nimrod. Sir John Lubbock's learned poodle is a fool beside a little performing mongrel which I have lately seen at one of the south-coast watering-places. Any spectator was invited to show this little animal his watch, when the dog, after studying the face for a moment, would proceed to tell the time by selecting the proper figures from a row of Arabic (not Roman) numerals placed before him. Again, Prof. Flower's eminently Scotch tyke, who refused to go for a walk on the 'Sawbath,' is very little ahead of the dog whom most of us have seen or heard of who loses all desire to go out Sunday morning upon being shown a prayer-book. In the same way I have heard of a university dog—probably not a unique specimen—who, though always frantic to start out the moment his master took up his hat, never offered to move when the head-covering was a college-cap."

Russell Sage

is a well-known operator in Wall street, who is generally considered as "up to snuff." Hence, it may have been quite natural that a countryman who reads the papers recently called at his office and asked for a package of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. He discovered his mistake, but he made no mistake in the article called for. This Remedy, when applied with Dr. Pierce's "Nasal Douche," will surely and rapidly eradicate the most aggravated case of catarrh, with all its unpleasant and dangerous accompaniments.

A Temperance Calendar.

For several years past authors' calendars, having a quotation from a favorite author for every day in the year, have been a favorite article of household adornment. A new contribution to this class of literary ornament is a temperance calendar, designed by Mrs. Helen R. Olin, of Madison, and issued by the Women's Temperance Publication Association, the artistic work being done by L. Prang & Co.

The calendar cards are 7½ x 11 inches in size, and bear a handsome and appropriate lithograph in sixteen colors and tints, with a temperance sentiment from some noted man or woman for each of the three hundred and sixty-five days. Much statistical and other temperance information is also furnished by the calendar.

The work has been examined and highly commended by many prominent people, among them John G. Whittier, Miss Cleveland, John B. Gough, Neal Dow, and others equally well known.

The calendar will be sold for $1. It can be obtained of the Woman's Christian Thmperance Union of the state.

The Bitterest Curse.

The saloon is an institution which makes the poor poorer continually. If only half the expenditure of the wage-earning classes upon drink were saved the elevation of those classes would proceed by leaps and bounds. The saloon however is ever lying in wait for the weak or the social wage-earner. In this great city, on any of the main avenues, he can not walk a block without passing a manufactory of misery. At every turn the purveyor of drink entices him, gets between him and his family, between him and his manhood, between him and his happiness. The pervading influence of rum pursues the slaves of appetite unceasingly, and makes their lives a constant struggle or a succession of disastrous falls.

The subtle, prevalent influence is the bitterest curse that rests upon modern civilization, and it will destroy civilization if it is not itself destroyed. For the discontent, the anarchic tendencies, the seditious doctrines, the dangerous dispositions that are manifesting in centers of population, together with the vices of administration which alarm the thoughtful and the difficulties in the way of reform, which are due to the intractability of the material dealt with all have their spring and origin in that habit of drinking, that potent drink influence, which baffles the enthusiasm of the reformer and laughs to scorn the appeals of religon, of reason and of self-respect. This evil influence is degrading and brutalizing society, and progress will be slow and unsatisfactory until a public opinion is formed which refuses to palter with the abuse longer.—N. Y. Tribune.

Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees east, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the bench of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north, range six (6) west, intersects said bench, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty (50) links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petesphum, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 570; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows: The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

BY NEGLECT

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till soon an inflamed condition exists, that powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's cough balsam which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who are but the wrecks of their former selves receive wonderful help. In croup and whooping cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

An Echo.

Time was when Life and I linked hands together—
A time as light as wind-blown thistledown,
In days when haze breathed o'er the fields of heather
A mistly lilac crown.

Time was when Love and I roved smiling, dreaming,
Amid high castles built by Fancy fair,
On nights when lights of glimmering stars were streaming
On summer's fragrant air.

Time came when both and I sank down together,
When from the dark I rose, a specter there
Beside me stood; I gazed and wondered whether Aught left could e'er seem fair.
—Hilda Siller in the Boston Transcript.

COWARD AND SNEAK-THIEF.

An Animal That Even the Indian Dogs Look Upon With Contempt.

The first experience of the eastern traveler on the Northern Pacific railway, writes a correspondent at Green River, Wyoming, to the New York Sun, usually has some reference to the coyote. As the train gradually ascends the plateaus that merge into the Rocky mountains on the way west from Omaha, the first form of animal life observed is the coyote standing on some distant knoll or half hiding in the scanty sage brush and gazing wistfully at the passing train.

The coyote is the sneak-thief, the pickpocket of the Rocky mountain region. Although the dog belongs to the same genus of animals, yet the hunters and trappers in expressing their contempt for a Digger Indian will compare him to a coyote, but never to a dog. Even the Indian dog, which is a coyote tamed through long generations, despises his ancestor and fights him at every opportunity with great show of contempt. So cowardly is this animal that he never dares to seize a bird which faces him, but springs when its back is turned.

The dismal bark of the coyote at night reminds one of the jackal of the Orient. My first experience with these animals was when sleeping in a tent after a hard day's ride in Wyoming on the back of a broncho. The night was dark and threatening. Suddenly a chorus of unearthly sounds came from a high rock overhanging the tent.

"What on earth is that?"

"Coyotes," said the guide, with a curse, turning over for renewed sleep.

I took a shotgun and a cartridge of heavy slugs and blazed away at half a dozen figures dimly outlined on the rock above. If there were any more strange noises that night I slept too soundly to hear them. In the morning two dead coyotes were found near the tent, of which the remainder of the pack and perhaps other animals had managed to make a meal during the night. The coyotes followed us wherever we traveled, for five hundred miles, through the mountains, always slinking away in the distance, and at night, somewhat emboldened, stealing into camp and eating the refuse of our meals. I shot a number of these animals and dissected them. If anyone can mention an edible article in existence that a coyote will not eat, he ought to give it to the world at once as a curiosity. To my knowledge they are carnivorous, insectivorous, herbivorous, graminivorous, frugivorous, and the rest.

The antipathy between the coyote and the Indian dog is one of the features of life in the west that attracts general attention. Some naturalists have been in haste to use this fact to prove that the latter is not a descendant from the former. Plainly, the antagonism between the animal is proof that they are identical species. The Indian dog has been trained through long generations to protect the interests of his master. The coyote is in opposition to the interests of man, and makes it his business to steal and plunder. The interests of the wild and tamed coyote are consequently antagonistic, and it is natural that they should fight. A western artist has a photograph which shows an Indian dog and a coyote side by side. Anyone who can point out any difference in looks is welcome to the fame of his discovery.

Sportsmen, in the absence of game, often ride down the coyote, and find the chase brief and with few features of foxhunting. I rode one down, but never repeated the operation.

In the fights between the Indian dog and the coyote the dog usually gets an unmerciful thrashing, particularly if he stays far from camp. In such cases the coyote calls his neighbors, and the entire pack set upon the dog and often kill him. If the coyote is alone and can obtain no help, he makes haste to sneak away, tail between his legs. The Indian dogs and the coyotes, however, interbreed commonly.

The coyote is found over a very wide section of country. Evidently their range is from sea level to ten thousand feet above. I saw large numbers of them in Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana, between six thousand and eight thousand feet above sea level. When first seen they are usually standing motionless on some slight elevation or among the sage brush. If no harm is likely to come to them, they will stand and scrutinize the traveler from a very near point. In fact, they are safer near by than at a distance, as one is apt to take them for Indian dogs if they appear tame. In Idaho I saw them hunting, in their usual sneaking way, the large sage hens. Indeed, when I had taken the trouble to shoot one of these birds I was surprised to see a nimble coyote step out from under a tall sage brush, seize the bird, and dash away. At that time I was riding through the mountains in a double buggy, and was unable to give chase. One day I climbed an almost perpendicular elevation of about fifteen hundred feet. On the narrow top was a coyote, who, in his haste to escape, leaped too far, and fell over the precipice on the opposite side, several thousand feet deep. In captivity the coyote is the most servile and despicable rascal imaginable. How the Indians ever had patience to domesticate them and make courageous and faithful dogs of them I can not imagine. Although the Indian may be wifeless and wigwamless, he is never dogless.

Bismarck's Religious Belief.

A belief in God, in a divine order of the world, and in a personal existence in a future state and, to a certain extent, in revelation, seems to form for him a sort of rude basis of religious belief, with which he has remained satisfied without raising on it the superstructure of any definite creed. In religion, as in politics, he confesses that he has arrived at successive stages of development. In the days when he was known as the tolle Junker he was first a rationalist and, apparently for some time, an unbeliever. Then for several years he went through severe physical, moral, and even pecuniary trials, and felt a desire to seclude himself from society, and even at one time had a design of emigrating and retiring to the Polish forests with his last few thousand thalers in his pocket and commencing life anew as a farmer and a sportsman. As he approached his thirtieth year a physical change came upon him, which was probably due in part to the influence of the young lady who became his wife in 1847. This lady, Johanna Von Puttkamer, was the daughter of a Nether-Pomeranian landowner, and both her father and mother, being people of a fervent Moravian spirit of piety, opposed themselves to the betrothal of their daughter with one so noted for his wild habits as the "Mad Squireen." Goethe has shown in the "Story of a Fair Soul" how he could be affected by the simple piety of a Quakeress; and Bismarck was, it is probable, more deeply influenced. After the accession, too, of Frederic William IV. there was a great increase of piety, or at least of pietism, in the higher circles of Prussian nobility. The spiritualism of Schleiermacher had displaced the rationalistic influence of Voltaire and Rousseau. Rationalism came in polite circles to be considered somewhat vulgar, and was associated with revolution; and even philosophy in the crabbed phrascology of Hegelianism not only was made an instrument for undermining all existing institutions, but appeared to be pre-eminently unæsthetic. A religious and unctuous phraseology was the fashionable protest against new Hegelianism and revolution. Bunsen, Stahl, and Gerlach were in vogue, and the doctrine of original sin and of the corruption of human nature was employed to exercise the spectre of anarchy.—The Edinburgh Review.

How to Kill Grasshoppers.

Frederick Fisher, an extensive farmer of Creighton, Knox County, Neb., gives the following remedy for disposing of the pests: "I have an infallible remedy, which I have tried for many years upon my farm. After trying many methods for driving away or killing the grasshoppers I finally tried sulphur smoke, and it proved a decided success. The remedy is simply this: Take hay, straw, or rubbish; and dump it off in forkfuls about a rod apart over the field on the windward side. Next sprinkle from one-fourth to half a pound of sulphur on each pile, and in the evening set the contents on fire. After sundown, the air being sufficiently heavy to keep the smoke down close to the ground, the wind will roll it all over the field. The smoke will scent everything growing upon the field to such an extent that grasshoppers will never come there again during the season that the sulphur is applied. I tried this method for three seasons in succession when the grasshoppers swarmed in myriads from the Rocky mountains, and it always proved successful. The fourth time I applied the sulphur smoke the troublesome insects had been hatched upon the field and had cut off the crop of wheat clear to the roots, but after being 'smoked' they disturbed nothing further. For about eighty acres of land from forty to fifty pounds of sulphur are required."

Comes Pretty Near It.

Mrs. David Davis had been out to the hen-house to empty a pan of swill, and with three new-laid eggs in the pan was wandering about the front garden looking to see whether the peach-buds had started yet or not, when a stranger drove up to the gate. "Good morning, madame," said he, bowing politely as he spoke. "Mrs. Davis, I presume? Is Mr. Davis 'round?" Mrs. Davis thought deeply for a moment before replying. Then with some hesitancy she said: "No, sir, I think not. That is, not exactly. But I must say he's pretty near it."—Somerville Journal.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A coal train on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad crashed into a freight train which was standing on the bridge across White Deer Creek. The engine and thirteen cars were hurled into the creek below, a distance of thirty feet. The engineer and fireman went over with the engine, but were uninjured.

Ferdinand Ward was sentenced in New York to ten years' imprisonment on the charge of larceny, of which he was lately convicted. Ward showed no feeling when sentence was pronounced, though the Judge was especially grave and severe in his reference to the prisoner's criminal exploits. Ward was taken at once to Sing Sing.

The funeral of Gen. McClellan was held in the Madison Square Presbyterian Church in New York. A few flowers at the altar were the only emblems of mourning. The remains were escorted to the church by the Loyal Legion and the survivors of Meagher's brigade, but no military display was permitted. Gens. Hancock, McCook, Joseph E. Johnston, and Fitz John Porter were among the pall-bearers. A special train conveyed the cortege to Trenton.

It is not true that Mr. John Kelly, of New York, has had a serious relapse. He is able to attend to business, and intends to visit Florida and Mexico during the winter.

The Andre monument, which Cyrus W. Field had erected on the Hudson River at Tappan, N. Y., was blown up the other night by dynamiters. Both bases were blown into atoms, and the iron fencing that incloses the monument completely demolished. The shock was so great that it broke the glass in houses a mile away. In a hotel half a mile distant it broke the globes on the lamps, and the West Shore Railroad depot was jarred and several panes of glass broken.

The stockholders of the New York Central Road have ratified the guarantee of $50,000,000 first-mortgage bonds of the West Shore Company.

A natural gas company, covering several counties in Pennsylvania, with a capital of about $5,000,000, is being formed. It proposes to pipe the gas to other States.

An agent of the Connecticut Humane Society broke into the house of George Peck, Jr., in New Haven, during the absence of the family, and released Mrs. Caroline Brooks, widow of a soldier of 1812, who was being supported under a contract with the township of Southington. She was in rags, and had received only one meal of cold mackerel and potatoes each day.

WESTERN.

William Harper was hanged at Paragould, Ark., for the murder of John Sellers a year ago.

While hunting near New Philadelphia, Ohio, Theodore Thompson mistook his brother for a squirrel, and gave him a full charge of shot, inflicting a dangerous wound.

The White Earth Indians, of Minnesota, have taken preliminary steps toward concentrating on one reservation all the scattering tribes in that State, numbering 2,800 persons.

Cholera has, within a few weeks, swept away a thousand hogs in one township in Champaign County, Ill. It is said to be rapidly spreading.

A gold-headed cane was the tribute paid by the citizens of Paw Paw, Ill., to their retiring Postmaster, who served them continuously for thirty-five years.

A telegram from Detroit states that "when the tug Frank Moffat was making fast to the wharf at Sarnia, on the Canada side of the St. Clair River, her boiler exploded with terrific force, blowing away her upper works and part of her deck and shattering her hull. John Ward, first engineer, of Detroit; William Miller, second engineer, of Port Huron; John Wiley, fireman, residence unknown; and Walter Fisher, fireman, of Petrolia, were instantly killed. Their bodies were blown into the river, and have not yet been recovered; Capt. Thomas Curry had his leg broken. Andrew Reed and Frank Furtap were badly scalded, and Robert Goodman, the mate, who was ashore with the line, was blown over a wood-pile and badly injured."

Governor Pierce, of Dakota, has made his annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, showing the material progress of that Territory during the last year. The population of the Territory is now 415,000, as against 137,180 when the Federal census was taken in 1880. The year has been a very prosperous one for the Territory; not only have the crops been excellent, but the prices commanded have been very much in advance of those realized a year ago. The result is a buoyancy of feeling on the part of the people most encouraging and reassuring. On the whole the farmers were never so prosperous as at present.

The Federal Court at Indianapolis has affirmed the legality of $1,075,000 in railroad aid bonds issued by the city of Evansville.

Samuel Newton, a Choctaw Indian, was legally shot to death for wife murder in the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory.

The existence of pleuro-pneumonia in Ohio is denied by the State Veterinarian. Within a short period 5,000 hogs have died of cholera in Logan County, Illinois, and the disease shows no signs of abating.

The Chinese were expelled from Tacoma, W. T., but no violence was offered. Chinese storekeepers were given additional time in which to pack their goods. A number of the refugees are camped at Lake View, nine miles south of Tacoma.

Cyrus Yandes was found dead on his father's grave at St. Paul, having committed suicide by shooting. The father, who left an estate estimated at about one million dollars, had been dead but a few days. It is supposed the suicide became insane through grief at his father's loss and in brooding over his responsibility in settling the property.

SOUTHERN.

A rainstorm of eighteen hours' duration caused floods in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., more water falling than in the two previous years. Near Lexington a trestle collapsed under a train, the engineer and fireman being killed, but the passengers escaped. Washouts on the Baltimore and Ohio Road interfered with the passage of trains.

The Kanawha River rose to an unexpected height, sweeping away fifty coal barges stationed at Charlestown, W. Va., and damaging property valued at $150,000.

Silver coin of the value of $20,000 has been unearthed on the plantation of John Chenault, in Wilkes County, Ga., where a Confederate treasury train is said to have been robbed.

The Rev. Thomas Tennant died last week near Evansville, Ark. He was 115 years old. He was born in 1771 and removed to Arkansas in 1819. He represented Washington County in the Legislature in 1840, and had been a Methodist Minister for ninety years.

Miss Katie Tabb, a society favorite in Louisville, set her clothing on fire while kneeling in prayer, and received injuries which resulted in her death.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Lamar and the Commissioner of Patents will sit as a board to hear arguments of representatives of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, who petition that the name of the United States may be used to bring suit to annul the Bell telephone patent.

A proclamation designating November 26 a day of public thanksgiving has been issued by President Cleveland.

For the fiscal year ended June 30 last the expenditures on account of the navy amounted to over $17,000,000.

The purchase of the steamer Dolphin from the assignee of John Roach has at last been consummated by Secretary Whitney.

Acting upon reports of agents in Indian Territory, Secretary Lamar has requested the War Department to remove the "boomers" from the Oklahoma lands. The information contained in the agents' reports is to the effect that a large number of persons, supposed to be "boomers," but claiming to be foreigners, are crossing the Kansas border into the Indian Territory.

Commissioner Sparks, of the General Land Office, believes from reports received that a large part of the homestead entries in Dakota are fraudulent. He has received advertisements offering ex-Union soldiers or sailors homesteads without the formality of living on them, and copies of railroad tickets with homestead entries under the timber-culture act attached as gratuitous coupons. The Commissioner says he will not certify any entries until convinced that they are regular. He will ask Congress for force enough to do the work speedily.

POLITICAL.

The following Presidential Postmasters have been appointed by the President:

James W. Locke at Greensboro, Ala., vice W. White Jones, suspended; John B. Christian at Uniontown, Ala., vice J. H. Houston, suspended; Thomas W. Carroll at Bunker Hill, Ill., vice T. Y. Hedley, suspended; W. S. Armstrong at Kokomo, Ind., vice O. H. Somers, suspended; A. A. Sparks at Mount Vernon, Ind., vice J. C. Hovey, suspended; Joshua Ernest at Suttivan, Ind., vice Uriah Coulson, suspended; Patrick Gibbons at Keokuk, Ia., vice S. M. Clark, suspended; G. R. Rodman at Frankfort, Ky., vice J. C. Hutchett, suspended; R. E. Cook at Henderson, Ky., vice H. S. Park, suspended; R. C. Speck at Madisonville, Ky., vice E. B. Frost, suspended; W. S. Lawson at Greenville, Mich., vice E. S. Gindlit, suspended; Charles Holliday at St. Louis, Mich., vice J. M. Church, suspended; B. C. Stearns at Logan, Ohio, vice William H. James, suspended; William Chevenger at Wilmington, Ohio, vice C. N. Browning, suspended; Frank Harvey at Renovo, Pa., vice Newton Wells, suspended; Ethiah H. Parsons at Towanda, Pa., vice J. P. Keeney suspended; J. Q. Tutor at Bryan, Tex., vice J. A. Meyers, suspended; M. H. Mould at Baraboo, Wis., vice D. E. Welch, suspended; O. F. Bluketey at Burlington, Wis., vice S. W. Osborne, suspended; Joseph Taylor at Dubois, Pa., vice J. E. Date, resigned; Alvin S. Marsh at Red Cloud, Neb., vice M. B. McNitt, resigned; H. Clay McClanrine at Pulaski, Tenn., vice J. D. Lewis, commission expired; J. E. Evans at St. Joseph, Mo., vice Frank M. Tracy, commission expired; T. S. Brokaw at Mount Vernon, Ia., vice H. Bowman, commission expired.

The President has appointed Owen T. Rouse, of Missouri, to be United States Attorney for the Territory of Arizona.

President Cleveland went to his home in Buffalo and voted the straight Democratic ticket in the Ninth Ward. A dispatch from Buffalo says: "The President arrived by special train on the Lehigh Valley Railway. He was accompanied by Wilson S. Bissell, his late law partner, A. W. Stedman, chief engineer of the road, and John M. Jeter, Doorkeeper of the Capitol. The President is looking finely, and the party played a pleasant game of 'Sixty-six' from Hornellsville to Buffalo. All along the line of travel large crowds gathered, and at Darien fireworks were shot off, but the train did not stop. Only moderate time was made on the last part of the route. At the Buffalo depot the President was met by a crowd, but no demonstration was made."

The amendment to the constitution of Ohio to abolish October elections was carried by a majority of 537,000.

A. P. Edgerton, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and William I. Trenholm, of Charleston, S. C., have been appointed to the places on the Civil-Service Commission made vacant by the retirement of Dorman B. Eaton and Dr. Gregory.

The President returned to Washington immediately after the election in New York. A Washington telegram says: "His face wore a broad smile all day and he feels that his administration has been indorsed by the State of New York. Telegrams to confirm his opinion have been arriving all day, and the President feels that his policy has been approved by his party. Upon reaching the Executive Mansion he went immediately to the library and found two or three hundred telegrams congratulating him on the result of the election in New York State. Before reading these the President wrote and sent to Governor Hill a telegram warmly congratulating him on his election."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Small-pox still continues to spread throughout the Province of Quebec. The disease has broken out in numerous small towns.

A base-ball players' association is being formed in the East, and rumor has it that the League and American Associations are about to consolidate.

At the Woman's National Christian Temperance Convention, in Philadelphia, the reports showed that the receipts for the year had been $10,375 and the expenses $8,819.

The body of Otto Funk, the Public Library thief and "crank," was buried by the authorities of Cambridge, Mass., as his relatives in Chicago refused to receive it.

The elevators in Chicago hold 13,177,630 bushels of wheat, and the quantity in sight throughout the country is reported at 51,702,255 bushels.

Edward Hanlan, the oarsman, indignantly denies that he made overtures to Teemer to sell the race between them. Hanlan has had published three letters written by Teemer, the import of which is that Teemer was ready and willing to "sell out." In a note dated September 2, Teemer writes: "If you are in no condition I will do anything you ask me to do to make you win the race."

The internal troubles in Hayti have caused the British and French representatives in that country to telegraph their respective Governments to send men-of-war there at once to protect foreign residents.

A circular has been issued by the Panama Canal Company, intended to allay the apprehensions of stockholders, who have recently been assessed 125 francs a share, which announces that the final period of work on the canal will commence on Jan. 1. Just what this means is not clearly understood. A copy of the circular has been received at Washington, and was read with a good deal of curiosity at the State and Navy Departments, and the general opinion is that it is a piece of deception to beguile ignorant stockholders into sinking more money into the hopeless undertaking.

FOREIGN.

A naval officer who was sent from Washington to visit the principal stations of Europe reports that the stronger powers have each one hundred or more torpedo-boats, and their coasts are divided into districts. France has twenty-four dry-docks, completely equipped, where convict labor is largely employed. Russia ranks third among the naval powers, with 370 vessels, and Germany has within twenty years risen to the fourth place.

A Berlin cablegram chronicles the appointment of Count Herbert Bismarck as Secretary of State.

The Cork Packet Company offered £3,000 to the boycotting cattle-dealers to resume shipments, but the money was indignantly refused.

Mr. Gladstone has had a conference with Lord Granville, his late Foreign Secretary, and it is reported that the policy agreed upon includes recognition of the union of Bulgaria and Roumelia as an accomplished fact, the larger territory being considered a buffer against Russian aggression. It is also said that an alliance with France and Italy will be advocated as an offset to the tripartite alliance of Russia, Austria and Germany.

Lord John Manners, the British Postmaster-General, was refused a hearing by the electors of Leicester. In the disturbance that ensued several heads and chairs were smashed.

It is reported that a large rebel army is marching northward from Upper Egypt, and that the watchword of the horde is "On to Cairo."

Three thousand workmen have been locked out of Llanberris, a village in Carnarvonshire, in Wales. The men are workers in the slate-quarries.

Hostilities have broken out at Baku, on the Caspian Sea, between Moslems and Russians, in which several of the latter were killed or wounded.

Russia is reported as really opposed to the union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, and knowledge of this fact causes fresh agitation in the unsettled regions.

M. De Lesseps has asked from the French Government permission to issue further Panama Canal bonds to the amount of $120,000,000, to defray necessary expenses in excess of the original estimates.

A medical examination has been made of Mattei, the man who sought to assassinate M. de Freycinet, French Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the prisoner has been declared insane.

The robbery of Netherby Hall, at Carlisle, England, which resulted in the death of three policemen, was planned in London, the funds being furnished by a receiver of stolen goods residing in Stratford. The burglars were six in number, one being a Texas cowboy named Rudge, and four of them have been arrested. The mansion contained plate and jewelry worth $250,000.

It is announced that the eldest daughter of the Comte de Paris is betrothed to a brother of the Emperor of Russia.

In a London court judgment has been given against Mrs. Langtry for refusing to pay her household debts while living with her husband.

The first prize of $1,250 for a design for a monument to Martin Luther, at Berlin, has been awarded to Herr Otto.

Matthew Arnold is to be sent by the British Government to inquire into the system of free schools in France and Germany.

The Rev. William Robinson Pirie, Vice Chancellor of the University of Aberdeen, is dead.

The total strength of the Turkish army now mobilized is 350,000 men. The Servian troops will not enter Bulgaria pending the decision of the Balkan conference.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

The President appointed Dorman B. Eaton to be a member of the Civil Service Commission, in place of Judge Thoman, whose resignation was accepted to take effect Nov. 1. The appointment is but a temporary one, however, as it is proposed to appoint a permanent successor to Judge Thoman in a short time.

The Postmaster General has solicited bids for the publication of a weekly postoffice guide for New York and its vicinity. Should the experiment prove successful in that quarter, it will be duplicated in Chicago.

Montreal has expended $75,000 in the attempt to suppress small-pox, and relief is at present being granted to 1,631 persons. There are four cases in the hospital at Ottawa.

The Government of Venezuela has contracted with an English company to build at La Guayra a breakwater to cost $40,000,000, payment to be made from special duties on merchandise crossing the work for the next century.

The name of Prince Alexander of Bulgaria has been stricken from the Russian army list, and the Prince has been deprived of his Colonelcy of the Russian Rifle Battalion, to which he was appointed by the Czar.

At Salt Lake City, Utah, Frederick A. Hanson was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and $300 fine for unlawful cohabitation. John Keddrington pleaded guilty of unlawful cohabitation and was held in $1,500 bonds. He said he would obey the laws if his wives would consent.

Agents of the General Land Office are looking up frauds in the Mormon Church acquisition of 30,000 acres of land in Cache County, Utah, some years ago. They claim to have found enough to vacate the patents.

Master Workman Pinkerton, of the Knights of Labor, and six others have been arrested at St. Louis for causing recent explosions on the street-car tracks.

Samuel Chase, a bright youth of 16, office boy in the employ of Henry L. Hobart, at 130 Front street, New York, was stabbed to the heart and almost instantly killed while skylarking with one of the clerks in the store. Jeremiah Cunningham, 17 years old, had an eraser in his hand, which Chase fell against, the tiny blade piercing his heart. The lads were friends, and the killing was accidental. Cunningham's grief was terrible. He was held to await the action of the Coroner's jury.

At an up-town station of the Elevated Railway in New York, Henry Ward Beecher was robbed of a gold watch valued at $400.

Eastern mills having given the nailers an advance of ten per cent., it is expected that at the next meeting of the Western Nail Association the demands of the men will be granted, and the strike, which is now in its sixth month, ended.

Ferdinand Ward's business in Sing Sing Prison is to shovel ashes from under engine boilers. To a reporter who visited the prison he said: "I find it pretty hard work. You see, I am not used to this kind of thing. Don't know how long I can stand this, but I am going to do my best. I am here, and shall do everything I am told to the best of my ability. It's pretty tough work and I feel played out."

The vote of Massachusetts, with two towns to hear from, is Robinson (Rep.), 112,333; Prince (Dem.), 90,183; Lothrop (Proh.), 1,532; Sumner (Labor), 2,184.

Complete returns from every county in Pennsylvania, give Quay (Rep.) for State Treasurer, 61,262, and Day (Dem.) 20,835 plurality. Quay's plurality over Day, 44,127. The official return of the vote for Congressman in the Nineteenth District of Pennsylvania, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Duncan, show a plurality of 3,630 for Swope (Dem.) over Blair (Rep.).

The Prohibition vote in Nebraska is more than double the St. John vote of last year. There are gains everywhere except in one county. The Prohibition Superintendent of Public Instruction was elected in Merrick County. Superior gives a Prohibition majority over both Democrats and Republicans on the county ticket.

—Gov. Alger has received a letter from a New York city gentleman, who states that during the war he came into possession of a meerschaum pipe, with amber stem, and that a short time ago he undertook to clean the black deposit from the silver band on the pipe, and was to his surprise discovered an inscription reading as follows: "Major Wm. H. Nicols, by the Officers of the 7th Mich. Cav., June 18th, 1864." Knowing the value soldiers feel for such mementos the present owner desires to return the pipe to Nicols or his heirs, and if any one can throw any light on the identity or whereabouts of Mr. Nicol's, and will do so by addressing the Governor at Lansing, he will confer a favor on those most interested.

—The following order has been published by the War Department for the information of all concerned: "By authority of the President the following described tracts of unsurveyed public land, islands in the St. Mary's River, State of Michigan, are proclaimed reservations for public purposes in connection with the improvement of Hay Lake channel, St. Mary's River, viz.: Island A, situated in section 9, township 47 north, range 1 east of the meridian of Michigan; Islands B and E, situated partly in section 9 and partly in section 10, same township and range; Islands C, D, F, G, H, I, J, K, and L, situated in section 10, same township and range. By command of Lieutenant General Sheridan."

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Squandered by the Republican Party on Railroad and Other Corporations.

Forfeiture of Unearned Land Grants Demanded by the People, but Refused.

Speech of Hon. Strother M. Stockslager, of Indiana.

In the House of Representatives, Monday, March 2, 1885, on the Disposition of the Public Lands.

MR. SPEAKER—For the second time in the history of our country the question of the disposition of the public lands has become a great overshadowing question. That question is now one upon which public opinion is greatly absorbed, and which is attracting more attention among thoughtful persons than any other public question which is now being agitated. And, Mr. Speaker, when we pass in review the history of the land question and the land systems of the countries of the Old World, its influence upon the patriotism and prosperity of the people and upon civilization, we cannot wonder that the public mind when once aroused upon this great question will brook no delay, but demand that the most effective, rapid, and powerful remedies shall be applied to the change of the policy pursued by this Government for the last twenty years. The people demand that the squandering of our public lands—granting them in large bodies to great corporations—shall cease, and we shall at once return to the true policy of the Government, the granting of the public land without cost, in small quantities, to actual settlers.

Mr. Speaker, I say it is the second time in the history of our country that this question has loomed up until it is considered one of transcendent importance. As far back as 1843 it was a prominent question in American politics. In that year, on the 24th day of December, the first homestead bill was introduced in the House by Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, and a similar bill was introduced in the Senate on the 7th day of January, 1846, by Andrew Johnson. The agitation of the subject continued, and such measures were supported by such able and distinguished leaders as Douglas, Pendleton, Vallandigham, Holman, and Cox.

When the Republican party met in national convention at Chicago in 1860 and put forth its platform, conspicuous among its principles therein enunciated was the following resolution:

"That we protest against any sale or alienation to others of the public lands held by actual settlers, and against any view of the homestead policy which regards the settlers as paupers or supplicants for public bounty; and we demand the passage by Congress of the complete and satisfactory homestead measure which has already passed the House."

Thus recognizing the bill passed by the Democrats in the House as the correct principle upon the subject of public lands.

It is a part of the political history of the country that the Republican party was successful in that campaign, electing its President and securing control of Congress. It carried out its pledge to the people by the enactment of a homestead law. This was a beneficent law, and I am frank to confess that if it had been carried out in good faith and the principles contained in it applied for all time to our public domain, it would have been one of the greatest and most far-reaching measures ever enacted by a legislative assembly on earth. Considered in its effects upon the future of the country, while the republic stands, it was of transcendent importance.

The peaceful repose of our country was soon disturbed by the clash of arms, and the attention of the great body of our people was so diverted upon that terrible conflict, which was to decide whether or not the Government should live, that the subject of the public lands received little thought of by the people.

But alas, sir, the representatives of the people, who had obtained power upon a pledge to apply the beneficent principles of the homestead law to the public domain, and while the people were lulled into repose by the passage of the law, and their attention drawn away from the subject by the horrors of civil war, in violation of their pledges to the people, and in betrayal of a high trust, began a reckless and wholesale system of giving away the public lands that before had never been dreamed of.

The American people were amazed when they learned that on the first day of July, 1862, just forty-one days after the homestead law was approved, the same Congress, with a reckless disregard of their own action never before witnessed, granted to the Union and Central Pacific railroads a magnificent belt of lands forty miles wide, extending from the Missouri river to near the bay of San Francisco, and containing to the Union Pacific 16,115,000 acres, and to the Central Pacific 13,240,000 acres.

Thus the homestead law, by which the millions of acres of unsettled land was pledged to the people as a heritage to the actual settlers—to the men of toil who would cultivate them and make them blossom and bloom and bear fruit—was violated, disregarded and set aside, and a most gigantic system of reckless squandering of the lands inaugurated. This was an entire change in our land system, both in the manner of disposing of the public lands and of the amounts to be given. Before that date not a single acre of the public domain was ever granted to a railroad or other corporation. Donations of the public lands had been made from time to time to the States, aggregating in all 31,600,84[illegible] acres, for the purpose of being disposed of by the States in aid of education, for military roads, for internal improvements and for railroads. But the grants were all to the States.

The first grant to a State for railroad purposes was to the State of Illinois in 1850 for the Illinois Central Railroad, and was of the saved sections, six sections in width on each side of the road. That State, in making the grant to the railroad wisely reserved to herself seven per cent. of the gross earnings of this road, from which she is now deriving nearly a half million dollars annually, and which will, for all time to come contribute largely to the payment of the expense of the State Government. The grants which followed, up to 1862, were generally limited to six sections per mile, and in most cases the sale of the land was restricted to actual settlers of 160 acres each at $2.50 per acre.

As before remarked, until the Republican party came into power not an acre of the public lands had ever been granted to a railroad or other corporation.

The Republican party inaugurated a new policy, and it was kept up by that party until we find in round numbers 200,000,000 acres of the public domain granted to railroad corporations. It is difficult for the mind to grasp this vast sum.

We see a belt eighty miles wide, extending from near Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, covering some of the best agricultural, pasture, and timber lands in the country, that has been granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Then we see a belt forty miles in width, from the Missouri River to near the Bay of San Francisco, held by the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies. Near the Pacific Coast we see a belt extending longitudinally through California, owned by the Western and Southern Pacific Companies, which, as is well known, are owned and controlled by the same parties that own and control the Central Pacific. And we see a belt, forty miles wide, stretching through Kansas into Colorado and New Mexico toward Arizona and old Mexico, that is represented by the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company. Then another belt, eighty miles in width, extending across New Mexico and Arizona to near the Pacific, represented by the Atlantic and Pacific Company, being substantially the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Company.

These are but a portion of the grand belts of country covered by these enormous grants.

The mind is staggered in an effort to contemplate this imperial estate granted to great corporations. It can only be grasped by comparison. You could carve out of it 1,250,000 homesteads of 160 acres each. It is equal to 240 States the size of Rhode Island. It is equal in area to seven States like Pennsylvania, with her 47,347 square miles; four and one-half times as large as all the New England States; equal to the thirteen original States, which have 204,001,280 acres. The total area of Great Britain and Ireland is 71,137,600 acres, or but little more than one-third of these grants. There is not among all the enlightened nations of modern Europe one that has an area which equals that of our railroad kings. The empire of Austro-Hungary and the kingdom of Italy, with Switzerland and the Netherlands added, have an area of only 250,012,720 acres.

The creation by law of this most gigantic land monopoly the world has ever seen must in the very nature of things be felt upon our institutions and upon our people. The example of the Federal Government has been followed by some of our States, which have granted millions of acres of their public lands to railroad corporations, or sold them in large bodies to individuals. All the barriers have been thrown down, and foreign and domestic capitalists have been reaping a rich harvest for themselves in the purchase of vast areas of land. But so far as the people are concerned, they, through their unworthy representatives, have sown the wind, and they are destined to reap the whirlwind.

Land monopoly has been the curse of every country in the world where it has obtained. The people of the Old World have struggled for hundreds of years in vain and futile attempts to get back to a national system of land-holdings. The happy and contented Russian villagers who were made slaves by the great landlords have struggled for centuries to get back to their old system; and although their lot is now much improved, it is far from being desirable. England ever since she adopted the old feudal system, upon the invasion by the Normans, has struggled to obtain a rational system of land-holdings. Poor, unhappy Ireland, with her large estates, is another familiar example. The only true system is that of a division of the land into small tracts among owners who reside upon and cultivate it.

The whole world's experience for thousands of years teaches this doctrine, and the nation which has such system to the fullest extent has the most prosperous people. In the proportion in which you reduce the small holdings of land, and as a consequence increase the number of large holders and tenant farmers and agricultural laborers, just in that proportion do you degrade the agriculturist and bring poverty and misery upon him.

Mr. Prohyn, in his work entitled "Systems of land tenure in various countries," in discussing the land system of England, and in contemplating what an impartial man familiar with this subject in that country would suggest as reforms, says:

"He would probably set aside primogeniture, entails and strict settlements. On large estates held by corporations he would look with no friendly eye. The 'dead hand' fills him with peculiar horror. He everywhere wishes to see the living hand grasping the living soil."

Mr. Francis A. Walker, in his very recent work entitled "Land and its rent," in discussing the subject of small holdings and the advantages presented by such a system, says:

"The 'magic of property' in transmuting the bleak rock into the blooming garden, the barren sand of the seashore into the richest mold, has been told by a hundred travelers and economists since Arthur Young's day. In his tireless activity, 'from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb,' in his unceasing vigilance against every form of waste, in his sympathetic care of the drooping vine, the broken bough, the tender young of the flock and the herd, in his intimate knowledge of the character and capability of every field, and of every corner of every field within his narrow domain, in his passionate devotion to the land which is all his own, which was his father's before him, which will be his son's after him, the peasant, the small proprietor, holds the secret of an economic virtue which even the power of machinery can scarcely overcome."

Let us see what the effect of this ominously wrong system has been upon the agriculturists of this country.

The following table exhibits the number of farms of different sizes held in the United States and Territories in 1870 and 1880 respectively:

Number of farms in the United States in the census years 1870 and 1880:

	1880.	1870.
Under three acres	4,352	6,857	*2,521
Three to ten acres	136,889	172,021	*32,132
Ten to twenty acres	254,749	250,607	*3,858
Twenty to fifty acres	781,471	847,611	*66,140
Total decrease in the number of small farms in ten years			140,653
Fifty to 100 acres	1,032,910	754,221	†278,689
One hundred to 500 acres	1,695,983	565,054	†130,929
Five hundred to 1,000 acres	75,972	15,873	†60,099
From 1,000 acres up	28,578	3,720	†24,858
Total number of farms	4,008,907	2,659,985	†1,348,922
Total increase in the number of large farms in ten years			491,566

*Decrease. †Increase.

It will be observed that there has been a marked increase in the number of large farms, they having increased, from 1870 to 1880, 491,566, while the small farms have decreased in number 140,653. This speaks volumes, and to the student of history is a solemn warning which fills his heart with sadness for the future of our country.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have not only made great land monopolists of corporations, which, as John Randolph, with bitter sarcasm, yet biting truth, declared, "have neither souls to damn nor bodies to kick." But aliens and foreign corporations are gradually absorbing vast tracts of our best lands, until we find that already it is but little trouble to set out a list of owners of an aggregate of more than 20,000,000 of acres in tracts ranging from 5,000 to 5,000,000 each. I append a list of a few of such alien holders. I doubt not a careful examination of the subject would develop a list much more extensive than the one given below:

An English syndicate, No. 3, in Texas	3,000,000
The Holland Land Company, New Mexico	4,500,000
Sir Edward Reid, and a syndicate in Florida	2,000,000
English syndicate, in Mississippi	1,800,000
Marquis of Tweedale	1,[illegible]00,000
Phillips, Marshall & Co., London	1,[illegible]00,000
German syndicate	1,100,000
Anglo-American syndicate, Mr. Rogers, President, London	750,000
Bryan H. Evans, of London, in Mississippi	700,000
Duke of Sutherland	425,000
British Land Company, in Kansas	320,000
William Whalley, M. P., Peterboro, England	310,000
Missouri Land Company, Edinburgh, Scotland	300,000
Robert Tennant, of London	230,000
Dundee Land Company, Scotland	247,000
Lord Dunmore	120,000
Benjamin Newgas, Liverpool	100,000
Lord Houghton, in Florida	60,000
Lord Dubraven, in Colorado	50,000
English Land Company, in Florida	50,000
English Land Company, in Arkansas	50,000
Albert Pell, M. P., Leicestershire, England	10,000
Sir J. L. Kay, Yorkshire, England	7,000
Alexander Grant, of London, in Kansas	35,000
English syndicate (represented by Close Brothers), Wisconsin	110,000
M. Ellerhauser, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in West Virginia	500,000
A Scotch syndicate, in Florida	500,000
A. Boysen, Danish Consul, in Milwaukee	50,000
Missouri Land Company, of Edinburgh, Scotland	165,000
Total	27,747,000

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, we have interlopers, foreigners, and others, without any right whatever, squatting upon and fencing up tracts of thousands of acres of the public lands, and driving from them with shotguns the actual settlers who desire to make a home upon them. So great has this evil become, that this House, at this session, has passed a bill to declare such inclosures a nuisance, and providing penalties for thus fencing up the public lands.

With all the curses which we have heard heaped upon the land system of England and the land monopoly of England and Wales, it is no comparison to our own. The great landholders of England are mere "pygmies" when compared with our "giants." In a recent work entitled "Land and Labor in the United States," by William C. Moody, the author, at page 88 of his book, gives the following as the size of English land holdings:

The following is a list of the whole number of land-owners in England and Wales who are possessed of 50,000 and more acres of land each, and the actual amount of their holdings, by which it will be seen that there are but three who own more than 100,000 acres each and no one has an estate that reaches 200,000 acres:

SIZE OF ENGLISH LAND HOLDINGS.

Names of owners.	Acres.
Marquis of Allesbury	55,951
Duke of Beaufort	51,985
Duke of Bedford	87,597
Earl of Brownlow	57,793
Earl of Carlisle	78,340
Earl of Cawdor	51,538
Duke of Clev land	106,353
Earl of Derby	56,598
Duke of Devonshire	148,627
Lord Lecomfield	66,101
Lord Londesborough	52,655
Earl Lonsdale	67,950
Duke of Northumberland	191,190
Duke of Portland	54,220
Earl of Powis	44,005
Duke of Rutland	70,000
Lady Willoughby	59,912
Sir W. W. Wynn	91,062
Earl of Warborough	55,370

The same author adds:

But in the United States we have a sawmaker, in Philadelphia, with his 4,000,000 acres; two butchers in California with 800,000 and more acres; a cattle raiser in New Mexico with his 75,000 acres; and numbers of them in Texas whose acres are counted by hundreds of thousands. In the great Northwest the land holdings for agricultural purposes—for grain, grass, and vegetables—by hundreds, range to 30,000 acres and onward, occupied by tenants, or machinery, or by both. The whole country, from the Mississippi to the Pacific, in dotted—no, they are not dots—is patched with these huge holdings. In comparison with the monopoly of the lands here shown that of the English landlords appears quite insignificant. And yet we are only in the third decade of our movement.

The lands which have been wantonly wasted by that party in building up giant land monopolies is sufficient to have given every soldier of all our wars now living, and the widows of such as have died, 160 acres of the public domain. There is now left, after the fourteen years of uninterrupted Republican rule, of agricultural land less than one-fourth of an acre each.

The great absorption of the public lands has gone on with such marvelous and startling rapidity that an examination of the "History and Statistics of the Public Domain," just issued from the General Land Office, develops the fact that there remains to-day unoccupied less than 50,000,000 acres of agricultural public lands in the United States, and that includes the irrigable public lands.

Talk about giving the 2,000,000 soldiers who served in the last war 160 acres of public land each! Every thinking person knows that the policy of the Republican party has made this wise and beneficent policy utterly impossible, and the pretense by the members of that party that any such thing is contemplated is, in the light of the facts, the sheerest nonsense. But, Mr. Speaker, the Republican party had an opportunity offorded it to repair some of the wrong done the people of the United States in squandering 200,000,000 acres of the public domain upon greedy, grasping railroad corporations, by each grant made a time was fixed within which the roads should be completed. On the 2d day of May, 1882, the time for the completion of the last grant expired.

The time for the completion of the Northern Pacific grant of 47,000,000 acres expired on the 4th day of July, 1879. Some of the roads were never constructed at all, and many of them were not constructed within the time, but the Supreme Court having decided that these grants rested from the beginning in the corporations, and on the forfeiture of the grant no act of Congress is necessary to restore the lands to the public domain, the Department of the Government treated these grants as still existing, notwithstanding the forfeiture. I present a table from the annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior for [illegible], volume 2, page 318, which presents in detail a large number of these grants at that time.

Mr. Stockslager here presented a table exhibiting land grants which have been forfeited by the failure of the corporations to complete their roads in conformity with law. The totals of this table foot up as follows:

Total number of acres embraced in these grants	128,472,161.13
Length in miles of railroads as definitely located	12,080.00
Number of miles of railroad completed before the expiration of grants	3,151.28

Such was the condition of these grants when the Forty-seventh Congress assembled in December, 1882. The Republican party had a majority in that body. Already the murmurings of discontent at these immense grants and the demand for the forfeiture of every acre which had not been earned by the building of the roads according to contract were heard throughout the land. Early in January bills were introduced in the House by Judge Holman, Judge Cobb, and others, declaring these lands forfeited. The Congress was in session more than twelve months during its existence, and yet not a single acre of that land was forfeited.

That Congress adjourned and nothing was done toward forfeiting these lands which honestly belonged to the people but the great corporations were left in quiet possession of nearly a hundred million acres of land, to which they had no shadow of a right. With that party the voice of the great corporations of monopoly is greater than the will of the people. It leans for support upon the thousands of corporations which its legislation has built up and fostered at the expense of the people.

But the sublimity of cheek necessary to promulgate the following resolution, which appears in the platform of that party, adopted at Chicago last year, can only be found in the ranks of that party. Here it is:

"The public lands are a heritage of the people of the United States, and should be reserved as far as possible for small holdings of actual settlers. We are opposed to the acquisition of large tracts of these lands by corporations or individuals, especially when such holdings are in the hands of non-resident aliens, and will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil. We demand of Congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with acts of incorporation in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the conditions of such grants."

Mr. Speaker, if am not incorrectly informed, on the very day, and near the very hour that platform was adopted the members of that party upon this floor were filibustering against a bill to forfeit one of these unearned grants. And it is a notorious fact that nearly all the opposition to the forfeitures came from that side of the House. Again, although some of the bills passed this House daily in the first session of this Congress, and many of them have been in the Senate for a time, yet with one or two exceptions none of them have passed that body.

And, Mr. Speaker, the policy of that party is indicated not only by its action in Congress, but the whole country has just been startled to learn that one of the last acts of the retiring Secretary of the Interior has been to engage his whole force for days, and perhaps weeks, in issuing patents to the lands granted to what is known as the "Backbone land grant," in Louisiana, amounting to about 700,000 acres. Bills were pending in Congress at the time for its forfeiture, and an earnest protest, signed by Senator Van Wyck, Mr. Cobb, Mr. Holman, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Henley against issuing such patents. But the protest was unheeded, and the grant has been confirmed by letters patent.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us look at the record of the Democratic party upon this subject. I have already shown that the first homestead bill ever introduced in this House was introduced by Stephen A. Douglas, and the first bill ever introduced in the Senate was drawn by Andrew Johnson, both of whom were at that time leaders in the Democratic party. I have also seen that the Democratic party passed through this House the first homestead bill which was ever passed in it. I have also seen that the Democratic party during the nearly sixty years of its power in the Government never granted an acre of the public lands to a corporation. Hence, when that party surrendered power March 4, 1861, it did so with a homestead bill passed the previous Congress and our magnificent public domain carefully husbanded.

The uniform policy of that party has been to acquire and husband the public lands for the benefit of the Government and the people. The people having decided at the last election that the Republican party was unworthy, and elected a large majority of Democrats to this body, it became the duty of that party to respond to the voice of the people and restore to the public domain such of the public lands as were not earned and beyond the reach of forfeiture to the Government, to attempt, in some degree at least, to right the great wrong done them by the Republican party in violation of its pledges; and which it refused to right in the last Congress. How well that party has adhered to its antecedents and kept faith with the people a glance at our calendar will show. I desire to call the attention of this House and the country to what has been done.

On the 21st day of January, 1881, the following resolution, introduced by Judge Holman, passed this House:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House all the public lands heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads, so far as the same are now subject to forfeiture by reason of the non-fulfillment of the conditions on which the grants were made, ought to be declared forfeited to the United States and restored to the public domain.

Resolved, That it is of the highest public interest that the laws touching the public lands should be so framed and administered as to ultimately secure freehold therein to the greatest number of citizens; and to that end all laws facilitating speculation in the public lands or authorizing or permitting the entry or purchase thereof in large bodies ought to be repealed, and all of the public lands adapted to agriculture (subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education) ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers, and disposed of under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands is hereby instructed to report to the House bills to carry into effect the views expressed in the foregoing resolutions; that said committee shall be authorized to report such bills at any time, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills; and the same shall in like order be entitled to consideration.

This resolution gave the Committee on Public Lands a right to report at any time, and distinctly committed the House to the repeal of the pre-emption and timber-culture laws and the disposal of the public lands to settlers under the homestead laws only.

As to the work done by this House during this Congress I refer to the following lists of bills passed by the House, and of others reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands, but not yet passed:

LANDS FORFEITED TO THE UNITED STATES.

Bill passed the House declaring certain lands heretofore granted to the following railroads forfeited to the United States:

	Acres.
The Gulf and Ship Island Railroad	652,800
Tuscaloosa and Mobile Railroad	688,000
Coosa and Tennessee Railroad	140,060
Savannah and Albany Railroad (estimated)	900,000
New Orleans and State Line Railroad	120,000
Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad	1,257,024
Texas Pacific Railroad	14,300,760
Oregon Central Railroad	1,130,880
California and Oregon Railroad	2,126,526
Atlantic and Pacific Railroad	40,221,893
Sioux City and St. Paul Railroad	85,654
Total	71,307,131

LANDS FORFEITED TO THE UNITED STATES.

Bills pending in the House declaring certain lands heretofore granted to the following railroads forfeited to the United States:

	Acres.
New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad	993,218
Oregon and California Railroad	3,701,760
Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon Railroad	627,200
Ontonagon and Brule River Railroad	272,818
Marquette and State Line Railroad	540,848
Northern Pacific Railroad (estimated)	48,215,040
Southern Pacific Railroad	7,500,000
H. R. 7248, to restore all lands held in indemnity limits for railroad and wagon-road companies, and for other purposes, over	100,000,000
	161,720,914

Of all these none but the grant to the Texas Pacific, 14,300,760, have passed the Senate and become law. One other passed the Senate at the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress, but with such amendments as prevented them from receiving the sanction of the House.

The Committee on Public Lands has also favorably reported a bill prohibiting the holding of lands by aliens. The report made by Judge Oates, of Alabama, is a very able document and presents very cogent reasons for the enactment of the bill into a law. It should be passed, and thus prevent the accumulation of lands in the hands of citizens of other governments who have no interest in our own except to speculate upon lands which should be given to actual settlers.

We have thus seen that while the Democratic party has been true to the people, and as between the people and the great corporations—aggregated capital and monopoly—they have stood by the people, the Republican party has violated its promises, betrayed the people into the hands of the corporations, and then refused the partial relief which was still in reach and to which they were so justly entitled. And now to make their record still more sinuous they hypocritically declare that they are in favor of the forfeiture of these lands. It is not true, and I warn the people that that party will never forfeit these lands. Their professions in that direction are a mere hollow pretense and a sham.

And now in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to again say that I deem these measures of vast and far-reaching consequence. No man can study the land systems of the different countries of the world, as I have done within the last week, and observe how uniformly for hundreds of years the monopoly of land, the ownership of the land by the few, has brought poverty, misery, and distress, and how the opposite, or the division of the land and its ownership by the many, has had the opposite effect, without feeling deeply the importance of our action upon this subject. Notwithstanding the solemn warnings of history, we are rushing with headlong speed into the very system which has proven so baleful in other countries. Let us take warning and reverse our course ere it is too late.

The Road to Prosperity.

Imagine a village of say 100 voters. Imagine two of these villagers to make such a proposition as this: "We are desirous, fellow-citizens, of seeing you more prosperous, and to that end propose this plan: Give us the privilege of collecting a tax of five cents a day from every one in the village. No one will feel the tax much, for even to a man with a wife and eight children it will only come to the paltry sum of fifty cents a day. Yet this slight tax will give our village two rich citizens who can afford to spend money. We will at once begin to live in commensurate style. We will enlarge our houses and improve our grounds, set up carriages, hire servants, give parties, and buy much more freely at the stores. This will make trade brisk, and cause a greater demand for agricultural productions, which will enable the neighboring farmers to make a greater demand for store goods and the labor of mechanics. Thus shall we all become prosperous."—Henry George.

The Depew Story.

Of all modes of writing history that of reporting it between speeches and drinks at a grand banquet is the most grotesque. Chauncey M. Depew is, moreover, a man well along in life, and was well in manhood twenty years ago. He must have known something of the history of the Johnson administration from his own knowledge of current events; he could easily have refreshed his information by going to proper sources if he desired. Instead of taking either course he gives a random report of General Grant's talk to him four years ago, about events fifteen or sixteen years before, and presents it to the public as gratuitous history. There is probably a grain of truth underlying this narration, but it is like a grain of sand under an eyelid, a body tremendously out of its true place and assuming a degree of importance wholly disproportionate to its true merits.—Springfield Republican.

By a Large Majority.

It may be that the people of New Mexico, who regard Dorsey as a great man, cannot understand the President's action. But the great majority of the people of this country will agree with the President that any man who will appoint Stephen W. Dorsey to a position of trust is not fit to sit on the bench.—New York Star.

The Charge Against Andrew Johnson.

So far, certainly the very grave accusation against Andrew Johnson, brought after General Grant's death, on his alleged authority, has certainly not been proved. Mr. Depew and Colonel Grant owe it to themselves, if, as they assert, they have documents to confirm it, to produce these at once.—New York Herald.

ON ETERNITY'S SHORE.

Sudden Death of Gen. George B McClellan at His Residence Near Orange.

He Is Called in the Midst Hours, Dissolution Being Preceded by Acute Agony.

George Brinton McClellan, formerly Major General of the United States armies and commander of the Army of the Potomac, and more lately Governor of New Jersey, died early on the morning of the 29th ult., at his home in St. Cland, on Orange Mountain, near Orange, N. J.

THE DEATH-BED SCENE.

Gen. McClellan returned home from an extended trip through the West on Sept. 17, apparently in the best of health. On Oct. 17, while he was passing through the Hoboken ferry-house, he felt a severe pain near his heart. The pain was temporary, but the General consulted Dr. Seward, his physician. Dr. Seward concluded that he had neuralgia of the heart, and by his advice the General gave up an extended trip with his wife to Old Point Comfort, Va., to attend a meeting of the Governors of the soldiers' home at that place. During the past week he walked and drove about Orange as usual, but about 11 o'clock on Wednesday evening, an hour after he had retired to his bedroom, he was seized with another and very severe attack of pain in the region of the heart. Mrs. McClellan sent for Dr. Seward, and under his treatment the pain became less severe. At 2 o'clock in the morning, however, the pain returned with increased severity. Dr. Seward administered morphine, hypodermically, but without avail. The General became unconscious, and remained so until he died at 2:45 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. McClellan, Miss May McClellan, and Dr. Seward were in the room. The only other member of the General's family, George Brinton McClellan, Jr., is a senior in Princeton College, and could not be reached in time. Gen. McClellan's mother is still alive, in her 85th year. She is an invalid, and in the beginning of the summer she was not expected to live until autumn. During the summer she has been at Drifton, Pa. The General returned from visiting her there just two weeks before his death.

PUBLIC SYMPATHY.

The following executive order was issued at Washington by order of the President:

As a mark of public respect to the memory of this distinguished soldier and citizen, whose military ability and civic virtues have shed lustre upon the history of his country, it is ordered by the President that the national flag be displayed at half-mast upon all the buildings of the executive departments in this city until after his funeral shall have taken place.

Secretary of War Endicott issued the following general order:

With profound regret the Secretary of War announces to the army the death of Gen. George B McClellan, formerly major-general commanding the armies of the United States. The name and fame of this illustrious soldier and citizen are known and honored throughout the republic. As the organizer of the Army of the Potomac he made it capable of accomplishing great deeds. The lessons he gave it were never forgotten, and the spirit with which he animated it continued through all its eventful history. Subsequently as its leader he rendered great services to his country. His pure and noble character, his unselfish devotion, and the duty he performed in the hour of peril will cause his memory ever to be cherished with pride by the people of the United States.

A special from Washington to the Chicago Tribune says:

The death of Gen. McClellan was a great surprise here. It was not known that he had been ill, and the President had directed that a letter be written to-day tendering him the position on the Civil-Service Commission to be made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Eaton. Gen. McClellan had already refused the Russian mission, and it hardly was expected that he would accept a Civil-Service Commissionership, the duties of which are so onerous and the salary of which is so small. But the President, in his endeavor to induce prominent Democrats to accept this place, had determined to offer it to Gen. McClellan.

A New York dispatch says:

As soon as the news of Gen. McClellan's death spread throughout the city great sorrow was expressed at the sad event. The flags on public buildings were placed at half-mast. The Grand Army Post called a meeting to express their sorrow and offer a body-guard for the remains.

CONDOLENCE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

To Mrs. George B. McClellan, Orange, N. J.:

I am shocked by the news of your husband's death, and, while I know how futile are all human efforts to console, I must assure you of my deep sympathy in your great grief and express to you my own sense of affliction at the loss of so good a friend.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

CONDOLENCE FROM GOV. ABBETT.

To Mrs. George B. McClellan, West Orange, N. J.:

MY DEAR MADAM: I have just learned with profound sorrow of the death of your distinguished husband. I speak not only for myself but for all the people of New Jersey, who will join in the universal mourning for the loss of a pure and upright citizen and a great soldier. I wish most earnestly to take such proper official action as will do honor to his memory. I have directed Adjutant General William S. Stryker to ascertain your wishes, so that the action of the Executive may be in full sympathy with your own feelings. I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours, LEON ABBETT.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

George Brinton McClellan was born at Philadelphia in 1826. His father was a distinguished physician, a graduate of Yale College, and founder of Jefferson College. At West Point McClellan had the reputation of being an industrious but not brilliant student; but he graduated second in general rank in the largest class that had ever left the academy, and first in the class on engineering.

His military rank when he left West Point in 1846 was second lieutenant of engineers. He served as such in the Mexican war. In the spring of 1855 he was appointed to a captaincy in the First Cavalry Regiment. The same year he was one of a commission composed of three officers sent by the United States Government to make observations in the Crimean war.

He resigned his commission in the army in 1857 and became Chief Engineer of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1861 he re-entered the army. As commander of the Federal forces in West Virginia he gained the victories of Rich Mountain and Cheat River. A few days after the battle of Bull Run he was appointed commander of the army at Washington. In November, 1861, he assumed command of the armies of the United States. His victory at Fair Oaks, May 31, 1862, was followed by actions at Mechanicsville, Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp, Gaines' Mill, and Malvern Hill.

The result of the campaign was the retreat of his forces and the abandonment of his plan to take Richmond. Gen. Pope was appointed to supersede Gen. McClellan, who was, however, recalled to the command of the army September 2, 1862. His victory at Antietam was gained about a fortnight after this date. In the following November he was relieved of command.

In 1864 he was nominated for the Presidency on the Democratic ticket, and received a popular vote of 1,800,000. In 1877 McClellan was elected Governor of the State of New Jersey, a position which he filled until 1881. Since that time he had lived in New York City. His learning and abilities as an engineer gave him leading and remunerative business in his profession.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

"Speak the Truth."

Our esteemed contemporary, the Sentinel, takes up the cudgel in behalf of the board of supervisors and against a "county exchange" because the "exchange" criticised certain actions of the board. If the Sentinel's remarks were toned down so as to come within the injunction contained in the heading, it would lose much of its apparent force. The Sentinel says: "The statement that the board knows nothing about the orders drawn by the clerk is a malicious falsehood, conceived in ignorance and brought forth in malice and spite." (The italics are ours.) This is about as effective argument as that usually contained in a school boy's "you lie" and "you're another." The information on which the JOURNAL'S remarks were based, was obtained from a perfectly reliable source, and if necessary can be proven. The Sentinel further says: "The committee on claims appointed by the board, carefully examine the vouchers to the orders at every session." The package of vouchers to which our attention was called, aggregating several hundred dollars, may have been those which the board are not required to audit, but they were drawn by the clerk and paid by the treasurer, and the board had no official report of them from the clerk, and did not examine them.

"The doctor's fees alluded to, are those allowed by law." We have searched diligently for some statute prescribing fees in such cases, and find none. The doctor generally presents his bill and it is allowed or rejected by the board as they see fit. We have heard of cases where bills were presented nearly double the usual fee, expecting them to be cut down, while in other cases the instructions have been to allow at face or reject entirely. Further than this, we understand that there is a county physician employed at a stated salary, whose duties include, whenever called upon, those for which these bills were presented, and who will receive the same salary as if he had served on the cases mentioned. This was a question of economy for the board to consider.

This article, and perhaps others to follow will bring down on our head the wrath of all the supervisors in the county, but if we succeed in securing a careful examination of every bill of expense at the next and subsequent sessions of the board, and a saving of even one dollar in taxes, our labor shall not be in vain.

Turn a little more "steam" into that "offensive partisan machine," but be careful to so adjust the screws that the "arguments" ground out will "speak the truth."

What Cleveland's Election Has Done.

According to the New York Tribune among the things which "Cleveland's election has done" has been to depress the price of marrow-fat beans 23.6 per cent., hops fifty per cent., eggs 4.30 per cent., tobacco 4.3 per cent., turkeys 8.3 per cent., etc., but, notwithstanding the terrible pressure brought to bear upon these commodities, we are gratified to learn that some other articles have held their own, being neither depressed or bulled by "Cleveland's election." Among these are "flat Dutch cabbage," which sell now as high as a year ago, and also "Russian turnips," "green peas," "fowls," and potatoes. We are not advised by the Tribune what special methods Grover employed to perserve those articles from the general wreckage; but seeing the extent of the havoc which his election wrought in general commerce, it may be inferred on a priori principles that he and his followers were generous consumers of those specialties.—Louisville Courier Journal.

Here and There.

In his speeches in Virginia Judge Foraker speaks of confederate soldiers as "those heroic Virginians who fought with Lee and Jackson." Here in Ohio he sneered at them as "rebels" and "treason stained" scoundrels.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The North has taken care of its own. It easily can, for it won. The South has neglected, and still neglects, those to whom it owes all that a people can owe to the dead. A new cereal is announced by the Rural New Yorker, which, two years ago, produced a hybrid between wheat and the new grain, being very distinct from either. Last year a further cross was effected upon these hybrids by using the pollen of rye, so that the resulting grain is three-quarters rye. The plants are remarkably vigorous and the heads large and still very distinct from those of rye.

Pittsburg, like Philadelphia, has some wealthy colored people, including John Gaither, with an estate worth $35,000, who fled from Louisiana forty years ago; Robert and Emanuel Jackson, prosperous business men, who inherited $40,000 from their fateer, an ex-slave: "Uncle" John Turfley, whose wealth is put at $30,000; Mrs. Williamton, a widow of Allegheny, with a fortune of $60,000, and George Knox and his wife, who own property valued at $75,000.

There are few dark hairs now in either his close-cropped hair or carefully-trimmed whiskers. He still likes occasionally to don the boxing-gloves.

It is stated as a curious fact that when the late Empress of Russia was stopping with her daughter, the Duchess of Edinburgh, with a large suite, the Duke gave her to understand that he could not afford to entertain her, and he should be obliged if, on her departure, she would order the comptroller of the suite to pay an adequate sum for the expenses of her visit At the moment of departure, after luncheon had been taken, the Duke of Edinburgh drew a paper from his pocket, on which he had noted down the estimated expenses of the Russian Empress, and he added the cost of the luncheon.

A Carson, Nev., man has gone and invented a machine to avoid the anti-treating law, which has been a dead failure thus far. A huge chunk of ice is slung in the centre of a revolving table, and beverages, beer, whisky, etc., are placed all over it. The citizens draw up their chairs all around, call for their drinks, and the game commences by the twirling of the revolving wheel or table. Whatever stops in front of each one's chair he must drink, and whoever fails to do so has the whole circle to pay for. The excitement grows more and more intense as the game progresses, and many a substantial Carsonite goes home to bed drunk. —San Francisco Alta.

Sunset Cox knows the value of an advertisement. He went to the White House one day lately with the draft of a little letter in his pocket. "Mr. President," he said, "it would help the sale of my book very much if you were to write a few lines saying it is so and so; something pleasant, you understand." The President looked perplexed. "Why," said he, "I haven't seen it. I don't know what it contains, what——" "Never mind that," replied Mr. Cox; "I can tell you in a minute what the general drift——" "But," argued the President, "I don't know what to say." "Well, if you will simply write something like this, for instance,"—and Mr. Cox pulled the draft of the letter out of his pocket—"I will be satisfied. The President at first wished to sign only the statement prepared by the author of the "Three Decades," but Mr. Cox insisted that the whole statement should be in Mr. Cleveland's handwriting. And he carried his point.

Anecdotes of Grant.

Grant had no fear of responsibility, no fear of Secretary Stanton. I never knew him to show fear of anything. In September, 1864, while at Harper's Ferry returning from a visit to Sheridan, he learned that Wade Hampton had slipped in rear of the left flank of the army of the Potomac and carried off our entire beef herd. 2,600 head. When Secretary Stanton heard of the loss of the cattle he wanted somebody's scalp and telegraphed: "Who is responsible for the loss of the cattle herd?" To which Grant replied, "I am." There was no "hair raised" that time. For several days afterward the "rebs," with much "mooing" and "lowing," frequently called out, "Hello, Yanks, don't you want some beef?" While this was going on the "old man" would jokingly say, "I have the best commissary in the army; he not only feeds my army but that of the enemy also." It was only a few months after this that he directed the same officer at Appomattox to feed Gen. Lee's famishing army. When shortly after this loss Sheridan made a big haul of stock in "the valley," Grant felt better. Though the animals were not so large nor in such good condition as ours, they were in such numbers and of such size as to stop Johnny Reb's mouth. On the morning of the day the army captured Petersburg Grant stopped to write a dispatch, leaning against one of the few fences left standing, near a house, the upper part of which had been abandoned by the women and children. These had taken refuge in the cellar, and were crying from fear as the house was being riddled by the confederate artillery. The writer stood near the general, thinking between shots that it was no place for him, but not seeing how he could leave while the lieutenant general remained. When Grant had finished his dispatch, looking round and apparently appreciating for the first time what a hot place he was in, he quietly said: "I see no use in staying here," and moved off, very closely followed by his staff, to a place where an unoccupied man could feel cooler.—Cor. Boston Traveler.

The Farewell Symphony.

In 1761, Haydn was appointed capellmeister to Prince Esterhazy, a wealthy Austrian noble. His patron owned a beautiful country-seat, which, in addition to its natural beauties, included two theaters for musical rehearsals, and so lovely was the spot that the Prince arrived there early in spring and staid until the end of autumn. It made the members of the orchestra very unhappy to be so long away from their families, and Haydn, who had plenty of leisure for composition and musicians enough to perform his works, was the only happy one. He loved and sympathized with the men, and at last he wrote for them his "Farewell Symphony." They were very home-sick, and, as the Prince showed no signs of leaving, Haydn hit upon this novel plan to make him return. In this Farewell symphony the instruments, one by one, cease playing. At its performance in the Prince's theater, as soon as a musician stopped, he left the stage. The Prince showed his appreciation of the music and the joke by returning to Vienna and allowing the musicians to return to their homes. —Agatha Tunis, in St. Nicholas for June.

We are pleased to announce to our readers this week that C. G. Lewis, of Boyne City, removes to East Jordan in the very near future. He will occupy Louis Votruba's new store building on State street with a stock of gent's furnishing goods and lumbermen's supplies.—Enterprise.

J. S. Smithson, of Chicago, has a tract of 30,000 acres of land in Kansas, and when he was here this week to inspect his new summer cottage, he left plans for estimates on the construction of 50 cottages to be got out here ready for erection and shipped to his Kansas estate. This will make a good winter's business for the boys.

J. S. Smithson, of Chicago, was here on Wednesday, inspecting his new cottage. He reports everything in good shape, and the work of the contractors entirely satisfactory. The door panels are to be hand painted with landscapes by members of his family, and will no doubt be very attractive. Next season he expects to come here in May and remain till November.

The tugs Winslow and Mocking Bird were in harbor yesterday. The barge Adams released some days ago, was at the south Manitou preparing to tow down with the A. J. Wright.

The Histoical Society met last Friday evening with Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Allen. The usual program of music and recitations was quite interesting. The principal paper of the evening was a sketch by Dr. Carlstein of Napoleon, from boyhood to the battle of Marengo. It is expected that the subject will be continued at another meeting in the near future. The society meets Friday evening with Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Brown, at which time Mrs. O. D. Wood will read a paper entitled "Joan of Arc.

The Union Temperance Meeting.

The sermon by Rev. C. F. VanAuken at the Congregational church last Sunday evening, from the words, "Lead us not into temptation," was one replete with many interesting and pointed, as well as instructive sayings. The Elder went on to show how christians should resist temptations, not by sitting still, as did the old prophet, who sat down under an oak tree. (1 Kings, 13 ch.) God would deliver and save in the hour of temptation any man when in the line of duty. He proved in his arguments that God did in ancient times, and does to-day, try and prove the faith of the christian for the purpose of cultivating and bringing into exercise the moral powers of man, so as to be prepared to fight the good fight and endure hardships as a good soldier when any emergency may overtake him.

He referred to the soldiers, who are drilled, prior to being drawn out in battle array to face the enemy. Even so the child of God, needs training and drilling to be victorious in striving for the mastery; for, says the apostle, "Though we strive for the mastery, we shall not be crowned, except we strive lawfully."

Mr. VanAuken also showed clearly that God was able in ancient times, to deliver his people in sore trials and to-day Jesus can succor those who are tempted, being himself tempted.

The force of the sermon went to show his congregation the necessity of a daily study and careful watching of our own hearts and inclinations, and each one to make use of the means and privileges of the church whereby they may become shining lights in the world. ALPHA.

Ironton.

The appointment of Rev. Mr. Iddings last Sunday was filled by some of the Ironton brethern.

Mrs. S. J. Morehouse and family, of this place, have removed to East Jordan, much to the regret of their many friends, but our best wishes go with them.

Mr. Thomas Mackey will remove his family to Mancelona to-morrow.

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magizine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment, or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. MAKING UP AFTER A QUARREL.

She stands beside the door in white disdain;
For some portentous nothing is at stake,
And she will not unsay the words she spake,
Nor he make right or wrong, though he were fain.

Alack! their honeymoon is on the wane;
The hearts that beat as one have learned to ache;
The stream wherein they two have come to slake
Love's thirst is parched for draught of love's sweet rain.

They brood in sullen silence 'neath the cloud
That now first shadows this fair wedlock o'er,
When, lo! it bursts in tears from both their eyes,
And on each other's lips their anger dies.
Upon his breast her golden head is bowed,
And in his arms he clasps his life once more.

GOLDEN FETTERS.

BY EDEN E. REXFORD.

Catherine Warfield walked slowly down the orchard path, thinking. The wind from the valley came up the hill, bringing to her sweet scents of late blossoming clover from the meadow by the river. Now and then an apple dropped from the branches of the gnarled old trees about her, and fell into the crisp, brown grass, burned by the September heat until all its freshness had departed as if a frost had touched it, and a bluebird sang plaintively overhead, as if sorrowing for summer's going. But it was not of these things she thought.

"If I only knew what to do," she said to herself, as she went slowly down the lane. "It is so hard to choose between the man I love, who is poor, and the man I do not love, who is rich. But the choice must be made, and I must make it now. If I could only see into the future a little—if I could know which life would give me most happiness?"

All her life she had been used to luxury. Her father supported his family in a style out of all proportion to his income, and nothing had been laid by. Therefore, when she married, the man of her choice must have wealth if she cared to go on in fashionable life.

"John Marsh is rich," she said, thinking of the man her father wanted her to marry, but the thought did not bring a pleased look into her face. It brought her a vision of an old, gray-headed man for whom she could have nothing but respect, and perhaps but little of that; so little, in fact, that it might not last long after she became the old man's wife. "He is rich, and can give me all that wealth can buy. Robert Moore has nothing but his brain and his hands, and a great love for me—who knows? That love might be more to me than wealth and position. Love! It tempts me. It makes me wavering and weak. If Robert Moore could only have John Marsh's money, how soon, how easily my choice could be made. Things are never as they ought to be in this world."

The handsome face took on a vexed look. She felt angry with Fate. Why couldn't she have the man she loved, and the money of the man she did not love?

She heard a blithe whistle down the lane, and the sound of it brought a brighter glow to her face than the exercise of walking had given it. It made her heart beat a trifle faster.

"Why, oh, why, must I give up this great happiness?" she cried, thinking of what her life would lose when Robert Moore was shut out of it. That question, asked of herself, showed her the truth. She knew that she had deliberately made up her mind to turn her back on love and sell herself for gold, though she had hardly admitted it as yet. Perhaps she had known all along what her final decision would be; but, like most of us, she had liked to keep unpleasant truths as far in the background as possible.

"Good-morning," called out a pleasant voice, and a young man sprang over the orchard wall and joined her.

She made room for the visitor in the broad path, but she was silent for some time. The sight of Robert Moore's bright face made her weaker than ever. It set her heart to clamoring for that which she had resolved to deny it, and it seemed to her that a word would have betrayed her.

"Perhaps I am intruding," he said presently. "I wouldn't have come if I thought I was disturbing you."

"I am glad you did come," she said, at last. "I wanted to say something to you that might better be said now than by and by. Perhaps I ought to have said it long ago."

He looked at her questioningly. He saw that her face was grave. Her eyes had a pained look in them. The words had caused her a great effort. But she had decided to put an end to everything between them, at once and forever. There was no use in dallying with the matter. The sooner she told him the truth the better it would be for both of them.

"Sit down," she said, when they came to a little knoll at the end of the lane. "We can have our talk out here without any one's disturbing us."

He sat down, looking up at her in a perplexed way. He had never seen her in this mood before.

She broke a branch of golden-rod from the bush that leaned over the old wall, and tore the yellow blossoms slowly apart. She knew what she wanted to say, but hardly how to say it.

"I think I shall go back to the city in a day or two," she said at last. She did not look at him once, but kept her eyes on the purple hills and thought, with a swift, keen pain, of what life might hold for her if this man could go through it at her side. Now that she had decided to speak the cruel words of doom, the happiness she was rejecting seemed dearer, sweeter—more worth having than ever before.

"I knew you would be going soon," he said. "But"—and his face lighted up with pleasant anticipation—"I shall see you before long. I shall spend the winter in the city. I have often thought of taking this step, but since I have known you I have decided to go, for it will keep me near you, and there will be an incentive to work that I have never felt before. Do you think I would stay here contentedly after you are gone?"

She did not answer; it seemed to her that she could not. He would be near her. She would see him often, perhaps. There was a dangerous pleasure in the thought. But it must not be. He must be made to understand that henceforth their ways lay apart.

"There is something I have wanted to tell you for weeks that I think you understand plainly enough already," he said. "I may as well tell it now—there is no use in waiting. Do you guess what it is I have to say?"

His voice was low and full of an eager tenderness that thrilled her like music. She knew what he had to tell, and she was not womanly enough to prevent his telling it, though she knew what her answer would be. It would be pleasant to hear him say, "I love you." She was cruel enough to let him say it.

"I love you. I ask you to be my wife by and by. Our stations in life are different, and the prejudices of society might lead some to say I was presuming, but to my mind no honest man presumes too much who loves a woman and asks her to share his lot if she loves him. Love makes all equal. Birth or love have nothing to do with it. Since I love you, and, as I believe, you love me, I put all false delicacy, all deference to the opinions of others, entirely out of the question, and ask you to be my wife. Not now, not till I have proved to you that I mean to do something, for your sake, that shall give me a rank among men that shall be courted better than the possession of wealth. I can work hard when I feel the incentive of love urging me on. I can wait till you are willing to come to me, if only you bid me do so."

She listened with averted face. What a tumult his words made in her heart. They made her weak again. After all, was wealth and position worth as much as this man's love? If she gave it up for them, would she never regret her choice? She could not deny that she had encouraged him to believe that she loved him. She did love him. She had known that long ago; had known, too, that it was her duty to put an end to the intimacy between them while it was possible to do it, and save this man's heart the cruelest pain it had ever felt. But she had found it pleasanter to drift with the tide and dream than to be a true woman. Though she loved him she had thought more of her own selfish pleasure than of the pain the truth was sure to give him at last.

"Here's a couple of letters for ye," sang out Joe, her landlady's low-headed son. "Got 'em down to the postoffis." He threw them over the wall to her, gave a knowing wink at Robert Moore, and went on to the house chuckling over the interrupted "sparkin'" that he told his mother about, as he sat on the door-step munching bread and butter.

Catherine Warfield took up the letters and read them through. One was from her father, telling her that John Marsh had asked permission to propose marriage to her.

"I have given my approval, and trust you understand the advantages of such a marriage too well to hesitate in giving a favorable answer to his proposal," he wrote.

The other was from John Marsh, asking her to be his wife. "Your father tells me you are coming home soon," he wrote toward the end of his letter. "If you accept my proposal I will come out and stay a day or two with you, and accompany you home. It may be an old man's whim to want to have the woman he is to marry all to himself at first, but I know that could not be if I waited to see you here, and I think you will not refuse me the pleasure a gratification of this whim, if you choose to call it such, would give me."

Catherine Warfield's lip curled a little with contempt as she read this. To marry an old man was bad enough; a sentimental old man was worse. "This letter is from the man I am to marry," she said, suddenly, as one who stands on a precipice dreading a leap he knows he must make, and all at once gathers his courage and makes the fatal plunge. She did not look at him as she said it. Her face was pale, and her voice trembled, for the words hurt her cruelly, because it was a relentless putting away of the only real love her life had ever known.

He heard her with such a look on his face as men wear when they see the woman they had reckoned above all other women in honor and truth and true womanliness stripped of all disguise and proved to be of common clay. The light that had been in his eyes as he told her of his love had faded out, and there was pain, and anger, and surprise there.

"Why did you not tell me of this before?" he asked, at last. "If I had known——"

She did not answer. Something in his face made her ashamed of herself. She felt her littleness, her unworthiness, her cruelty. For the pleasure it had given her, she had deceived this man and wrung his heart as nothing but the discovery of a woman's faithlessness can wring it. It was no less deceit because she loved him.

"I have been mistaken, he said at last, rising to his feet. She knew that he meant he had been mistaken in his estimate of her rather than in his feelings toward her. He had thought her too true to trifle with a man's love. Knowing how she had trifled with his, what must be his opinion of her? Her face flushed hotly with shame at the thought.

"If you had been frank and truthful with me two months ago it would have been better for both of us," he said. "It would have saved me some pain and disappointment. However, I may get over that in time. But it will take a good deal to make me forget how utterly unworthy you are of the love I have given you. I shall not lose my faith in women because of one woman's faithlessness, for I believe—I know—there are true women, but it is hard to think any woman could deceive a man as you have done."

He turned and walked away, his face very white and stern.

She saw him going from her, and the love she felt for him rose up in arms against the decision she had made. She felt a wild impulse to cry out, to call him back. But she did not give way to it. She felt that he would not come if she called till doomsday. Such men do not forget so grievous an injury in a moment.

"I ought to have told him," she said, "but—I could not. It was so sweet to go on dreaming. But the dream is over at last, and we must wake up to the truth."

She turned away from the spot where they had passed so many pleasant hours together, and went back through the orchard to the old gray farm-house.

"If John Marsh's gold could only buy love like this I have rejected," she cried, as she paused for a moment on the crest of the hill to look down the road Robert Moore had taken. "If—if! Life is full of ifs, and they set everything wrong. I wonder if anything ever sets things right?"

Yes; truth and honor right all wrongs, sooner or later, but if we ignore them the skein of life gets into such a tangle that our hands can never straighten its many threads.

Three days later John Marsh came to visit the woman whose hand had been purchased by his gold. Robert Moore saw him driving past with Miss Warfield, and smiled at the contrast between them, she in the prime of womanhood; he a bent, half-decrepit old man, trying to cheat himself into the belief that the possession of such a beautiful woman was like a renewal of youth. Miss Warfield saw the lover she had rejected, and turned her face away, with a flush, that was half-annoyance, half-shame, on it. When they had passed him, and her gaze wandered back to the old man at her side, the look became one of pain. The thought of being his wife was repulsive. She felt that her life would be nothing but slavery. But the fetter she wore would be a golden one.

In a few days they went back to the city, and Robert Moore told himself that this woman had passed out of his life forever. Their paths would never meet again.

Though his disappointment had been great, he had no idea of giving up to it meekly. He would go to work in earnest and outgrow it.

And he did go to work in earnest. He had intended to find something to do in the city where Miss Warfield lived, because that would bring him near her. But after he had found out the mistake he had made, he determined to go elsewhere, and he set his face Westward. He read of the marriage of Miss Warfield to John Marsh, the millionaire, shortly after he had settled down to his new work, and he could not help feeling a thrill of pity for the woman who had sold herself for gold.

Not long after that he read that John Marsh and his wife had gone to Europe. Then, for months, he heard nothing about them, and he was beginning to forget their existence, when he read that the old man had been stricken with paralysis, and physicians had forbidden his removal from the little Swiss village in which the attack occurred. He must wait there for death, or recovery.

He thought of what her life must be now. If she had loved the old man, her watching and waiting by his sick-bed would have had an element of mournful pleasure in it. But when what we do is done from a sense of duty merely, or a fear of what the world will say if we neglect it, and love is lacking, such a life as he knew hers must be is a dreary one. He could not help wondering what her choice would be now, if it were in her power to make it again.

After that he read no more about them, but he heard from various sources that the life of waiting for some change to come to the old man went on the same from month to month. He lay between life and death, helpless, peevish, exacting, and requiring of his wife the obedience a slave is expected to give. He wondered more than once if the fetter pressed more lightly now because it was a golden one.

Five years went by. These years wrought many changes in their passage. They opened suddenly, for Robert Moore, a career he had often dreamed of. The thriving Western city in which he had cast his lot wanted some one to represent it at Washington, who had in him the ability to make the spirit of Western enterprise and idealism felt, such a man it believed Robert Moore to be, and believing that, it decided that he should be its representative at the Capitol, and so it came about that before he had reached his thirtieth year he was Senator Moore. People whose opinion was worth something spoke of him as being a "promising man." He had a "brilliant career" before him, they said.

Catherine Marsh, whom the slow-moving years had freed from her bondage at last by bringing death to the man who had bought her, was visiting friends in Washington when she found out that the Senator Moore whose name she heard repeated so frequently was the man she had loved in the years that seemed so long ago, as she looked back to them over the dreary, cheerless memory of her life in the little Swiss village where freedom had come to her.

He was near her then. They would meet, perhaps, and who could tell what the result of a renewal of the old friendship would be? It—and then she fell to dreaming of a happiness that she had rejected, that might, after all, be hers. The years that had parted them had not for one moment made her forget the love she had denied herself. She knew now that all the while she had been looking ahead to some possibility like the present one, when the diverging paths would meet.

It was reception-night at the house of a prominent official. Everybody would be there—the everybody of political and fashionable society, at least—and she would go with the hope of meeting Robert Moore.

She made her toilet with special regard to his taste in such matters, as she remembered it. He had told her that no other flower became her so well as scarlet carnations. Therefore, she would wear no other flower to-night. She stood before the glass and wondered if he would find that the years had changed her much. The first flush of womanhood's beauty had disappeared, but there was beauty there still of a cold, stately kind, which the thought of meeting her old lover again softened wonderfully.

"I have not looked so well for a long time," she said, as she shook out the rich folds of her dress, and adjusted the scarlet flowers in her hair and at her throat. John Marsh's diamonds flashed on her hands, but their glitter did not have the fascination for her now that they had possessed five years ago.

She stood among the throng in the parlors, waiting and watching, with a color in her cheeks that rivaled the carnations she wore. Her heart beat fast with a strangely pleasant excitement. She was fascinated by the thought that he was somewhere near her. She seemed to feel his presence. Time had strengthened her love for him, she thought, with a smile at the brilliant woman the mirror reflected as she passed it.

A little later she saw Robert Moore come in. There was a woman on his arm, a sweet-faced, hazel-eyed woman, with pure white lilies nestling among their own green leaves on her shining yellow hair and the buds upon her breast. She looked as fair, as pure, as the flowers she wore. Catherine Marsh started, and the color died out of her face. Could it be that he had forgotten her and given his love to another? A feeling of hatred toward the woman on his arm took possession of her. What right had she—had any one—to come between them? Had he not loved her years ago? Did she not love him now? The wealth she had sold herself for she was ready to lay at his feet, and cry, "Take it! It parted us once, but now it shall be ours—yours and mine—and love shall be ours, too!"

"I see that Senator Moore has arrived," she said to a friend. "Who is that woman with him? His wife?"

The last two words cost her a great effort. They seemed to stab her.

"I never heard of his having a wife," was the reply. "But, now that I come to think of it, I did hear some one say that his cousin and her mother were to live with him this winter. This is probably the cousin. Very sweet, isn't she? Quite like a Madonna, with that yellow hair and those blue eyes."

Catherine Marsh gave a sigh of relief. He had told her of a cousin who had always been like a sister to him. This was that cousin, without doubt.

She watched him as he moved among the crowd. He had changed much in the five years that had passed since she last saw him. His face had a stronger look in it. It told of energy of purpose and high aims. His eyes had a grave thoughtfulness in them, which was relieved by a smile that was winning in its beauty—a smile that a woman might have envied, for it lighted up his face like sunshine.

Watching him, the woman's heart forgot the intervening years and took up the old, sweet dream of love where it had been broken off by the choice she made.

By and by they met.

She held out her hand in eager welcome, saying:

"You have not forgotten me, have you?" He could not mistake the look on her face for anything but pleasure.

"No, I do not forget faces easily," he said, as their hands met. But he said it gravely. There was not the pleasure in his voice she had hoped to hear.

"I am so glad to meet you again," she said. "Let me congratulate you on your brilliant success."

"Thank you," he answered. "I have worked hard, and not all in vain, and I think I have earned my success. I prefer to think that rather than that it was thrust upon me."

"How true has changed us since—since we met last," she said, with a little flush that was partly shame, partly embarrassment, rising to her cheek. Something in his grave, steady glance disconcerted her.

"Five years could not go by without making changes of some sort in us," he answered, as they passed into the conservatory. "Your husband is dead, I think?"

"Yes," she answered, "he died a year ago."

They sat down under an acacia, and talked of ordinary things, at first. He did not seem inclined to venture on the subject about which her thoughts were busy. "Perhaps," she thought, "he is too proud to talk of the old days until I acknowledge that I was wrong."

"Robert," she said, suddenly—"I may call you that, may I not, for the sake of our old friendship? I want to tell you that I made a great mistake when—when I married John Marsh. I was to blame for all that both of us suffered in consequence of the choice I made. Will you forgive me?"

"I forgave you long ago," he said, gravely.

"Oh, that was so good, so kind of you," she said. "I thought, or I tried to make myself think, that I was doing what was for the best. But I found out what a mistake I had made when it was too late. If it was all to do over again, Robert, I would make a different choice."

Her face was full of a strongly appealing look. She was so much in earnest that she forgot she was speaking unwittingly words. It was her heart crying out for the happiness it had starved for so long.

"Do not say anything more," he said, rising; "you might say something you would regret. The woman I loved in the old days is dead. That woman died when I found out how you had deceived me. Perhaps I shall always keep a little tender memory in my heart for the woman I loved, who was true; but for the woman who bore her name after she died I have only pity."

Catherine Marsh's face grew white as it will be when she is dead. She tried to speak, but no words came.

"I am afraid that I came near doubting the truth and sincerity of all women for awhile after I found out how one woman had deceived me," he said, "that I have found out that there are true women in the world, and this is one of them."

Catherine Marsh looked up. The sweet-faced woman was standing at his side with her hand in his.

"This is my wife," he said, softly. "Alice, this is Mrs. Marsh, whom I knew years ago when she was Miss Warfield. I have told you about our friendship and its sudden death."

Then he bent and kissed the face of the woman at his side. That was the cruelest stab of all, for Catherine Marsh, though he did it without a thought of her. She shut her lips tightly together to keep back a cry of pain. Then she turned and walked away. At the door she paused, as the first woman might when the gate of Eden was closing behind her, and gave one last look backward. His eyes were on the face of the sweet-faced woman who was smiling up at him in love and trust.

Then she went out, and the door closed behind her on Paradise.

Bee-Hunting in Australia.

In Australia the native adopts a very peculiar plan for discovering wild honey. He knows that bees never wander very far from home, seldom more than two miles; and he also knows that when a bee is laden with honey it makes, as nearly as possible, a straight line for home. All that is necessary, then, is to find a bee that is well laden and follow it. But that is more easily said than done. Any boy who has tried to follow the big and gay-colored bumble-bee to its nest knows how great a task it is. But that is a mere trifle to following the sober little honey-bee, which can be lost, like a dream, against a gray-colored hill-side.

In order to be followed, the bee must have a distinguishing mark that can be easily seen, and with such a badge the Australian provides it. He gums a small tuft of white cotton to the bee's back, and thus follows it with comparative ease.

But the question now comes up, how is the cotton to be put upon the bee's back? The gum is quickly found—it is on almost any tree; the cotton grows right at hand. The bee, too, is found in almost any sweet flower, buried head first in the dusty pollen, drinking in the nectar and showing quite plainly whether its honey-sac is full or empty. It moves a little in its eager haste to secure the delicious liquid, but perhaps a quick dab will fasten the cotton on its back. Do not try it. As the little boy told his mother, the bee is a very "quick kicker."

Watch the Australian—and he a very stupid fellow, too, in most things. He fills his mouth with water, has his snowy tuft of cotton ready gummed, finds his bee, gently drenches it with water spurted from his mouth; picks it up while it is still indignantly shaking itself free from the water which clogs its wings, and with a dexterous touch he affixes in an instant the tell-tale cotton.

Very much out of patience, no doubt, with the sudden and unexpected rain-storm, the bee rubs off the tiny drops from its wings, tries them, rubs again, and soon—buzz! buzz! away it goes, unconsciously leading destruction and pillage to its happy home.—From "Honey-hunting," by John R. Coryell, in St. Nicholas.

Men of Extraordinary Strength.

Many stories of strong men and extraordinary feats of strength are to be found in the annals of all countries. Ancient history abounds in them, and the hero of the mediæval chronicles in this respect was Cæsar Borgia, who, it is said, could fell a bullock by a blow of his fist. One of the most extraordinary athletes that England has produced was Thomas Topham, who was born in London in 1711. The first proof he gave of his prodigious strength was pulling against a horse in Moorfields, and afterward lifting a rolling stone 800 pounds weight, with his hands only, standing in a frame above it, and taking hold of a chain that was fastened to it. He could roll up a pewter dish of seven pounds as easily as another man could a sheet of paper; hold a quart pot at arm's length and squeeze the sides together like an egg-shell; lift 200 weight with his little finger, and move it gently over his head; he could lift an oak table six feet long, to which half a hundred weight was attached, with his teeth, and, resting it against his knees, hold it in a horizontal position for a considerable time. He raised with one hand a man who weighed twenty-seven stone. His head being laid upon one chair and his feet upon another, four people, fourteen stone each, sat upon his body, which he heaved at pleasure. He could strike a round bar of iron about a yard long and three inches in diameter against his naked arm, and at one stroke bend it like a bow. He lifted two hogsheads of water, heaved his horse over a turnpike gate, and carried the beam of a house across his shoulders as easily as another man would a rifle. Once, finding a watchman asleep in his box in Chiswell street, Moorfields, he took up the box and man in his arms, carried them some distance, and then dropped them over the railings into a place called Tyndall's Burying-Ground. There was nothing of the giant in his appearance; he was in height about five feet ten, well made, but not strikingly so, and walked with a slight limp; but what were hollows under the arms and hams in other men were in him filled up with muscle. He once made a wager that three horses could not draw him from a post, round which he clasped his feet, and it was only by giving them a sudden lash and a twist that the driver succeeded in doing so and in breaking Topham's thigh at the same time.

It is said that there is one cow to every four persons in this country, and if the wells and springs were to fail, some of us would be put on short allowance of milk and cream.

AN "Anxious Inquirer" desires to know if a large number of mosquitoes are healthy. We should say decidedly so. From a diagnosis of those we have not been fortunate enough to make a mash on, we conclude that the tenor of their voices indicate sound lungs, and the voracity of their appetites points to a good digestion. These two are the best evidence in the world of good health.—Texas Siftings.

A MEDICAL writer says "a man should never get out of bed hastily." It was not necessary to include boys in this advice. A boy never gets out of bed hastily unless he hears an alarm of fire. There are times, however, when a man is obliged to get out of bed hastily. On Sunday morning, for instance, when he hears the last church bell ring, and has only half an hour to dress and reach his pew, he is apt to jump out in a hurry—provided he didn't get up at daylight to go a-fishing.—Norristown Herald.

THE FISHERMAN'S BAIT.

This is the bait the fishermen take, the fishermen
take, the fishermen take when they start out the lash to wake so early in the morning. They take a nip before they go—good one, ah! and long and slow, for fear the chills would lay them low, so early in the morn. Another when they're on the street, which they repeat each time they meet for "luck"—for that's the way to greet a fisherman in the morn. And when they're on the river's bank again they drink without a wink—to fight malaria, all by the doctor's warning.
They tip a flask with true delight when there's a bite; if fishing's flight to cry "smile" the more till jolly tight all fishing they are scorning. Another nip as they depart; one at the mart, one to part, but none when in the house they dart, expecting there'll be mourning. This is the bait the fishermen try who wishes boy at prices high, and tell each one a bigger lie of fishing so early in the morning.

Two Kinds.

If one looks at the home life of our well-known society women, it will be found they are more lovely in the seclusion of their families than at the head of some brilliant society exploit. These women are helpmeets to their husbands in every sense of the word, and are noble mothers. Their daughters have the example of their mothers as a guide, and in almost every case will follow that example in building their own homes. They have been taught the responsibilities and duties of their positions, if not in theory, at least in practice, by their mothers. Such women are, as a rule, very plain in person and dress, and at first one is at a loss to know how they have secured such a position. There is a beauty of mind and morals. The other faction, the parasites, do not possess the worth of the real leaders, but they have physical charms which they know how to use. They have better "style" as far as dress goes, than their rivals, but they lack the art of retaining admiration. They appear best under gaslight. They are fully conscious of their defects, and aim to possess all the privileges accorded women, without assuming the duties. They step into the best places with the air of those to the manor born, and are not overscrupulous as to the means by which they attain their object. It is this class that have caused men to speak sneeringly and lightly of all women.—San Francisco.

A REPORTER who tried to interview the King of the Belgians was bowed out of the room.

A New King on the Throne!

"Malaria," as a "popular ailment," has given place to a new potentate.

If you have Rheumatism now, the medical wiseacres exclaim—"Uric Acid!"

If you have frequent headaches, they sagely remark—"Uric Acid!"

If you have softening of the brain, they insist that it is—"Uric Acid!"

If Sciatica or Neuralgia make life miserable, it is—"Uric Acid!"

If your skin breaks out in Boils and Pimples, it is—"Uric Acid!"

If you have Abscesses and Piles, "Uric Acid" has set your blood on fire.

If you have dull, languid feelings, backache, kidney or bladder troubles, gout, gravel, poor blood; are ill at ease, threatened with paralysis, apoplexy, or vertigo; are bilious, dropsical, constipated or dyspeptic—"Uric Acid" is the key to the situation, the cause of all your difficulties!

We do not know as Madam Malaria will take kindly to this Masculine Usurper, but he has evidently come to stay.

"Uric Acid,"—this Monster, is the product of the decomposition—death—constantly taking place within us, and unless he is every day routed from the system, through the kidneys by means of some great blood specific like Warner's safe cure, which Senator B. K. Bruce says snatched him from its grasp, there is not the least doubt but that it will utterly ruin the strongest human constitution.

It is not a young fellow by any means. It has a long and well-known line of ancestors. It is undoubtedly the father of a very great family of diseases, and though it may be the fashion to ascribe progeny to it that are not directly its own, there can be little doubt that if it once gets thoroughly sealed in the human system, it really does introduce into it most of the ailments now, perforce of fashion, attributed to its baleful influence.

Obnoxious Enthusiasm.

It drives me wild to see grown-up people, accused of possessing common sense, touching a subject with kid gloves when they ought to roll up their sleeves and go in for hard work. This supineness brings many good ideas to naught. They are fed on promises and 5 o'clock teas. "I dare not waits upon I would" in a manner to make Lady Macbeth use worse language than she did formerly. Want of earnestness is the cause of this torpidity. Society means chaff. Enthusiasm is as obnoxious as the plague. To be possessed of an idea which you are ready to defend with blood and treasure is to be a nuisance. You are worse than a criminal; you are a bore. To bore is to commit unpardonable sin. Let Stanley cross Africa and James Gordon Bennett tie the American flag to the north pole, and both will be feted after they've accomplished their self-appointed tasks, because society patronizes success in any form—but equator and north pole must not be mentioned in advance. Columbus may discover America, but he won't be invited to dine out or to sit for his photograph until he returns home alive. If he doesn't return it serves him right. Why wasn't he content with one hemisphere? Why not let well enough alone?

In my private opinion contentment is a swinish sentiment. To be satisfied is to wallow in stagnation. But I keep this belief to myself because I desire to live peaceably with my neighbors. Mind you, this criticism applies to what is called "society."—Kate Field.

Mrs. Smithson—Not the lady you are looking at, Mr. Jones; she is my mother.

Jones—Oh!—Boston Transcript.

The Commercial Traveler.

A young man was seen hurriedly coming out of a business house, which he had entered to solicit employment as a salesman.

"Did the boss engage you as a salesman?"

"No, he wanted me to travel," was the ambignons reply.—Texas Siftings.

Of Course He Would.

"If you should allow me $14 per week on which to run the house," she said, as they sat together in the twilight, "and I saved $3 per week out of that, what would you say?"

"Say? Why, I'd say that you ought to run it on 'leven!" he growled, as he lighted the gas.—Detroit Free Press.

One sometimes sees a drunken man pitched violently from a horse, and when the bystanders rush to the spot, expecting to find him dead, they are astonished to discover that he has been little injured. In his "Scrambles Among the High Alps," Leslie Stephen tells the story of a guide who while drunk fell over a precipice so deep that a fall over it seemed almost certain death, and who yet sustained little injury. Stephen accordingly gives his readers the advice either not to fall over a precipice, or to get thoroughly drunk before doing so. The reason of this immunity is that the nerve centers are so much paralyzed in the drunken man as not to be affected by the shock of the fall, which in a sober man would have acted upon them so violently as to stop the heart, arrest the circulation, and cause instant death.

Burial Customs in Timur.

The burial of a relative in Timur is a very serious and expensive business. It involves a gift to the deceased from all his blood relatives, and, in return, a burial feast. If the deceased is a man of rank, this feast is a matter very often of ruin to the family. The festivity must be given, and at the same time the hospitality is expected to be extraordinarily lavish. Consequently it often happens that the day of the funeral is indefinitely postponed for months, and even for years, until the family has had time to accumulate sufficient wealth of cattle and substance. In the meantime the corpse is inclosed in matting, and housed either in a tree or a hut and left to itself. Then for days there is a savage banqueting and reveling, and the interment at last is carried out. Among the more savage races of the Timur Lant islands and Timur, the skull of an ancestor is severed after burial and kept as a relic in a place of honor within the house.—Chicago Herald.

The Old and the New.

The old-style pills! Who does not know
What agony they caused—what woe?
You walked the floor, you groaned, you sighed,
And felt such awful pain inside,
And the next day you felt so weak
You didn't want to move or speak.
Now Pierce's "Pellets" are so mild
They are not dreaded by a child.
They do their work in painless way,
And leave no weakness for next day.
Thus proving what is oft confest
That gentle means are always best.

of life is the blood. From it the system receives all its material of growth and repair. It bathes every tissue of the body. How necessary, then, that the blood should be kept pure and rich. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is the great blood food and blood purifier. It is a sovereign remedy for all diseases due to impoverished blood, consumption, bronchitis, weak lungs, scrofula, influenza, and kindred diseases.

WE ✻ WANT ✻ THE ✻ EARTH

to yield bigger returns to our subscribers during 1886 than ever before, and accordingly are putting still more brains and money into the American Agriculturist, English and German. The great staff of editors, who, headed by Dr. George Thurber, have kept it at the front for twenty-five years, are now re-enforced by Chester P. Dewey, D. D., T. Moore, and Seth Green. Every number of this periodical is packed with invaluable hints, suggestions, and information for Farm, Garden, and Household, together with nearly One Hundred Original Illustrations of Live Stock, Fruits, Flowers, Tools, Appliances, etc. Every number is richly worth the subscription price.

The 10th Volume of the United States Census last year said: The American Agriculturist is especially worthy of mention because of the remarkable success that has attended the unique and untiring efforts of its proprietors to increase and extend its circulation. But we now propose to enlarge its sphere and add to the hundreds of thousands of homes in which the American Agriculturist is read and revered as an old time friend and counselor.

We are accordingly enlarging the Hearth, Household and Juvenile Departments, and adding other features, so that it is to be, from this time onward, essentially a Home Periodical, as well as being devoted to agriculture and horticulture. And this is done without increasing the price of subscription. But furthermore, every person who immediately sends us $1.50, the subscription price, and 15 cents for posting book, making $1.65 in all, will receive

The American Agriculturist

DROPSY TREATED FREE.

DR. H. H. GREEN,

A Specialist for Eleven Years Past,

Has treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; uses vegetable remedies entirely harmless. Removes all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.

Cures patients pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.

From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.

Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of my treatment for yourself. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to do their large duty, sleep is restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. I am constantly curing cases of long standing, cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Send for 10 days' treatment; directions and terms free. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, is bowels costive, have legs bursted and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Ten days' treatment furnished free by mail.

Epilepsy fits positively cured.

If order trial, send 7 cents in stamps to pay postage.

What "Rum" is Doing.

Take up the daily paper and read the reports of the cuttings, stabbings, shootings, riots, assaults, wife-beatings, and all the other infractions of peace and good order, and ninety per cent of the sum total will be found to be occasioned directly by rum.

Go through your poor-houses and you will find that ninety per cent of the inmates were brought there directly by rum.

Go through your jails and penitentiaries and you will find that ninety per cent of the criminals were made so directly by rum.

Look over the list of executions for murder and you will find that ninety per cent of the food for the gallows was furnished directly by rum.

Make inquiry as to the cause of separations of husbands and wives, and domestic troubles generally, and you will find that ninety per cent of it all may be charged directly to rum.

Scan the corruption in governmental matters, the cases of mal-administration, corruption in elections and all that is undermining purity in government, and you will find that ninety per cent of it is chargeable directly to rum.

In brief, sum up all there is of brutality, violence, beggary, crime, and corruption, more than ninety per cent of the awful aggregate may be charged directly to rum.

Rum is the one agency that is undermining humanity, it is the one influence that makes the work of the church of no avail; it is the one agency that kills the good effect of education; it is the one weapon which the devil wields that is irresistible; the one agency that stands in opposition to everything that is good and fosters everything that is evil. It is death to the family, to business, to society, to government, and to the school and the church. It tears down faster than all agencies for good can build up.

There is crime and pauperism just in proportion as there are liquor shops. There is corruption in politics exactly in proportion to the amount of rum consumed. The cities, with their miles of rum shops, are plundered and tax-ridder, and the only salvation for the states containing them is the country, which is free from its demoralizing influence. Where rum is, votes can be purchased, and a rum purchased vote was never yet cast for a good object.

With these ghastly facts staring every decent man in the face, we are asked to let rum alone. It is with rum as it was with slavery, it is the one thing that must not be touched. Its right to go on debauching men and boys and demoralizing the world must not be questioned. Its right to kill men, to wreck boys, and ruin girls must not be touched. There is not a family in the United States that has not this danger constantly hovering over it. There are millions of dollars invested in a business the profits of which depend upon the number of boys that can be ruined annually. The vast financial structure is based upon the ruin of men. The more drunkards this interest can make the greater its profits, and as there is no limit to human cupidity, so there is no limit to its efforts in this direction.—Toledo Blade.

Mr. Cooper's Offer.

It is not every minister who would offer to pay the year's public expenses of a whole New England city. Yet that is what Rev. James B. Cooper, of New Britain Conn., is just reported to have done—on one condition! If the people of New Britain, he said, would stop drinking for one year, and give him the money, he would pay all the city taxes for them, including street, sewer, water, police, gas and electricity charges. He would also pay the school tax, doubling the salaries of the teachers, and building a new high-school building and a new house for the Young Men's Christian Association. Next he would pay off the whole city's indebtedness ($330,000,) and throw in a barrel of flour to every poor family, and a suit of clothes to every needy person in town. Mr. Cooper's offer is still open; but at latest advices the citizens had not accepted it.—S. S. Times.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Luchis H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 303, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees east, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the beach of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north range six (6) west, intersects said beach, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty (50) links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Peterson, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 639; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45,58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

BY NEGLECT

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till soon an inflamed condition exists, that powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's cough balsam which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who are but the wrecks of their former selves receive wonderful help. In croup and whooping cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

The Independent

The Largest, the Ablest, the Best

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY WEEKLY.

The most influential religious organ in the States.—The Spectator, London, Eng.

THE INDEPENDENT is one of the best papers in the world. Its good points are many and striking. They have only to be stated to be appreciated; and for proof of our claims appeal may be taken to any of the fifty-two issues for the year. Any number of The Independent will show that its contents are marked by—

ABILITY, VARIETY, AND INTEREST.—The great thinkers, the great story-writers, the great poets, men of the highest reputation in all departments of human knowledge, make up its list of contributors. Religion, philosophy, art, science, literature, travels, discoveries, stories, and all conceivable topics are embraced in the contents, and everybody, old or young, learned and unlearned, without regard to sex, employment, or condition, will find something of special interest in every issue.

COMPREHENSIVENESS.—It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined.

BREADTH, CANDOR, EARNESTNESS.—The Independent is tied to no denomination; it is the organ of no clique or party in state or church. It is free, therefore, to discuss all questions, and to speak its mind candidly. It is not swerved by fear or favor. It is a vigorous defender of the Evangelical faith, it preaches practical righteousness, and earnestly supports all moral reforms. All its columns—the advertising as well as the reading—are free from everything of doubtful or objectionable character. No matter what a person's religion, politics, or profession may be, if he desires to keep up with the times and know what the brightest minds are thinking of, the ablest pens are writing about, and what the world at large is doing—he should read The Independent.

The Offering.

Daily with feeble, careworn hands I trim
The lamp of life, and with unceasing prayer
I offer its poor, flickering flame to him
Who doth our burdens bear.

Long, long ago its brightness slowly waned,
Long, long ago I ceased to hold it dear,
Nor saw I aught of gladness to be gained
From year slow following year.

Yet for my master's sake, who bids me wait
Until his coming, still I trim my light,
And still it burns, as now the hours grow late
And deepen into night.

Not mine to ask why he doth will it so,
Not mine to quench this faintly burning fire.
Mine but to wait in patience and to know
The faithful heart is his supreme desire.
—Springfield Republican.

Waste Places of the World.

The Russian explorer Prejevalsky said, after his recent journey to Northern Thibet, that an enormous amount of animal life was supported by the scanty herbage growing on these bleak half-sterile plains that form the highest plateau in the world, some 13,000 feet above the sea. He said the wild yaks there must number millions, and that a full-grown yak weighs from 1,600 to 1,800 pounds. Nature's chemistry evolves these great masses of flesh from the poor herbage of a region so lofty that its lakes are frozen over until nearly June, though they are 600 miles nearer the equator than we are.

Explorers tell us that not only does animal life abound, but that man can live in some of the most desolate parts of the globe. It is a mistake to suppose that the Sahara Desert is merely a sandy waste. Much of it lacks not so much cultivable land as industrious hands to make the vast expanse of withered oases blossom again. The Musselman sect known as the Senoussians has for years been digging wells, irrigating the land, and turning many hundreds of barren acres into gardens. Twenty-four years ago it planted its headquarters in the desert near the western border of Egypt, built reservoirs, began plantations, erected convents, and now a population of 8,000 people live at Jarabub, where the soil has been restored to fertility by their labors. There are large areas in the Sahara that need only rain or irrigation to cover them with verdure. Through these regions pass the caravan routes, along which the camels engaged in the Saharan commence bear their burdens.

Mr. Anderson, the civil engineer, who last year completed sixteen years of exploration in South Africa, between the Orange and the Zambesi rivers, says that the rain that falls for a few weeks every year in the great region known as the Kalahara desert covers the blackened, verdureless plain with splendid vegetation. Game is abundant there, especially lions, leopards and ostriches, and he has counted in this desert twenty-two lions in a troop, and has seen 200 ostriches in one flock. Beasts and birds find sustenance in this region where only a few bushmen hunters live. Far northeast of them on the semi-arid steppes of Kordetan and Darfar millions of sheep and camels exist on the scanty pasturage of that desert region.

The earliest Arctic explorers found in the little Spitzbergen Archipelago—where, it is believed, no human being had ever lived—herds of reindeer upturning the snow with their hoofs and noses to get at the lichens on which they fed. Many reindeer live as far north as Littleton Island, and several score of them were killed by the Hayes and Polaris expeditions. Musk oxen or their traces have been found along the shores of the great frozen sea as far north as explorers have attained. Lockwood, far north of the supposed limits of animal life, found traces of this wonderful quadruped, which grows fat on the tender shoots of the Arctic willow, and plows up the snow for moss and lichens.

Of all parts of the earth the Antarctic regions alone are comparatively destitute of life. Few species of living things in the vegetable or animal kingdom can endure the rigor of the south polar region. No terrestrial quadruped inhabits the land within the Antarctic circle, and whales and seals are the only mammals that enter its area. Summer in the Arctic regions, with its abundant life on land and in the air and sea, presents an animated and cheerful scene compared with the utter desolation that reigns perpetually in Antarctic waters.—New York Sun.

The Search for Gold.

When the discoveries were made on what is known as the Comstock lode gold quartz mining in California began to be neglected. The wonderful silver bonanza of Nevada threw everything else in the way of mining into the shade. Silver mining stocks were sold at so much a foot, and the price mounted into the thousands. There has been a quarter of a century of mining on the Comstock lode. The operations there have been of a gigantic character. A few men became millionaires. As for the great army of operators they finally became poor. There is not a dividend paying mine to-day on that lode. Nor has there been one for a long time. When the silver-mining interests of Nevada fall down below the dividend-paying point and assessments all round were the order of the day, attention was turned to other mining fields. But, singularly enough, there was no real revival of gold quartz mining in California. The great mineral belts of Arizona and New Mexico began to attract attention. There were rich silver lodes there, and the impression was deepened that in Arizona, in particular, a mineral belt would be found exceeding in richness the famed Comstock lode; Many good mines have been found in Arizona, and no doubt there are many more yet to be developed. But no discovery has been made of anything like the importance of the silver discovery of Nevada a quarter of a century ago. A great deal of prospecting has been done in the Republic of Mexico, and many important mines have been acquired by Americans. But, while there is a possibility of a vast mining interest to be developed in Mexico in the interest of American miners, on the whole the mineral development has gone slow in that country. There are many drawbacks, the duties on supplies have been heavy, and the discount on silver, added to the various taxes, has gone a long way to keep down the profits. Yet it is probable that one of the greatest mining fields of the world will be within the limits of the Mexican republic. What is most worthy of observation to-day is the revival of interest in gold quartz mining in California. This has resulted in part from the decline of mining interests in Nevada, the heavy discount on silver, and the small number of dividend-paying silver mines in all the country usually designated as the Pacific coast. A large number of abandoned gold mines have been rehabilitated of late. The annual production of gold has fallen below twenty millions in this State, and a large part of that product was represented by the gravel mines. Slowly the gold quartz interest has been creeping up. There are just now no well defined gold-bearing lodes carrying from $16 to $20 a ton which are begging for purchasers. The processes for extracting gold have been greatly improved; machinery has been perfected, mining engineers and experts know how to get the last possible dollar out of the rock, and the yield of many of these low-grade mines has become very satisfactory. When it is once extracted there is no discount on the bullion.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Bishop Dudley on the Negro Question.

Bishop Dudley, of Kentucky, has a paper in the June Century, entitled "How Shall we Help the Negro?" We quote the following: "Still the problem remains, how shall these alien races dwell in safety side by side, each free and unhampered in the enjoyment of life and liberty and in the pursuit of its happiness? They are the descendants of one father, the redeemed children of one God, the citizens of one nation, neighbors with common interests, and yet are separated by the results of centuries of development, physical, mental, and moral,—separated by inherited traditions, by the spirit of caste, by the recollection of wrongs done and suffered, though it may be in general as innocent in the perpetrator as in the sufferer. How shall the rights of all be duly guarded? How shall the lower race be lifted up to higher stages of human development, for only so can the rights of the superior race be made secure for the present and for the future, and this is the chiefest right of them who are now cast down?

"I answer, by the personal endeavors of individuals of the higher race; by their personal contact with these, their ignorant and untaught neighbors, exhibiting before their wondering eyes in daily life the principles of truth and justice, purity and charity, honesty and courage. Perhaps this may seem to be but the veriest platitude, the gush of sentiment, the twaddle of a maudlin religion, but in all truth and soberness I mean exactly what I say. Let me try to explain more fully.

"These people need help, that they may be lifted up. I mean, then, that in my judgment the help must be personal and not official, the hand of a friend rather than the club of an officer, the patient counsel of a neighbor rather than the decree of a court, the enactment of a Congress, or the proclamation of a President. The solemn sanctions of the organic law are thrown round about this liberty, and the robe of citizenship, full, perfect, and complete, with never seam nor rent, has been put upon it. The courts have declared its inviolable character, and this decree affirms the negro, the liberated slave, a citizen. But does the declaration make him such? I mean does it, can it impart the intelligent life, the moral consciousness which shall vivify the dead mass and make it a helpful member of the body politic? We have had declarations from every department of the Government that the negro is a citizen; but they are as powerless to effect their purpose as were the oft-repealed acts of the Confederate Congress to make the paper dollar worth more than two cents; as migratory and vain as the old-time legislation of Virginia that there should be a town at such and such a designated cross-road. The negro is a citizen, and he has the rights under the Constitution and the laws that any white man has; and yet he needs help, though it may be the black and white demagogues would dissuade him to think so,—he needs help, personal, individual, patient, loving help, that he may be fitted to exercise his covenanted rights, and to do the duties which these rights impose."

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Work has been resumed at John Roach's ship-yard on the cruiser Chicago, and at his New York shops 150 men are employed on the cruiser Atlanta and dispatch-boat Dolphin.

The managers of a charity fair at Reading, Pa., created a sensation by refusing to allow Hebrew women to participate.

Miss Mary Anderson was tendered a breakfast at Delmonico's, New York, by the ladies of the Sorosis Club, at which covers were laid for 150 guests.

In August, 1885, Joseph Dyer, aged twenty, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., was thrown from a wagon and killed, the remains being interred a few days later. Recently the parents received word that their dead son was alive and well. They resolved to exhume the coffin, which was done, and removed it to the family residence. As the lid was about to be removed the supposed dead man walked into the house. It is surmised that medical students dug up the body, found that life was not extinct, and treated Dyer until he fully recovered.

General McClellan left his entire estate to his wife, his military accoutrements to his son, and his sword to his daughter. He appointed as his literary executor William C. Prime, of New York.

Fred Townsend, aged thirteen, killed Willie McCallister, aged five, at Troy, N. Y., by burying him up to the neck in a bank of soft white clay, where the child lingered twenty hours before death relieved him.

Ferdinand Ward complains of harsh treatment at the hands of his keeper in Sing Sing prison. He denies that he has any money left, but alleges that Warner received in excess of $1,000,000 from the firm of Grant & Ward.

WESTERN.

A long existing feud between two Democratic politicians, W. J. Elliott, editor of the Sunday Capitol, and the Hon. Emil Kiesewetter, State Auditor, culminated in the shooting of the editor by the Auditor at the Neil House, Columbus, Ohio, wounding him in the hand.

A bitter warfare is being waged against the Mongolian on the Pacific coast. At Seattle and Tacoma, in Washington Territory, the word has gone forth that the coolies must go. A fire in the Chinese quarter of Los Angeles, Cal., caused the citizens to meet and order the Celestials away. The latter at once purchased ground outside the city limits, began the erection of buildings, and quickly removed their property. Ten companies of infantry were dispatched from Vancouver to Seattle to protect the Chinese and preserve order. At Washington President Cleveland issued the following proclamation:

Whereas, It is represented to me by the Governor of the Territory of Washington that domestic trouble exists within the said Territory, and that by reason of unlawful obstructions and combinations, and the assemblage of evil-disposed persons, it has become impracticable to enforce by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings the laws of the United States at Seattle and at other points and places within said Territory whereby life and property are there threatened and endangered; and

Whereas, The Legislature of said Territory cannot be convened, and in the judgment of the President an emergency has arisen and a case is now presented which justifies and requires, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the employment of military force to suppress domestic violence and enforce the faithful execution of the laws of the United States, if the command and warning of this proclamation be disobeyed and disregarded;

Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, do hereby command and warn all insurgents and all persons who have assembled at any point within the said Territory of Washington for the unlawful purposes aforesaid to desist therefrom and to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes on or before 12 o'clock meridian the 8th day of November instant.

And I do admonish all good citizens of the United States and all persons within the limits and jurisdiction thereof against aiding, abetting, countenancing, or taking any part in any such unlawful acts or assemblages.

The St. Louis Crematory Society, organized by 300 business men, has secured a permit for a building on Grand avenue, near Tower Park, to cost $11,000.

Chicago Knights of Labor repudiate the action of the dynamiting Knights in St. Louis.

About fifteen thousand persons at-tended the opening of the fat-stock and dairy show at Chicago last week. A feature of the exhibition was an Ohio bull 6 feet 4 inches in height, and weighing nearly 4,500 pounds. The National Butter, Cheese, and Egg Association was formally received and welcomed to Chicago by Governor Oglesby, Mayor Harrison, and others in Haverly's Theater.

On his Palo Alto ranch, near Menlo Park, Cal., Senator Stanford proposes to establish a great university, which he will endow to the extent of $20,000,000.

The North American Telegraph Company proposes to complete as speedily as possible lines from Duluth to Chicago, via St. Paul, and will issue stock to the amount of $200,000.

At a meeting held in Seattle, Wash-ington Territory, by the mercantile and professional classes, a committee of three hundred was formed to preserve peace after the withdrawal of the troops.

A revised list of the passengers and crew of the steamer Algoma, which was wrecked on Isle Royale, Lake Superior, shows that forty-five persons perished and fourteen were saved.

Near the corner of Halsted and Ad-ams streets, Chicago, a cranky shoemaker named Max Ritterberg shot and killed a policeman who entered his shop to quell a disturbance. Ritterberg then ran to his residence, and in the presence of his family put a bullet through his brain.

Judge Gresham has approved the decree of foreclosure against the Toledo, Cincinati and St. Louis Narrow-Gauge Road, which is mortgaged for $5,400,000, and weighed down by receivers' certificates for $1,000,000 or more. The divisions will be sold separately, at Indianapolis, about the end of December.

SOUTHERN.

At Daingerfield, Texas, a cyclone killed a colored family of six persons. A funnel-shaped storm-cloud did great damage at Rusk, Cherokee County, Texas, blowing down a number of houses. The village of Brownsville, Sumter County, Ala., was almost obliterated by a tornado, many houses being blown away and others damaged. Wide swaths of destruction were cut by a wind-storm through South Carolina. A cyclone at Decatur, Ala., sunk two steamboats and did other damage. Corinth, Miss., was visited by the heaviest hail-storm ever known in that section. Heavy rains in the Carolinas caused great damage to cotton and late corn. Similar visitations in Tennessee are reported, railroads suffering seriously on account of washouts.

Returns from the cyclone which swept through the Southwest some days ago show that thirteen persons were killed and large amounts of property were destroyed in the counties of Dallas, Perry, and Bibb, in Alabama.

The body of Mrs. J. W. Taylor, of Louisville, which was interred six years ago, has been found completely petrified, with every feature life-like.

John Smith, a miser of Weston, West Virginia, had $1,600 in currency hidden in a hollow log in the woods. In attempting to add to the treasure he found it was gone.

George Schaefer, a cotton-buyer at Hampton, Ga., has been forced by ill-health to suspend business. His liabilities are $150,000.

At Fannin, Clay County, Texas, a lad of 13 years, named Valentine Sanford, killed his mother with a rifle. He confesses having intended to murder his father, sell the plantation, and organize a band of stage-robbers.

Confederate bonds are selling freely in Columbia and Charleston, S. C., at $1.35 per $1,000.

The Governor of Louisiana has granted a respite for thirty days to Patrick Ford and John Murphy, the murderers of Captain Murphy, a local politician.

WASHINGTON.

The Congressional Committee of Inquiry now visiting Indian Territory will recommend for the civilized tribes the establishment of a tribunal government with one or more Federal courts.

A bronze statue of James A. Gar-field will be erected at the intersection of First street and Maryland avenue, Washington. A pedestal costing $29,000 is to be in position by July 1 next.

Professor Powell has written to Sec-retary Lamar denying the various charges affecting discreditably the administration of the geological survey.

Secretary Lamar is engaged in hearing the petitions of nine different telephone interests for the vacation of the patent granted to Mr. Bell. It is alleged that Meucci used a telephone in 1849, and never abandoned his invention.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has refused to approve a list of lands selected by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, including about 58,000 acres of land in Washington Territory embraced within the forfeited grant of the Oregon Central Railroad Company.

The report of the First Assistant Postmaster General shows that during the first four months of the present administration there were 810 postmasters removed or suspended. Virginia gained 100 postoffices during the past year, and Dakota scores an increase of 71. The free-delivery offices number 178, and show a profit of $79,017.

POLITICAL.

The Virginia Democrats most prom-inently mentioned for Mahone's seat in the Senate are John W. Daniel, Walter R. Staples, and J. S. Barbour.

The resignation of P. M. Kelly, Pen-sion Agent, at Louisville, Ky., has been accepted, to take effect Dec. 31 next, and Gen. Don Carlos Buell has been appointed his successor. The President has appointed the Hon. Leverett Saltonstall Collector of Customs at Boston in place of Roland Worthington, removed. The President has also made the following appointments:

James A. Bayard of Maryland, to be Secretary of Arizona; Joseph C. Strauman of Indiana, to be Surveyor-General of Idaho; James Dawson of Colorado, to be Surveyor-General of Colorado; John Hise of Arizona, to be Surveyor-General of Arizona; George Frank Bales to be Surveyor of Customs for the Port of Port Jefferson, N. Y.; Edward R. Pierce to be Appraiser of Merchandise in the District of Portland and Falmouth, Me.; Russell G. Woodman, to be Assistant Appraiser of Merchandise in the District of Portland and Falmouth, Me.; Robert A. Thompson to be Appraiser of Merchandise in the District of San Francisco, Cal.; Christian Reis to be Assistant Appraiser of Merchandise in the District of San Francisco, Cal.; William Faxon, of Michigan, to be Register of the Land Office at Detroit; E. L. Carson, of Texas, Indian Agent at Uintah, Utah; Leigh O. Knapp, of New Mexico, Receiver of Public Moneys at Santa Fe, N. M.; Robert B. Smith, of Montana, to be United States District Attorney for Montana, Presidential Postmasters—Tranquilo Labadie at Las Vegas, N. M., vice F. Romero, resigned; Mrs. Armum Quinbu at Montiello, N. Y., vice Richard Oakley, resigned, and L. A. Bostwick at Lowville, N. Y., vice W. Scott resigned; W. S. Hammaker, Findley, Ohio, vice E. G. Dewolfe suspended; G. M. Shelly, Kansas City Mo., vice T. S. Case commission expired; Robert Humphrey, at East Brighton, N. Y., vice Mrs. M. Smith, suspended; Oscar D. Derr, at Roanoke, Va., vice A. S. Asberry, suspended; G. K. Yerington, at Girard, Ill., vice A. G. Leigh commission expired; T. G. Bunnell at Newton, N. J., vice W. B. Mattison, commission expired; S. G. Bennett, at Pittston, Pa., vice J. P. D. Palmer, suspended; Richard Mooney, at Rondout, N. Y., vice A. N. Barnes, suspended; John A. Bardel, at Superior, Wis., vice S. E. Tubbs, suspended.

William Hyde, from his boyhood con-nected editorially with the Missouri Republican, and for eighteen years editor-in-chief of that journal, has been appointed Postmaster at St. Louis.

Questions sent out by a Washington correspondent to members of Congress elicited answers from 160 gentlemen. Sixty-four of them favor and sixty-five oppose changes in the laws governing silver coinage and certificates. Fifty-seven members desire a revision of the customs and internal revenue laws, and seventy-five oppose it. Fifty-seven Democrats are for Carlisle, and one for Randall, for Speaker. Thirty Republicans support Frank Hiscock, and twenty-three are for Reed, of Maine.

Samuel J. Tilden, Jr., has been ap-pointed Internal Revenue Collector for the Fifteenth District of New York.

The President has appointed General Joseph R. Bartlett, of New York City, to be Second Deputy Commissioner of Pensions, in place of Lewis C. Bartlett, resigned, on account of ill-health; William R. Morgan, of Nashville, Tenn., to be member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, in place of Orange Judd, resigned; and John G. Lee, of Philadelphia, to be Secretary of Legation at Constantinople. Dr. Lee is a friend of Minister Cox, and is understood to have been appointed on his personal solicitation. He is familiar with the modern languages and is said to be peculiarly fitted for the place.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The mortality from small-pox in Montreal and vicinity during the week was 302, a decrease of fifty-two as compared with the preceding week.

The reports of the Commissioners of Emigration for the State of New York show that during the year ended June 30 there arrived from foreign ports at New York City 356,906 passengers, there being 291,013 steerage passengers, most of the latter being destined for Western States. During the year 1,181 pauper immigrants were returned to the countries whence they came.

The iron steamer Algoma, belonging to the Canadian Pacific Road, struck a reef off Port Arthur, Lake Superior, in a dense fog, and went down. The loss of life is reported at thirty-seven. The crew of thirteen and two passengers were saved.

According to the figures of the New York Produce Exchange the visible supply of wheat and corn is as follows: Wheat, 46,797,635 bushels; corn, 5,436,926 bushels.

The nineteenth annual session of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, was opened at Boston in the sixth degree. All the officers were present except D. Wyatt Aiken, of South Carolina, who was confined at home by illness. The Committee on Credentials reported that twenty-nine States were clear upon the Treasurer's books and entitled to representation. Worthy Master Woodman's annual address and the yearly report of the Executive Committee showed the order to be in a prosperous and healthy financial condition. Over 150 dormant Granges were revived during the year. "Not unfrequently," says the report, "the Executive Committee is appealed to by individuals for protection from 'mutual aid associations,' or other similar corporations, with which they have no connection. The committee suggests that the National Grange publish a deliverance upon this subject, renouncing its responsibility for any association of whatever character, unless such as may be found recognized by the constitution and by-laws."

The mortality by small-pox is gradu-ally declining at Montreal. The abatement is attributed to the vaccination and isolation vigorously carried out.

FOREIGN.

Church disestablishment has for a time superseded all questions of importance in British politics, and it is reported that of the thousand and more Liberal candidates for Parliament, 480 are pledged to favor disestablishment. An address signed by 1,470 dissenting Scotch ministers has been prepared, and will be sent to Mr. Gladstone. The signers declare that they look to him to overthrow the state church.

King Theebaw has informed the British Government that he must consult Germany and France before giving up control of his foreign relations. Four regiments of the British expedition have started up the Irrawaddy on armed steamers.

In the Central Criminal Court at London, a verdict of guilty of indecent assault on Eliza Armstrong was rendered against Messrs. Stead and Jacques, of the Pall Mall Gazette, Mrs. Jarrett, and Madame Louise Mourey. The latter was sentenced to six months at hard labor, Stead to three months' imprisonment, Jacques to one month, and Mrs. Jarrett to six months. The charges against Bramwell Booth were withdrawn.

Disturbances continue in Ireland. At Limerick the soldiers, exasperated by the treatment of citizens, broke from their barracks and drove all the people from the neighborhood. While Michael Nugent was proceeding to Ballymahon Union to record his vote, contrary to the wishes of the Nationalists, he was badly beaten; and Roger O'Brien, a prominent member of the National League, has been shot at Athlone.

The Balkan conference has decided that the autonomy of Bulgaria and Roumelia must be respected. With the approval of the great powers, the throne of Bulgaria will be offered to Prince Henry of Battenburg, who recently wedded a daughter of Queen Victoria.

The depression in the shipbuilding trade on the Clyde is increasing.

A Madrid dispatch states that Ger-many objects to the Pope's decision concerning Spanish sovereignty over the Caroline Islands.

The Indian Government has formally declared war against Burmah, with the sanction of Queen Victoria, and sent forward an invading army of 15,000 men.

The Servian and Bulgarian troops continue to indulge in desultory conflicts along the frontier.

Mr. Gladstone, in a speech at Edin-burgh, expressed his ignorance of an attempt to make church disestablishment a test question. He thought it impossible for Parliament to deal satisfactorily with the Irish issue except through a party sufficiently powerful to ignore the Irish vote. Descending to personalities, he denied that he felled trees on Sundays or owned land in Russia.

LATER NEWS IETMS.

A National Convention of Free-Traders and Revenue Reformers was in session at Chicago last week. Among the more prominent delegates were the Hon. J. Q. Smith, Ohio; Gen. M. M. Trumbull, Illinois; the Hon. J. Sterling Morton, Nebraska; J. B. Peabody, New York; Henry J. Philpot, Iowa; the Hon. Benjamin Reece, Ohio; Charles S. Cameron, Chicago; the Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Green, Chicago; F. W. Blakie, Chicago; Hon. Frank Hurd, Ohio. Gen. Stiles made the welcoming address, saying that the delegates did not come as President-makers, with brass bands, but simply as earnest men to see what could be done toward tariff reform. Henry J. Philpot, of Iowa, Western Secretary of the league, in an address reviewed the progress of the movement in the West. The convention displayed great enthusiasm over the declaration by Secretary Bowker that the American public anxiously awaits the birth of a great third party to assume control of the Government. The conference chose David A. Wells President, and R. R. Bowker Secretary. The resolutions adopted declare that, under no pretense shall any countenance be given to attempts to increase protective duties, and that articles at the foundation of great industries should be freed from duty. Free ships are demanded, and the abolition of restrictive navigation laws. The conference also declared that no further reduction in the whisky and tobacco taxes should be countenanced until the existing tariff has been brought to a strictly revenue basis. Two mass meetings held in Central Music Hall were well attended, and were addressed by Henry Ward Beecher, Frank Hurd, and other prominent revenue reformers.

The President has made the follow-ing appointments: George W. Glick, Pension Agent at Topeka, Kan.; Erasmus Redman, Collector of Customs for the district of Frenchman Bay, Me.; Frederick F. Manstield, of Texas, to be Secretary of Legation at Japan; James Burns to be Surveyor of Customs for the port of Kansas City; Oscar Valeton to be Assistant Appraiser of Merchandise in the district of New Orleans. The President has also made the following appointments in the navy: John I. Hunker, Lieutenant Commander; Milton E. Schwenk, Lieutenant; William H. Schuetz, Lieutenant; Waldemar H. Rase, Lieutenant junior grade.

A man who has been playing the hemorrhage game along the roadways in the vicinity of Boston by means of a bladder of reddish liquid held in his mouth was thrown into jail at Waltham, after realizing considerable money.

In the cellar of a house at York, Pa., the remains of Mrs. Rosina Berg were exhumed by the Coroner, and about the neck of the skeleton were found a twisted rope and handkerchief. About a year ago she kept house for three men, but upon her disappearance the parties reported that she had gone to Germany. She possessed $1,500, and it is presumed was murdered for the money.

At Rockfield, Wis., the 4-year-old child of a miner threw a dynamite cartridge into the kitchen stove. The explosion killed the child and fatally injured its mother.

A convention of raring representa-tives at St. Louis organized the American Turf Congress, Mr. J. F. Robinson being elected President, and B. G. Bruce Secretary-Treasurer. Important changes were made in the rules, but the dates for next year's meetings were not fixed, as satisfactory arrangements could not be reached.

GONE TO THE BOTTOM.

The Canadian Steamer Algoma Wrecked on Isle Royal, with Little Warning.

Thirty-seven Lives Reported Lost, Meeting Death Under Lake Superior's Waves.

A terrible marine disaster, resulting in the loss of thirty-seven human lives, occurred near Port Arthur, on Lake Superior, on the night of the 8th inst., the particulars of which are embraced in the following telegraphic reports from the scene of the calamity: The Algoma, one of the iron-clad transfer steamers of the Canadian Pacific, left Owen Sound, Ontario, last Thursday. While rounding Isle Royale the steamer Athabasca sighted the fragments of a wreck on the treacherous reef. A rescuing boat was manned, and, after considerable difficulty, made the shore, rescuing the crew—thirteen men—and two passengers of the ill-fated Algoma. They reported that thirty-seven passengers had perished in the wreck. The survivors could not have endured the hardships of exposure and hunger much longer. When they were landed at Port Huron by the Athabasca late this evening many of them were dangerously prostrated.

Port Arthur is on the extreme northern coast of Lake Superior and distant from here nearly 500 miles. The scene of the wreck is southwest from Port Arthur thirty miles or more. All the facts known here are gathered from personal dispatches announcing the loss of relatives or friends, and from two telegrams to the Canadian Pacific officials, briefly outlining the manner of the catastrophe. It appears that a heavy storm prevailed on the lake Sunday night, one of its features being a dense fog. Shortly after the Algoma rounded into the straits which Isle Royale skirts she crashed into a concealed reef, and a few moments later the boat was shivered asunder. It collapsed so quickly that many of the victims perished in their cabins, where they had taken refuge from the inclement weather. Others, who reached the deck, were given no assistance, and clung to the rigging in despair until ingulfed or swept away. The crew, frenzied by the disaster, thought only of saving themselves. With a quick rush for the nearest boat, they flocked in and swung it from the davits before the passengers could follow. Two, however, contrived to crowd in, leaving the abandoned ones, among them several women and children, helpless and hopeless on the deck of the doomed steamer. The boat was capsized several times by the waves, but was righted again. The survivors succeeded in reaching land, almost dead from exposure and exhaustion.

The scene of excitement is terrible. It is impossible to get any well-defined or completely connected story of the terrible disaster which has brought gloom to hundreds of Canadian households. Mate Simpson and W. B. McArthur, one of the passengers who survived, were interviewed, and a story obtained of which the following is a fair synopsis:

The steamer left Owen Sound last Thursday afternoon with thirty-eight passengers, chiefly Canadians, but there were some few Americans. All went well during the early part of the voyage, and the vessel passed up St. Mary's River and Sault Ste. Marie, where she coaled. It was Friday about noon when she passed the latter place, and soon after steamed out into Lake Superior. The weather was calm, but as evening advanced signs of a storm were brewing. When spoken to by passengers Capt. Moore shook his head ominously, and all realized that a storm of unusual severity was blowing.

All trusted in the stout steel craft, which was deemed of equal strength to the average seagoing vessel. Evening closed in, and the Algoma held her course toward Port Arthur, while the storm increased in fury and caused the great waves to pound the vessel, which was tossed about like a feather. The timbers were heard to creak, but little danger was apprehended on the score of unsoundness. As night wore on the storm seemed, if possible, to increase in violence. Snow and sleet descended, and the elements appeared in their mariest mood. Some retired to their berths, but the majority, who were suffering from nausea, kept watch. At the time when day should under ordinary circumstances have broken, darkness continued, for the snow-storm had not abated and the air was terribly dense. The steamer still held on her way, and as fair progress had been made notwithstanding the severity of the storm, it was thought that the Isle Royale, which is located a short distance outside of Thunder Bay, and about forty-five miles from Port Arthur, must be near at hand. The island is long, but comparatively a narrow, rocky one, and its vicinity is treacherous, owing to the large number of bowlders which exist about it. The channel by which the bay is entered, runs close to the island, and Capt. Moore realized the necessity of progressing with the utmost care. Fog-horns were blowed and signals of distress sounded. The speed of the boat was reduced, but as the storm continued to rage, it was impossible to determine absolutely what course the boat was pursuing. Suddenly a great crash was heard, and the vessel rebounded and quivered like an aspen leaf.

"Good God!" said the Captain, "she's struck. Our doom has come!"

Ten seconds later all was the wildest confusion and alarm. Those who were on deck reared their alarm, while the shrieks of the milder sex were terrible. Crash, crash, and the stout vessel pounded the rocks. The crackling of the timbers and the swaying of the vessel warned all that death in a terrible form was upon them. The relentless wind seemed to scream its satisfaction, while the snow and sleet drove against the half-clad passengers.

"It's no use to describe the scene," said one informant. "Nothing worse ever occurred on earth. In their madness, when the waves were washing the deck, a number threw themselves into the foaming billows. Others, when a great wave would pass over the deck, which was swaying from side to side, were swept into the sea like feathers. A few hung on to ropes or to the masts, but the majority seemed to abandon themselves in the wild alarm and despair.

"Even the crew seemed powerless, so stricken were they with the awful suddenness and stupendous character of the disaster. Meanwhile the boat rapidly went to pieces, dashed against the rocks. The crew, all of whom except the waitresses, had clung to the rigging, managed, during a slight lull in the storm, to place themselves in a life-boat, cut the fastenings, and in an instant a wave swept them from the ill-fated wreck. Amid the awful cries of the dying and the terrible dashing of the waves the boat was borne onward. Two of the passengers had managed to place themselves in the boat before it was cut away from the wreck. Any efforts that had been made to launch boats during the early confusion and horror had failed. Meantime the life-boat and its occupants had a terrible experience on the open, storm-tossed lake. All who could bound themselves to the boat, while the remainder held on like grim death to the sides. Expecting every moment to meet their death either by drowning or from exposure or cold, which was intense, the half-dead inmates were borne on. Once the boat was turned over with the waves, and one of the crew washed away, but the frail craft righted itself and was swept on in the comparative darkness.

"After half an hour the boat suddenly struck some rocks. The inmates feared all was over with them, as the craft capsized, but, to their surprise, when thrown out, the water was only a foot deep, and they discovered that they were on land. After remaining there an hour or more, exposed to the elements, the storm abated, and the sky cleared.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Views of a Large Number of Members on Important Questions.

The Louisville Courier-Journal recently published letters from 150 members of Congress, 59 Democrats and 91 Republicans. The letters are in response to four questions sent out by the Washington correspondent of the Courier-Journal, as follows:

1. Would you favor an amendment to the rules of the House providing that the general appropriation bills, except the legislative, sundry civil, and deficiency bills, shall be prepared and controlled hereafter by the appropriate standing committees on the several branches of the public service?

2. Do you favor any change in the laws governing silver coinage and silver certificates, and if so, what modification would you regard as desirable?

3. To what extent, in your opinion, would a revision of the tariff and internal revenue laws be desirable at the next session?

4. Who is your choice for the caucus nomination for Speaker?

In the Democratic responses, forty-seven are unqualifiedly in favor of an amendment of the rules, five give a qualified answer, four oppose a change, and three are non-committal.

As to the second, or silver question, four favor legislation, forty-nine oppose, and six are non-committal.

As to the third or tariff-reform question, fifty-three favor tariff agitation, three oppose and three are non-committal.

For Speaker fifty-seven are for Carlisle, one for Randall, and one non-committal.

The whole number of Republican members who responded is ninety-one. For amending the rules of the House, forty-eight unqualifiedly approve, twelve qualify their answers, nine oppose, and twenty-two are non-committal.

Sixty favor legislation on the silver question, sixteen oppose, and fifteen are non-committal.

Seventy-five oppose tariff legislation, four favor it, and twelve are non-committal.

For Speaker, thirty are for Frank Hiscock, twenty-three are for Reed of Maine, eleven for Gov. Long of Massachusetts, and thirty-seven are non-committal.

The correspondent of the Courier-Journal, in summing up on officers of the House, names for Speaker John G. Carlisle; Clerk, John B. Clark, Missouri; Sergeant-at-Arms, John B. Leedom, Ohio; Doorkeeper, Samuel Donelson, Tennessee; Postmaster, Lycurgus Dalton, Indiana.

Michigan Congressmen on the Silver Problem.

Senator Palmer, of Michigan, who went to Chicago to attend the Fat Stock Show, said to a Tribune interviewer that he should favor the suspension of the silver coinage in the coming session of Congress. He believed the silver dollar should contain 100 cents' worth of silver, and not eighty-five. As to the legislation subsequent to the suspension of the coinage, he said he had made up his mind as to what he should favor. He did not believe under any recommendation that the President might make in his annual message that the silver question would become a party issue.

The Senator's views were nearly identical with those of the Democrat who represents Detroit in the lower house—Congressman Maybury. The latter said, in an interview, he was opposed to the continued coinage of the dollar as it is, and, while not a single-standard man, he nevertheless believed that they should be nearer together than at present. As to the views of the remainder of the Michigan delegation on the silver question, Mr. Maybury said he had talked with none of the members about it, but was inclined to the opinion that quite a number agreed with him.

IT WAS ONLY BLACK SAND.

Thrilling Experience of a Captain on the Erie Canal.

A New England skipper, a shipping clerk, and the captain of a canal-boat sat on the lee rail of a codfish schooner and discussed the decline of the American merchant marine. The clerk was wise in fine points of law, the skipper was filled to overflowing with wrath against the land-sharks at Washington, and the captain assented with cheerful readiness to the most conflicting of opinions. The clerk wanted to reform Congress by Congressional legislation, the skipper was on the point of blowing up the Capitol with dynamite, and the captain coincided with both opinions by remarking that either remedy, if successfully carried into effect, would produce astonishing results. Still, he ventured to suggest, it would be a measure of precaution to use gunpowder instead of dynamite, as gunpowder in even the shotgun of the South was more deadly than all the dynamite in the British isles.

"But it is so dangerous to handle," said the skipper.

"How so?" inquired the clerk, who had handled uncounted tons of explosives.

"You never can tell it from black sand."

There was silence for several minutes. Then the captain spoke.

"Is black sand particularly dangerous?" he asked.

"Mighty dangerous."

"How so?" asked the clerk, with a tinge of humiliation for his ignorance.

"When you're down on the Chinese coast, and you load up your guns with black sand in mistake for powder to repel an attack by pirates, you're always sure to be murdered, because the black sand will not go off."

"Won't it?" asked the captain, in a tone that implied that it would.

"I never heard," said the skipper. The clerk was dumb with newly found ignorance.

"You see that scar," said the captain, pointing to a red ridge across his cheek.

"Well, give us the story," urged the skipper.

"It was years ago," began the captain; "I was running a fast packet line on the Erie Canal, from Albany to Buffalo. I had a beautiful boat and four fast horses every few miles. We carried the mail, and always had a big load of passengers. One trip we took on board a lot of small barrels labeled 'black sand.' One of the barrels was accidentally broken, the cover lost, and a quart or so of the 'black sand' scattered about the hold. The barrel was set out of the way near the wine cask, and apparently was forgotten. At dinner time some more wine was wanted by some of the passengers, and I went down to draw it from the cask. As the hold was dark I took a broken piece of candle for a light. Scarcely knowing what I did, I stuck the candle upright in the 'black sand,' and sat down on the floor to draw the wine. I had been up all night and was very tired, and somehow or other I fell asleep. I must have shut off the faucet while asleep, for when I awoke the wine pitcher was filled and the faucet closed. As I reached out my hand to take up the candle I saw a sight that froze my blood with horror. While I had slept the candle had burned low and was on the point of flickering out. In another instant the flame would reach the powder—for of course it was powder, and not black sand—and blow boat, crew, and passengers to atoms. I died a thousand deaths in an instant. I was paralyzed with fear, and could only wait with staring eyes for the end. Death was already at my throat. The sound of laughter in the cabin came strangely to my ears. They were feasting in the face of a terrible death. At last the end came; the light flickered for a moment, flared up for the last time, and then——"

"And then!" whispered the skipper and the clerk with breathless interest.

"And then went out. As it was nothing but black sand for molders' use, nothing occurred beyond the upsetting of the pitcher of wine as I fell forward in a faint."

"But the scar?" asked the clerk.

"Kicked by a mule; usual way with canal men."—New York Times.

Improving on an Author.

Wilkie Collins had reserved all rights to his novel, "Man and Wife," but unfortunately he dramatized his own work. An infringement speedily took place. Wilkie Collins sued. The spoiler defended himself, and set up in his defense that his adaptation was better than that of Mr. Collins. He had improved upon the denouement, he claimed. The Judge agreed with him, and gave verdict for the defendant.

"But," expostulated the novelist, "I expressly 'reserved all rights.'"

"That is not disputed," replied the Judge grimly.

"Then what is the use of my reserving any rights?"

"I don't know," said the Judge, quietly. "You have written an excellent novel. You signified your intention to dramatize it. The presumption was that the public would benefit most by your dramatizing it. That presumption has been rebutted," continued his Honor, growing more stern. "Your machine has been improved upon!"—Ingleside.

THE INDIAN PROBLEM.

Friends of the Untutored Savage Lay His Grievances Before the Great Father.

The President and Secretary Lamar Outline the Indian Policy of the Administration.

The members of the committee appointed at the Lake Mohonk Conference to call on the President and the Secretary of the Interior were very much pleased by their reception by both functionaries, though neither unreservedly assented to all that the committee asked, and the Secretary differed radically from the committee in certain important particulars. Gen. Clinton B. Fisk headed the delegation, and presented the members to the President. Hon. Erastus Brooks, of New York, read an address embodying the views of the conference as to the best methods of improving the condition of the Indians. He reminded the President of his remarks on this subject in his inaugural, in which he said the Indians should be "fairly and honestly treated as wards of the Government, and their education and civilization promoted with a view to their ultimate citizenship." He also recalled the words of Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson in her death-bed letter to the President, to wit: "I am dying happier for the belief that it is your hand that is destined to strike the first steady blow toward righting the wrongs of the Indian race." The questions, Mr. Brooks said, which seemed to them to demand most immediate attention are those relating to land and education, homes and families.

What is now needed in regard to lands, he said, is severalty and individuality, with the protection of law for persons and families. This would result in settlements, in homes, and in land cultivation, and in that way make the Indian a self-supporting citizen, endowed with all the rights, privileges and duties of citizenship. The proof of the ability of the Indian to work profitably for himself and for the Government is found, said he, in the fact that those who are the most civilized now have under cultivation more than 250,000 acres of land, upon which in a year was raised 1,000,000 bushels of corn, 1,000,000 bushels of wheat, and nearly 1,000,000 bushels of oats and barley, besides 103,000 head of cattle, 1,000,000 sheep, 235,000 horses and mules, and 68,000 swine. These figures, he said, do not include the products of 60,000 civilized Indians, ready for Territorial government.

The speaker dwelt eloquently upon the evil effects of the lack of laws to protect the Indians, and said they needed just what the white man has—the force of law in their behalf and the freedom of the ballot. To secure these ends, it was urged that the tribal relations and reservations be abolished, and the diffusion as speedily as possible of the Indian in the United States encouraged, so that he may secure, by association with his white brethren, pure civilization and full citizenship.

Remarks were also made by Rev. Lyman Abbott, Mr. M. E. Gates and Gen. Fisk, each of whom advocated the abolition of the present system of Indian reservations, and favored the adoption of a policy in regard to them similar to that so successfully employed in the case of the colored population.

The President listened attentively to the speakers, and assured them of his deep interest in the Indian question. He reviewed briefly the many difficulties encountered in dealing with the question, which he acknowledged was a very important one, and said the great trouble to his mind was as to the first practical steps to be taken in improving the condition of the Indian. Shall we give them more schools and churches, and agricultural implements for use on their reservations, or shall we deed them lands in severalty and leave them to their own resource? One trouble he found was to get rid of the influences of the old chiefs. Then, again, if we leave them to themselves, and one gets hungry, a loud cry goes up that they are starving. How are we to get the Indians to mingle with the whites? We certainly cannot drive them off their reservations. Is it better to keep them under tutelage where they are, or could their civilization be better accomplished in some other way? "The question is surrounded with difficulties," continued the President, "and the most important consideration to my mind at present is, 'What is the most useful thing to be done?'" He said that while it might not be well for the cause to disturb the Indians in their present homes, he said that their reservations would ultimately be given to them in severalty, and the Indians thrown on their resources.

The President reminded the committee that the cause which they advocated would require years to consummate, but intimated that he hoped to be able to make a beginning in the right direction during the remaining years of his administration.

The committee after leaving the White House proceeded to the Interior Department, where they had a long interview with Secretary Lamar, and through their chairman presented him a written statement of the view of the conference. In reply to a brief address by General Fisk, Secretary Lamar said he would, in his forthcoming annual report, acknowledge his obligation to the philanthropic and benevolent associations and individuals in the work he had to carry on. The ultimate object was the civilization of the Indian. A crisis had been reached in the history of that race that must be met by some methods different from those heretofore pursued. His own knowledge of the Indian's wants was as yet too limited to permit him to formulate a general policy adapted to the present and the exigencies of the future. The process must be one of improving the Indian out of his present condition into civilization, and it would be a gradual process. The first point should be to secure their reservations to them either as now located or compressed into smaller spaces in fee simple so that their title shall be inviolable. At the same time he did not advocate the division of the entire reservation among the Indians, and believed the abandonment of the reservation system at this time would be premature. It was the end to be sought, but the first step would be, after bringing the Indians, with their consent, into limits proportionate with their numbers, to protect them from the destructive influences of the stronger civilization surrounding them. Whites should be rigorously excluded, and when the reservations had been partially subdivided a considerable portion ought to be left undivided and undistributed. In the transition state the tribal system must be adhered to.

VIEWS ON THE ELECTION.

How the Situation Is Regarded at Washington—The Administration Pleased with the Outlook.

Views of Vice President Hendricks and Ex-Senator McDonald — Comments of the Press.

Washington Views.

Washington special.

The President very justly believes that the success of his own party in his own State is an expression of confidence in him, and an approval of his course. It shows that his party will come out and vote, whether on account of or in spite of his course is a matter of secondary consideration. The result in New York gives the President a standing with the Democratic party in the country that he could not have had without it. He received news of the probable result on the train coming from Buffalo, and manifested great pleasure. Upon reaching the White House the good news was confirmed, and the size of the victory was made more apparent, and the President's satisfaction was complete. He at once telegraphed his congratulations to Gov. Hill.

Col. Lamont says that in proportion to the size of the State fewer removals were made in New York than in almost any other State. It is certain that the Presidential patronage was not used to any extent to help the party in New York, because many of the local bosses were complaining of the fact during the campaign. The President, the Governor, and the two New York members of the Cabinet were entirely agreed that the Democratic party in New York would be best served if the Federal administration kept its hands off. The overwhelming Republican defeat three years ago was the result of indignation at an attempt, or a supposed attempt, by the national administration to manage New York politics. Tuesday's election showed that the Democratic party can carry New York State without the employment of Federal patronage, and this success of a party which possessed the power but would not use Federal patronage is a distinct and a very important gain for civil-service reform. Had the Democratic party lost New York it is certain that every Republican and every Democratic opponent of civil-service reform would have accepted the result as a demonstration of the purely Utopian character of the reform.

Judge McCue, Solicitor of the Treasury, said to-day: "We owe it to that man," pointing to the White House. "It was because the people had confidence in him that they voted for Hill. They knew he would not have supported Hill if he had not wanted him elected. They knew he was earnest in that. He demonstrated it by going several hundred miles to vote for him. The victory is an indorsement of the administration."

Second Comptroller Maynard says the victory in New York is not a surprise to him. It is a mistake, he thinks, to say that it is a "straight Democratic victory," inasmuch as New York is such a close State that there can not be a straight victory for either party. There is an independent vote of about 75,000, composed of members of both parties, which can decide the result. While the so-called mugwump papers opposed Hill, the majority of the independents and Republicans who voted for Cleveland supported Hill, and the Democrats got the support of the labor vote. It was shown by the vote outside of New York that Mr. Hill got the same support that was given to Tilden.

Representative Frank Hurd says it is a splendid victory, and highly gratifying, but he declines to express an opinion as to whether or not the victory was an indorsement of the administration.

Ex-Representative Casey Young said the victory would strengthen the Democratic party. The only effect it could have upon the administration would be to strengthen it in its present policy, to which the victory would be considered to be due.

Assistant Secretary Fairchild thinks the victory in New York is due to the policy followed by the President, and it is an indorsement of the administration.

The President, Mr. Manning, Mr. Whitney, and Gov. Hill were in perfect accord as to the President's policy concerning appointments in New York. He thinks any attempt to use the victory as an indorsement of any other policy, and to make the President act differently with regard to appointments, will fail.

Congressman Morrison, of Illinois, said: "I think that the result shows conclusively that the country is Democratic by a safe majority. That is as good a reason as I can give for the result."

Gov. Hill Speaks His Mind.

Elmira (N. Y.) special.

Gov. Hill was serenaded by the Elmira Club. In response to calls he delivered an address, in which he thanked his neighbors for having assisted in vindicating him from the charges which had been brought against him during the campaign, congratulated the party upon the fact that New York is a Democratic State, and said that the result showed that the independent Republicans had left their party and become permanently identified with the Democratic party.

Mahone Overthrown.

Not only is the Democratic candidate for Governor in Virginia elected, but the Legislature has been captured from the Republicans, and Mahone's doom is sealed. Since Conkling's defeat in New York this is the most signal overthrow of a political Republican "boss" that has occurred in this country. Nowhere in the United States was either party so completely owned and ruled as the Republican party of Virginia has been ruled and dominated by Mahone. The very worst elements in human nature—greed and ignorance—have been the means and instruments of his elevation. He had behind him a solid, compact mass of voters who could neither read nor write. He appealed to the dishonesty and avarice of the people by advocating a systematized scheme of repudiation and fraud. Northern Republicans have stood by him, and with their money and influence fused this mass of ignorance into an organization. To shatter it, to break him down, to make his dishonesty of no avail, is one of the great triumphs of this triumphant hour.—Detroit Free Press.

Toward noon the chairs were discovered scattered over the country, about a mile from the college, in barns or hidden beneath bushes. It took a large wagon and three men all the next day to undo the work that a few energetic students had done in less three hours.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

The republican managers in New York are taking their lessons to heart. Last year they swore off on Belshazzar's feasts and preachers, and this year they hope to die if they ever import another Ohio bloody shirter.—Chicago Herald.

We are glad to learn from our exchanges that the high-toned sportsmen who come up into northern Michigan to hunt deer with dogs are going back without them. These lily fingered gentry are the men whose hired lobbyists defeated the game bill in the senate last winter, and every dog they bring ought to be shot on sight.—Independent.

A sickening suspicion is slowly percolating through republican minds that this American people is growing weary of the bloody shirt, and that as a political issue the sanguineous undergarment has outlived its usefulness. But what will the poor things do? Think of the immense amount of "posting up" that will have to be done if the republicans are forced to adopt a real live issue! It takes a long time to read up twenty years of American history.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Chief justice A. B. Morse has just rendered a supreme court decision that is sound morally and legally. A Detroiter was convicted of keeping his saloon open on Sunday, and appealed. Justice Morse affirms the decision, on the ground that a saloon is "open" if any one is in there, no matter whether they entered before or after closing time, whether front or back doors were locked or unlocked, or whether any liquors were sold or not. Hereafter, there will be less appealing on this question.—Big Rapids Herald.

Why He Will Not Accept.

The Detroit Tribune of last Sunday contained the announcement that Gov. Alger was sick and tired of politics, and would under no circumstances accept a renomination. The reason assigned for the governor's decision is the pressure of private business and a distaste for the onerous duties of political life. This statement, coming as it does from the republican state organ, is probably made by authority.

But while accepting in good faith Gov. Alger's declination to run again, we must look elsewhere than in the Tribune for the reasons which impel him to this course. The fact is that a realization of his own unpopularity with the masses has at last dawned upon him—a condition of things which was apparent to observing men of all parties months ago. It is not strange, therefore, that he should wish to retire from office at the close of his first term rather than accept the barren honor of a renomination.

Alger's course ever since his inauguration has been that of a blundering egotist. Every one remembers the unseemly haste with which he applied himself to the work of removing state officials who had been appointed by his predecessor, in a number of instances filling the offices thus made vacant with men of notoriously bad character and known unfitness for positions of trust. His appointment of John H. Brakeman, of Muskegon, as swamp land commissioner is a case in point. The removal of Miss Parker the capable assistant state librarian, is another instance of his haste to reward personal favorites at the expense of tried public servants. His action in the recent strikes and his mean evasion of the ten-hour labor law are other causes which have combined to bring odium upon the present chief executive.

It is no wonder, then, that Gov. Alger feels indisposed to enter another state canvass. His candidacy would be a losing one from the start. —Lansing Journal.

Improvement in Trade.

The improvement in many important branches of industry which set in some months ago continues to make satisfactory progress. There is a decidedly hopeful feeling in financial and commercial circles. Business men had become so accustomed to depression year after year that it was naturally feared there would be a disposition to force the activity when a change came for the better. Thus far these views have not been sustained, and there is a slow, healthy recuperation going on which is gratifying to the conservative classes. It is obvious that the country could not at once absorb the goods manufactured if all the mills were run to there full capacity and that over-production could only end in another disaster. It is desirable that production should for a time at least be kept within moderate limits. When the demand which is created by returning confidence assumes larger proportions it will be time for manufacturers to think of further increasing their output.

Steel rails are quoted at $31.50 to $32 per ton, an advance of several dollars within a comparatively short time. The coal trade has also improved and the railroads are enjoying a larger traffic, as has recently been evidenced by the returns of many leading railroads of the west and south. The increased earnings show that the movement of merchandise is calling into use a larger amount of rolling stock, and the orders for additional cars placed within the last month or two have been unusually numerous, indicating that railway officials look upon the revival of business as permanent. All this is giving employment to labor and is adding to the internal trade of the country.—N. Y. World.

The New Northern Insane Asylum.

About two-thirds of the new northern insane asylum at Traverse City will be ready for occupancy by December 1. The first patients the asylum will receive will be removed to it from the institutions at Pontiac and Kalamazoo. The contracts for furnishing supplies were all let some months ago, and bills aggregating over $93,000 were audited and paid at the last monthly meeting of the board. The steam fixtures are not yet complete, but the pipes are now being put in by a Chicago firm. The furniture is arriving from the factories by the carload every day and being rapidly put in place.

Chicago Newspaper Union: It is the live, intelligent local paper that stays in the race. It is seldom that an editor is found packing his trunk and moving away who has thoroughly filled the measure of a Journal of local information. We admit there are localities so nigh unto death that nothing in mortal hand can fetch forth life and activity—also that there are others in which the faithful chronicler must toil long for his reward; but a good local paper, steadily pushed at the public week after week, seldom fails to come out safely, and to conquer a place for itself among the valuable business properties of the town in which it is published.

Bartholdi, the sculptor, has given the following statement of the exact dimensions of the Statue of Liberty: "From bottom of plinth to the top of torch, 151.14 feet; heighth of bottom foundation of pedestal above low-water mark, 13 feet; height of foundation mass, 52.10 feet; height of pedestal proper, 89 feet; total height of top of torch above mean low-water mark 305.12 feet." He emphatically denies the story that the statue was originally intended for Egypt.

It is said that John Wesley was once walking with a brother, who related to him his troubles, saying he did not know what he should do. They were at that moment passing a stone fence to a meadow over which a cow was looking. "Do you know," said Wesley, "why the cow looks over the wall?" "No," replied the one in trouble. "I will tell you," said Wesley, "because she can not look through it; and that is what you must do with your troubles; look over and above them."

"Mr. Seymour has a charming home at Deerfield," says L. B. Proctor; "plain house, but ample and admirably arranged, and filled with curious historical furniture. His favorite chair once belonged to Daniel Webster—it came from Marshfield. He looks out of a window that came from Faneuil hall, and his grate fire burns within a fireplace of tiles and brick and stone that was once in the house of John Jay at Albany. Mr. Seymour says that, winter evenings, as he sits dreaming at his old fireplace, he sometimes can almost imagine that Jay and other great men of the early days of New York's history are present."

Should we by examination find that we have been deceived, let us turn over a new leaf.

Some say, speaking of this mighty foe, "it is a necessary evil," while it is morally wrong.

Hard times would come and property would depreciate in value if we were to do away with the saloons." Such were the statements, made on our streets on the day of our village election.

A business indispensable, that dethrones reason, that destroys the noble faculties, and all along the tide of time, scatters wrecked and ruined characters; A business indispensable, that breads strife and tumult and furnishes victims for the almshouses, prisons and scaffolds.

Look at it in the line of dollars and cents. Here Mr. VanAuken gave the figures, enormous in number. The waste in drink, and expenses to the county and state, aggregates the enormous amount of one billion, six hundred and fifty million dollars annually.

The young men and boys should take timely warning from the example of the boy in Ohio, who, while standing on the scaffold, and the rope ready to be placed around his neck, said; "Let me implore you with my dying breath, to close the saloons. Close them for the protection of your boys."

When the boys of our own town, are seen upon the streets intoxicated, do not the words of the text come to us in tones of thunder, "Be not deceived."

I ask in the language of the great teacher, "What shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

We are often confronted with this saying: "We need the revenue." Be not deceived, the wise man has truly said: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the ends thereof are the ways of death."

There are some who profess to believe that the growth and thrift of our town depends upon the saloons. O, deluded souls. Whoever heard of a man refusing to buy property in a town because there were no saloons there?

When men write articles of recommendation and speak in the most glowing terms of the great advantages of a place of business and enterprise, do they hold up before the public the saloons, how much whiskey is drank per day, how many ragged children are made by rum? No! No! They speak of the good society, churches, the schools, the activity and go-aheadativeness, and enterprise, of the citizens.

The speaker asked; "Did any of you ever see in the advertisements put out by real-estate agents, "free whiskey," or "plenty of licensed saloons," also "drug stores where the educated and genteel (?) can get their drinks, as a preparatory step, for the degraded places of vice and filth?" Mention is often made of good water, but never of good whiskey. The argument that a village or city needs the revenue of saloons to beautify the streets, pave the walks for ladies and gentlemen to promenade, is an outrage on reason. You may give your children the best education and training, and yet they are exposed to the alluring serpent of strong drink. While you license the saloons, they are not safe. Permit me to read to you a short notice written by C. C. Otis. He says: "I have in my possession a letter from a mother back in one of the eastern states. She had heard of the death of her son out here, and wanted to know something of his last moments. He was the child of daily prayers. I am anxious to know that I may have a well grounded hope of meeting him in a better land. Poor mother, I can give her no consolation, for her son died in a drunken fit in a brothel, and was buried without a prayer, song, or word at the grave, and with no one to shed a tear. Such was the sad end of a young man who had a praying mother, and was a member of a christian family. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked," for he says "No drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven."

A Spelling Contest.

Quite a lively tussel in orthography took place Friday evening at the Whitford School house, town of Hayes, between the young ladies and young gentlemen of that neighborhood and the scholars attending school. The champion speller got knocked out in the first round on the word hale. I suppose he thought it was Dakota hail, for that would knock any man out.

The small scholars acquited themselves grand, easily spelling down all outsiders.

Miss Alta Cramm, aged 13, carried off the honors by spelling the longest. Miss Addie Lewis, the teacher, is justly proud of her scholars.

A full upper or lower set best teeth for $8.50. Medium gold fillings $1.00. Amalgam or silver fillings 50 cts. All dental operations warranted first-class and satisfaction guaranteed.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA,—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

THE OLD MAN DREAMS.

BY O. W. HOLMES.

O for an hour of youthful joy!
Give back my twentieth spring!
I'd rather laugh a bright-haired boy
Than reign a gray-beard king.

Off with the spots of wrinkled age!
Away with learning's crown!
Tear out life's wisdom-written page,
And dash its trophies down.

One moment let my life bloom stream
From boyhood's fount of flame:
Give me one giddy, reeling dream
Of life, all love and fame.

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And calmly smiling, said:
"If I but touch thy silvered hair,
Thy hasty wish has sped.

"But is there nothing in thy track
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift seasons hurry back
To find the wished-for day?"

"Ah, truest soul of woman kind!
Without thee what were life?
One bliss I cannot leave behind:
I'll take—my—precious—wife!"

The angel took a sapphire pen
And wrote in rainbow dew:
The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband, too.

"And is there nothing yet unsaid
Before the change appears?
Remember all their gifts have fled
With those dissolving years."

"Why, yes," for memory would recall
My fond parental joys;
"I could not bear to leave them all—
I'll take my girls and boys."

The smiling angel dropped his pen.
"Why, this will never do;
The man would be a boy again
And be a father, too."

And so I laughed; my laughter woke
The household with its noise;
I wrote my dream when morning broke
To please the gray-haired boys.

MISS CHURCHILL'S SUITORS.

A Romance of Beechwood Chase.

CHAPTER I.

Beechwood Chase was well named. The house was nothing but roomy and comfortable—"a substantial stone mansion without architectural pretension," the county guide-book called it—but the trees around it were the wonder and delight of the neighborhood and the pride of Lord Darley's heart. They were nearly all beeches, those fairest of forest trees, beside which oaks are clumsy and elms are stiff. The great smooth boles reached to magnificent girth; the drooping branches, all broidered with half-ripened nuts that glowed like beads of amber in the sun, spread themselves far and wide, and made great stretches of shadow on the soft grass below. Here deer couched, and squirrels ran about the laden boughs rejoicing, and shy, timorous birds, that shunned the haunts of men, built their nests in peace. The park was large, with a slope to a little stream that ran noisily over its pebbles, and mingled its baby brawling with the rustle of the trees, and the cry of the wood-pigeon, and the song of linnet and thrush.

It was seldom that the solitude was broken by anything but the tread of a gamekeeper or wood-reeve, except in the shooting season, but this year Lady Darley had been recommended country air and quiet, and had brought with her a train of distinguished guests, at whose appearance in the park the squirrels hid themselves, and the rabbits disappeared in their holes, and the browsing deer lifted startled heads, and scudded away into sylvan retreats, where no stray feet would either follow or find them.

With Lady Darley had come, as a matter of course, her special friend, Delia Churchill, sole daughter and heiress of the late Sir John Churchill, banker and financier and reputed millionaire, and more young men than are prone to bury themselves in the country in June. "But where Miss Churchill is, there will the gallants be gathered together," said Coventry Smith, who wrote for society papers, and affected wit of a more or less degraded quality. Delia looked at him with the cold scorn her admirers knew so well.

"I don't think parodies like that are quite—reverent," she said, and then returned to the book from which her dark eyes had been for just a moment raised.

"Don't crush him quiet, Delia," said Lady Darley, languidly. But Mr. Smith did not look crushed. He smiled jauntily and kissed his hand as he disappeared through the open window.

"Crushed? A mangle wouldn't do it!" said Delia. "I do dislike that man, self-sufficient, conceited coxcomb that he is!"

"I wonder if you will ever see any one you will like, my dear! It will not be for want of aspirants."

"No," said Delia, bitterly, and there was so much pain in her voice that Lady Darley looked at her inquiringly. "Do you think I do not know why?" cried Delia, with sparkling eyes. They were quite alone now, and she got up and began to walk about with an excitement that would have astonished those who only knew the proud and reserved Miss Churchill in society. "Ah!" she cried, "you cannot understand it, Bella—you, who were poor, who were loved for yourself! Ah! how I loathe these creatures who fawn and flatter and cringe, like that abject thing that crawled away just now!"

"Delia, do you know, I think you are a little unjust, even to Coventry Smith?"

"Unjust! Very likely," said Miss Churchhill. "What chance have I of being just? How can men do themselves justice when they are seeking not love but gold?"

"It is not fair to class them all together," said Lady Darley, who had her favorites among the aspirants, as she called them. "There is young Horner, for instance. He does not care about your money; or, at least, no more than is reasonable."

"No; it is a good little boy, and has an honest fit of calf-love, I believe," said Delia, smiling with a gentleness that quite changed the expression of her face; "but, all the same, I am not the 'plum' he will pull out of life's pie."

"You may well say a plum—I begin to think your heart is nothing better than a stone," said Lady Darley, laughing.

"Here is Darley," said Miss Churchill, who was standing by the window.

"And Maurice Arnold with him! There is another man, Delia, that I am sure you must acquit of fortune-hunting. He couldn't pay you less attention if you were as poor as a church mouse."

"No," agreed Delia.

"I couldn't imagine what brought him down here, but it seems he has some old aunt who lives in the village."

"Oh!"

"So that must be it," said Lady Darley comfortably. "You know that little old lady who goes about with all those dogs?"

"Yes."

"Well, that is she—little Miss Macksey, you know. I believe she is getting a little childish, for she can't be less than eighty. She must be Mr. Arnold's great-aunt, I should think—shouldn't you?"

"Really, I don't think I should think about it," said Miss Churchill. She moved away from the window as she spoke, and the next moment the two men passed it and came into the room.

Lord Darley was short and dark and stout, and his companion was tall and slim and fair. Both were about thirty, but Mr. Arnold looked a little younger. He had a clever face, with a dash of sarcasm about the mouth, and gray eyes that expressed just as much or as little as their owner pleased. They were pleased to express very little just now. He did not see Miss Churchill, who had moved into the shadow of the curtain, and Lady Darley was not a favorite of his.

"I'll go and hunt up that book about the German mines, Darley," he observed. "It's somewhere in the library, I dare say."

"Well, if you must have it, I think you will find it on the third block on the right, bottom row," said Lord Darley; "but won't you come and make one at pool?"

"Not this morning, thanks."

He went away, and Darley burst into a laugh almost before the door had closed.

CHAPTER II.

"You'll never guess what we've been doing this morning," said Lord Darley, when Arnold had gone. "We've been to a dog's funeral—we have, upon my honor! You never saw such a sight in all your life. Miss Macksey has lost one of those pugs of hers, and she took it into her head to have it buried in the park. Of course I said she might, for she's as fond of the little brutes as if they were children."

"I know," said his wife; "and calls them by such ridiculous names. That big mastiff that walks behind her chair is Sir Galahad, and all the pugs and poodles are Sir This or Lady That. One is Lady Clara Vere de Vere, I know."

"Well, there they all were and every dog of 'em had got a bit of crape round his left fore-paw. I declare I could have laughed my head off, except that the poor little woman was in such a way. One of the keepers had dug a hole down in the copse by the brook, and Arnold put the poor little beggar in, as grave as a judge, and then he walked Miss Macksey off home, and all those ridiculous dogs trotted at our heels. I was in fits, but Arnold never as much as smiled. I dare say he knew better—the old lady's got a pretty bit of money, and can leave it as she likes."

"Lord Darley!" cried Delia, in a tone of trenchant scorn. She came forward from her shadowed corner, and the light fell on her face, and showed it curiously disturbed; her mouth trembled, her eyes flashed indignant fire.

"Eh? what's all this about?" cried the unconscious little peer, facing this angry apparition with innocent wonder. "Lord Darley, indeed! What next?"

"Darley," said Delia, more gently, "I think you ought to unsay that. There are plenty of men who would restrain their laughter or their tears, who would perjure themselves in any way you please for gold, but you know—you know!—that Maurice Arnold is not one."

Lord Darley did not answer, and something in his face made Dalia turn sharply round. One glance sufficed. In the doorway stood Maurice Arnold, looking almost as confused as herself. He had come back to ask something further about his book, and stood arrested at the sound of his own name.

"I—I beg your pardon," he stammered, but Delia fled through the window, scarlet and abashed, and Darley exclaimed, with a laugh:

"You didn't know you had such a doughty champion, did you? We shall have you proposing to the heiress next, old man!"

"I am much indebted to Miss Churchill," said Arnold stiffly; "but I think that would hardly be the way to justify her good opinion."

He went away with his question unasked, and indeed forgotten. The sight of Delia, flushed and moved in his defense, had been sweeter to him than he cared to own. Why, oh! why was she so rich, and he so poor, that to woo her would be to lose his self-respect? His only defense against the passion that had so often nearly mastered him, had been the assumption of indifference, that was all the easier because he believed her equally indifferent to himself. But indifference does not plead for the absent as Delia had pleaded for him, or fly shame-stricken at discovery as Delia had just fled. Could it be that she divined his unspoken love, and returned it? There was delirium in the thought, and visions of impossible happiness seemed to mock him as he dwelt upon it; but as the sweet summer days crept on the happiness began to seem less and less impossible. If he did not woo her, at least he did not avoid her, and the change in his manner thawed the coldness and reserve that had been, perhaps, as artificial as his own.

Delia was very happy in those bright June days that seem the natural setting for love's young dream. Each day was beautiful, for each day held the sunshine of Maurice Arnold's smile, the meeting that was all the world to two people, the parting that was only a tender postponement of joy. And yet no word was spoken.

"One daren't and the other's afraid," said Lord Darley to his wife; and in a sense that observation was true.

Delia could not speak, and so long as Arnold kept silence, pride constrained her to deny him even the faint intangible signs that are as words to women; and Maurice Arnold was a suitor who shrank from the faintest semblance of repulse. He must be sure, beyond the security of other men, this man who was going to bend his proud neck to well-dowered Delia's yoke. Could she not understand that she was as a princess, set aside from other women by the burden of her wealth, and that the first signs of favor must come from herself? Only her own hand could open her lover's lips, if he were to escape the ignominy of seeming to seek "not love, but gold."

If he could have looked into Delia's heart he would have known how groundless was the fear. She was not a woman who loved or trusted by halves, and even before there had been any question of love between them she had defended him from the imputation of mercenary motives. He went down daily to see Miss Macksey now, but Delia did not think he went for sordid reasons, any more than she believed Coventry Smith when he laughed and hinted that there must be something more attractive than an old aunt in the village to account for the young man's visits. Delia listened with her coldest and most scornful smile, and went out into the park, where the sun was setting and the shadows were lying on the grass, and where Maurice—she had begun to call him Maurice to her own heart now—would be coming on his way from Miss Macksey's.

At last she saw the gray coat she had learnt to know so well moving among the trees, and stopped and looked with innocent surprise. He was down by the brook, which was not the way from the village, and it struck her that there was something unusual in his attitude and occupation. She stepped silently on the soft, yielding grass, and saw that he was cutting something on one of the great beeches. Her name—of course it was her name! and she laughed at the thought. Perhaps it was a boyish and foolish thing to do, but no woman very deeply censures a folly that is committed for her sake.

She would not reveal herself, and wandered idly among the trees, gathering boughs for Lady Darley's bean-pots till he had gone, and then she walked straight to the tree he had just left. There was a name upon it, but it was not hers, and she stood as if turned to stone. The name he loved, the name he had cared to carve even when she was waiting for him, was not Delia—it was Elaine!

"And I thought he loved me for myself," said Delia, bitterly—"I have learnt the truth in time."

CHAPTER III.

It is six years afterward, and Delia is Delia Churchill still. It had not needed much to make so proud a man as Maurice Arnold withdraw a suit he had scarcely yet ventured to urge. A disdainful smile or two, a few bitter words, and he had left the Chase, and Delia was left to her sorrow and her pride.

The first pain is over now. The healing years have touched the wound, and perhaps only Delia herself remembers that it is there. Are there not some such scars in most lives—scars that are scarcely seen even by the nearest eyes, but that start and throb with a dull pain that will only cease at the touch of a greater healer than even time? Miss Churchill bears hers bravely enough, fronting the world with smiles, and a tongue that grows a little bitter as the years roll on.

She hears nothing of Maurice Arnold. She wonders sometimes if he has married "Elaine," but she does not even know if he is alive or dead, till one morning she sees his name in an obscure corner of the Times. There is to be an inquiry into the condition of mines and miners, and he is mentioned in connection with it. Yes, she remembers now; he had something to do with mines—what, she never quite understood—but slight as her knowledge of the fact had been it was sufficient to make the heading of the paragraph attract her eye. She saw his name no more in the paper, but a little while afterward a report was published that was reviewed in a scientific magazine; a report that bore Maurice Arnold's name, but that concerned so limited a number of readers that the libraries would none of it, and Delia's anxious eyes could discern no copy of it on the tables of her friends. Nevertheless, Miss Churchill meant to read it. It could harm no one—not even Elaine—and it would, perhaps, still the importunate longing that was born of the unbearable silence.

"There is a book I want to see," she said to a literary friend, "and they haven't it in the library."

"What is it called?" was the not unnatural question; but Delia was dumb. She had not realized how impossible it would be to name a book so unlikely for a young lady's reading without arousing curiosity as to her interst in it.

"Try the British Museum," suggested the man of letters, as willing as every one else to oblige the wealthy Miss Churchill.

Having obtained a ticket for the reading-room, Delia went one morning with a curious feeling of agitation, such as one might feel at meeting with a long-lost friend. It would be like meeting Maurice again, to read the words that were the offspring of his brain, and her hand shook nervously as she showed her ticket and went into the great reading-room that is so well known to literary people. Miss Churchill was not literary, and it was all new and strange to her, but she made her way to the clerks at the central counter, without wasting time in observation. She was quite unreasonably agitated, and made her request in a fluttered whisper.

"Report on Mines?" said the clerk, with a distinctness that sounded almost brutal. "If you will go and sit down at that table, it will be brought to you."

She filled up the paper given her, and made her way to an unoccupied seat, and in the stillness of the place she managed to recover herself enough to look about her. Nearly all the readers were men, and quaint-looking people many of them were. There were a few women, chiefly with short hair, and bad complexions, and shabby gowns, and they looked at Delia's velvet and furs as working bees might look at a gorgeous butterfly that had strayed into their hives.

"Which Report is it—'83 or '84?" asked a clerk with two volumes in his hand.

And Delia, scarlet and ashamed, had to say, "I don't know—it is Mr. Arnold's that I want."

A man at the next desk lifted his head curiously, but Delia did not see him. It seemed to her that she had gone through a great deal to secure the doubtful pleasure of seeing Maurice Arnold's book, but the sight of his name on the blue cover moved her as few things had done of late years. She took it with a little eager cry, and sat down to read it.

If Miss Churchill expected a literary treat, she did not find it. It would never be in Maurice Arnold's power to make any one "glorious by his pen." But she found what was perhaps dearer to her—little turns of expression that recalled the man she had loved, and amid the technicalities that might have deterred a less earnest reader, evidences of care for the poor creatures he had to report on, and a simple intention of fulfilling his duty, that seemed to show a loyal and upright soul.

"How could he have lied to me so at Beechwood?" thought Delia, and her eyes filled with tears.

Talking is not allowed in the Reading-room, but a hand was laid on hers, and the man who had looked up when she uttered Maurice Arnold's name whispered:

"Miss Churchill! may I speak to you outside?" Of course it was Arnold himself, who, by one of those providences we call a lucky chance, had been at the next table, and to whom the tears that had fallen on his not very moving book had been a revelation.

Delia did not refuse, and under the cold eyes of the statues in the "Grecian Room" the tale was told that had so nearly been told under the beeches of Beechwood Chase. Maurice Arnold was not a poor man now, for Miss Macksey was dead, and after providing for her pugs and poodles, had left him residuary legatee. He was not afraid of being called a fortune-hunter now, and Delia could hardly rise from that honest, well-meaning book, and doubt the love its author offered her.

"But who was 'Elaine?'" she asked, when all was happily settled. And then, as he only stored—"I mean the 'Elaine' whose name you carved on the beech-tree at Beechwood Chase."

"That?" said Maurice, with a shout that almost made the statues wink. "Do you really care to know, Delia? It was the pug of Miss Macksey's that was buried under the tree. I promised to put up an inscription for it, but I never got any further than 'Elaine.'"

The Coffee Drunkard.

"What a bright-eyed man," said a reporter who leaned against the cashier's desk of a restaurant near the public buildings one day last week. The man in question had just paid a ten-cent check, and slipped out of the door with a jerky movement and a swinging of the cane he carried which decidedly endangered the people's peace.

"Bright-eyed? Yes," said the cashier; "he's a coffee drunkard."

"What's a coffee drunkard?"

"A man who comes in here four times in two hours as that man has done this morning and does every morning, and takes a half-pint of coffee every time, is a coffee drunkard. Bright eyes! Well, I should say so. That man's condition all the time is the same as that of a man who is getting over a 'batter.' I mean his nerves are up in 'G,' his muscles are in a quiver, and his mental vision is abnormally clear. He is living at a 2:08¼ rate."

"Why does he do it?"

"Has to. Must have a brace. Used to drink rum. Had to quit that, and now does worse. He never sleeps, they tell me."

"Do you know many such?"

"At least half a dozen."—Philadelphia Press.

A GROWL.

Scarce out of bibs and pucker gowns
They ape the soft flirtation frowns,
Recumbent lie the hoop and stick—
Miss Mauvet tries the posture trick.
The baby's passed away—not dead,
For flattery has turned her head;
Before the echo of the strain
Of lullaby has died away,
She is queen among the vain
And shallow-minded maids an fait.
Fresh from the boarding school no doubt
As fashion leader she comes out—
With hook all baited for her front.
She hooked him, for she baited wise
With fascinating glance of eyes.
Go ask the fluttering winds of night
What's worse than victimizing plight
Of one whose's hooked? Alas! ah, me!!
A bachelor it is to be.

Tommy Learned It.

"Papa, how do nations get into war with each other?" asked Tommy Seasonby.

"Sometimes one way, sometimes another," said the father. "Now, there are Germany and Spain. They came near getting into war because a Spanish mob took down the German flag."

"No, my dear," put in Mrs. Seasonby, "that wasn't the reason."

"But, my darling," said Mr. S., "don't you suppose I know? You are mistaken. That was the reason."

"No, dearie, you are mistaken. It was because the Germans——"

"Mrs. Seasonby, I say it was because——"

"Peleg, you know better. You are only trying to——"

"Madame, I don't understand that your opinion was asked in this matter, anyway."

"Well, I don't want my boy instructed by an old ignoramus."

"See here, you impudent——"

"Put down your cane, you old brute. Don't you dare bristle up at me, or I'll send this rolling-pin at your head, you old——"

The Boy and the Bone-Setter.

Speaking of the bone-setters recalls a good story which occurred in the north of Scotland, where one of them had risen to great fame and no small fortune by his skill. A country lad residing a few miles off had got his leg hurt at one of the local factories, and had been treated for some time by the local medical man without any good result. His mother, who had great faith in the neighboring bone-setter, wanted the lad to go to him, which he declined, preferring, as he said, the "reg'lar faculty." Eventually, however, his mother's persuasions prevailed, and he agreed to allow himself to be taken to see Daniel R—, the bone-setter. A bed for the invalid was extemporized on a cart, and, accompanied by his anxious mother, he was, after a painful journey, taken to the town where the bone-setter resided. The leg was duly examined, and it was found necessary to haul it very severely in order, as the bone-setter said, "to get the bone in." The lad was liberal with his screams while this was going on, but eventually the bone was "got in," and he was told to go home and in a few days he would be all right and fit for his work. He was lifted upon the cart again, and, with his mother seated beside him, set off for their home. "Didn't Danny do the thing well?" said the joyous old lady. "Yes, he did, mother," said the lad, "but I was na sic a fool as to gie him the sair leg!" The "reg'lar faculty" will, we have no doubt, appreciate the story.—Whitehall Review.

Consulting Her Father.

Young Mr. Charles H. Isidore Coshinigin, of Harlem, was plainly embarrassed. For some minutes he had rested easily in his chair, and Miss Smith of Ninth street, near Second avenue, upon whom he was calling, knew what was coming—or thought she did—and her heart-throbs were as the ticking of a clock.

"Miss Smith," he said very feverishly, "can I—er—see your father for a moment or two?"

"My father?" she repeated, with a blush; "certainly, Mr. Coshinigin," and excusing herself, she swept from the parlor.

Presently the old man came in, and, after a short conversation with Mr. Coshinigin, he stepped to the door and summoned his daughter.

"It is getting late," said Mr. Coshinigin, whose face was radiant, "and, as I have a long ride before me, I think I will say good-night. Will I have the pleasure of finding you at home on Wednesday evening, Miss Smith?"

Miss Smith blushingly assured him that he would, and young Mr. Coshinigin was on route for Harlem.

"Oh, papa," she began, "did he——" and then she stopped.

"You must ask no questions," said the old man, and he smiled as he stroked his daughter's hair fondly. Mr. Coshinigin wanted to see me in regard to a little matter which for the present must remain a secret."

"I know, papa," pleaded the girl, "but you might give me just a little hint of what it was—just a word, papa——"

"Oh, well," he replied, indulgently, "since you must know, Mr. Coshinigin wanted to borrow five cents to get to Harlem with."

At the Ball of the Season.

Young Farmer (just from the country and unused to city ways)—"Good gracious, John, just look at that lady! Did you ever see anything like it?"

City Friend—"Which one? The one in white satin? Oh, yes; she's very charming. And what an elegant costume! Nearly all the ladies seem to be in full dress to-night."

Young Farmer—"Full dress! Well, I should say so! Full to the brim and running over."—Somerville Journal.

A Flat Contradiction.

Some one has told you that your catarrh is incurable. It is not so. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure it. It is pleasant to use, and it always does its work thoroughly. We have yet to hear of a case in which it did not accomplish a cure when faithfully used. Catarrh is a disease which it is dangerous to neglect. A certain remedy is at your command. Avail yourself of it before the complaint assumes a more serious form. All druggists.

A Puzzled Cherub.

"Mother, don't the angels wear any clothes?" asked a little San Antonio (Tex.) girl of her mother.

"No, my daughter."

"None at all, mother?"

"None at all."

There was a pause, and the little cherub asked:

"Where do the angels put their pocket-handkerchiefs?"—Texas Siftings.

How She Cured Him.

"What brings you here, Mary?" said Truesdell to his wife, as she entered the liquor shop.

"It is very lonesome at home, and your business seldom allows you to be there," replied the meek but resolute wife. "To me there is no company like yours, and as you cannot come to me, I must come to you. I have a right to share your pleasures as well as your sorrows."

"But to come to such a place as this!" expostulated Tom.

"No place can be improper where my husband is," said poor Mary. "'Whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder.'"

She took up the glass of spirits which the shopkeeper had just poured out for her husband.

"Surely you are not going to drink that?" said Tom, in huge astonishment.

"Why not? You say you drink to forget sorrow, and surely I have sorrows to forget."

"Woman, woman, you are not going to give that stuff to the children!" cried Tom, as she was passing the glass of liquor to them.

"Why not? Can children have a better example than their father's? Is not what is good for him good for them also? It will put them to sleep, and they will forget that they are cold and hungry. Drink my children; this is fire, and bed, and food, and clothing. Drink; you see how much good it does your father."

With seeming reluctance, Mary suffered her husband to lead her home, and that night he prayed long and fervently that God would help him to break an evil habit and keep a newly formed but firm resolution.

His reformation was thorough, and Mrs. Truesdell is now one of the happiest of women, and remembers with a melancholy pleasure her first and last visit to the dram shop.—National W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

Worse th Wasted.

The Chicago Tribune, though not usually given to temperance of the right kind, has been making some calculations on the retail cost to consumers of whiskey and beer in this country, which are about as startling as those made by the "fanatics" of which it speaks so frequently. It says that "a careful canvass of the facts" in regard to whiskey warrants the conclusion that the average price paid by the consumer is about $7.50 per gallon. This foots up a grand aggregate of $349,000,000, or very nearly ten dollars per head. Applying the same comparison as before, we see that this amounts to something like a dollar per week for each adult male in the United States of America. This is for whiskey alone. Allowing the very moderate sum of eighteen dollars per barrel as the average price paid by the buyer at retail, we have a further total of $395,000,000 for the beer that is consumed in the country each year." Put the two together, and we have $846,000,000—an appalling sum to contemplate as the worse than wastage of our people. The Tribune adds another item—that of tobacco—in all its forms, which belongs to the same category of expenditures. This is set down at $292,000,000. Thinking people should study these figures and comprehend if possible, this enormous drain upon the resources of the labor and business of our people. And then contemplate another $300,000,000 which has to be raised to pay the public and private expenses of crime and poverty caused by the consumption of these liquors! When these things are all considered we should cast about for an efficient remedy for this tremendous waste of money, with the still more formidable attending evil.—Chicago Standard.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magizine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment, or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

BY NEGLECT

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till soon an inflamed condition exists, that powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's cough balsam which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who are but the wrecks of their former selves receive wonderful help. In croup and whooping cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THOROUGHLY TRIED.

After many years of experience in my own family and upon my horses and cattle I am constrained to say that Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the most complete remedy for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, sore throat, &c., in the human family and of bone spavin, sweeny, ringbone, spavins, bruises, on horses; caked bag, sore teats &c., on cattle, that I have ever known and take pleasure in recommending to others. Large bottles 50 c. common size 25 c.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

DO YOU KNOW?

That the Horse and Cattle Powders prepared by E. M. Parmelee and composed of the very best and purest materials. Licorice, fœnugreek, blood root, elecampane, for coughs, colds, epizootic, distemper, &c., sulphur, mandrake, gentian, sulph. magnesia for impure blood; besides many other ingredients especially adapted to the cure of colic, worms, heaves, and all diseases of horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry. Buy no other. Full pounds only 35 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

WHY SUFFER?

With dyspepsia when Parmelee's dyspepsia, diabetes, kidney and liver cure will work wonders, relieving you at once. Do not wait till dyspepsia has overcome and diabetes has taken full possession of your body but remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This fine preparation will also tone up the kidneys and liver and cleanse the system of all impurities. Price $1,00 per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

CHANCERY SALE.

In pursuance and by virtue of an order and decree of the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, in the state of Michigan, made and dated on the twenty-fourth day of February, A. D. 1885, in a certain cause therein pending, wherein David S. Fox is complainant, and Maria V. Dyer, and Ezra S. Knowles are defendants, notice is hereby given, that I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, said Hall being the place of holding the circuit court for said county, on Friday, the 20th day of November, A. D. 1885, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, all or so much thereof, as may be necessary to raise the amount due to the said complainant, for the principal of said mortgage, interest thereon, and costs of said cause, the following described parcel of land to wit: All that piece or parcel of land situated in the township of Eveline, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and described as commencing at a stake that may be found by running north forty-eight (48) degrees east, seven (7) chains and twenty-four (24) links, thence south thirty-eight (38) degrees east, five (5) chains and twenty-seven (27) links to a stake from a stake on the beach of Pine Lake, where the north and south quarter line of section thirty-two (32) in township thirty-three (33), north, range six (6) west, intersects said beach, thence south forty-two (42) degrees west three (3) chains to a stake, thence forty-four (44) degrees east five (5) chains to a stake, thence east forty-two (42) degrees north six (6) chains to the channel bank of Pine Lake, thence north forty-four (44) degrees west two (2) chains and fifty [50] links to the place of beginning, containing one and 75-100 acres of land together with the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereinafter belonging or in any wise appertaining and thereupon situated, in accordance with the terms of said decree.

Dated October 7th A. D. 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petequom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

The Independent

The Largest, the Ablest, the Best

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY WEEKLY.

The most influential religious organ in the States.—The Spectator, London, Eng.

THE INDEPENDENT is one of the best papers in the world. Its good points are many and striking. They have only to be stated to be appreciated; and for proof of our claims appeal may be taken to any of the fifty-two issues for the year. Any number of The Independent will show that its contents are marked by—

ABILITY, VARIETY, AND INTEREST.—The great thinkers, the great story-writers, the great poets, men of the highest reputation in all departments of human knowledge, make up its list of contributors. Religion, philosophy, art, science, literature, travels, discoveries, stories, and all conceivable topics are embraced in the contents, and everybody, old or young, learned and unlearned, without regard to sex, employment, or condition, will find something of special interest in every issue.

COMPREHENSIVENESS.—It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined.

BREADTH, CANDOR, EARNESTNESS.—The Independent is tied to no denomination; it is the organ of no clique or party in state or church. It is free, therefore, to discuss all questions, and to speak its mind candidly. It is not swerved by fear or favor. It is a vigorous defender of the Evangelical faith, it preaches practical righteousness, and earnestly supports all moral reforms. All its columns—the advertising as well as the reading—are free from everything of doubtful or objectionable character. No matter what a person's religion, politics, or profession may be, if he desires to keep up with the times and know what the brightest minds are thinking of, the ablest pens are writing about, and what the world at large is doing—he should read The Independent.

The Township Library.

A few weeks ago we announced that a lot of new books had been added to the township library. These books are now catalogued and in circulation and we give below a complete list of them. Another order of about 20 volumes is expected in a few days, and next spring it is hoped to put in about $400 more. The library is now open every Tuesday and Friday afternoons, and hereafter it will be kept open on Friday evenings till 8 o'clock to accommodate mechanics and others whose hours for business will not permit them to get out in the afternoon. So far as we have heard, Miss Effie Berdan, the new librarian, is giving the management of the books her best attention, to the entire satisfaction of our people.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Horace Brigham Claflin, whose reputation as one of the greatest merchants of New York extended throughout the country and to Europe, died of apoplexy at his country house at Fordham. Mr. Claflin was in his 74th year.

Portland, Me., is still agitated over the reported resurrection of Joseph C. Dyer, who, it is claimed, was taken from his grave by medical students, revived under their treatment, and is now somewhere in the land of the living. The story, on general principles, is probably a canard; besides (an exchange remarks, flippantly), one would imagine a Dyer the most likely person to stay died.

Albert Fritz, an engraver residing at No. 183 Grand street, New York, recently had a few unkind words with his wife about the conduct of a child. Mrs. Fritz suffered so keenly from the incident that she killed two children and herself with cyanide of potassium.

Ten converts made by the Salvation Army were on Sunday baptized in the Merrimac River at Lowell, a crowd of five thousand throwing stones and howling like wild beasts.

Cyrus W. Field has sued James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald, and A. Oakey Hall, his London correspondent, for £10,000 damages. The suit grows out of statements published in the Herald regarding the Anglo-American Cable Company.

An ironworker at Johnstown, Pa., named J. B. Smith, while engaged in making repairs, was rendered senseless by gas, and fell headlong into the furnace, whence his charred body was lifted with hooks and ropes.

At a convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Easton, Md., Dr. George Williamson Smith, President of Trinity College, Hartford, was elected Bishop, to succeed the late Bishop Lay.

A party of Philadelphia surgeons and scientists, who gave the brain of John McCullough a thorough examination, found a disease due to blood poisoning.

WESTERN.

The mysterious robbery of the Nebraska State Treasury, last winter, has been followed by a verdict of manslaughter against Detective A. L. Pound, who is believed to have incited the crime and then shot his victim.

A prominent citizen of Montana asserts that the Marquis de Mores has sunk all his capital remaining outside the cattle business, putting $250,000 into refrigerators along the Northern Pacific, $45,000 into new paper ventures, and expending $25,000 on his trial for murder.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has affirmed the sentence of five years in the penitentiary imposed upon Joseph C. Mackin for perjury in connection with the Eighteenth Ward election fraud in Chicago.

At an explosion in the boiler-room of the Bull Domingo Mine at Silver Cliff, Colo., ten men were killed.

Twelve members of the bar of Tuscarawas County, Ohio, united in a letter to Judge John S. Pearce requesting his resignation on account of personal insults and extreme nervousness. The Judge proposes to hold the fort.

William A. Vincent, lately removed from the Chief Justiceship of the Supreme Court of New Mexico, has made a full statement of his reasons for appointing S. W. Dorsey as one of the commissioners of jurors, and he appeals to President Cleveland for a thorough investigation of his case.

Hugh N. Brooks, alias Maxwell, alias D'Anquier, was arraigned in the Criminal Court at St. Louis, and formally charged with the murder of Charles Arthur Preller.

John V. Suydam, who died at Green Bay, was the publisher of the first newspaper in the Territory of Wisconsin, having resided there since 1829.

Engineers and firemen on the Rock Island Road report seeing apparitions and hearing groans at the tunnel near La Salle, where no less than forty persons have lost their lives.

As the result of a quarrel over forty cents Mortimer Cockrell shot and killed his brother George on their farm near Lawrence, Kan. The Cockrells are said to be nephews of Senator Cockrell, of Missouri.

The dynamiters who attempted to destroy street-cars in St. Louis were leading members of Cleveland Assembly Knights of Labor. The charter of the lodge has been revoked.

W. A. Vincent, ex-Chief Justice of New Mexico, was married at Springfield, Ill., to Miss Mary L. Ridgley.

The First National Bank of Plankinton, Dak., has gone into voluntary liquidation because of the enormous taxation imposed by the town and county authorities. Depositors and stockholders will be paid in full.

The discovery has been made that thousands of Michigan soldiers have been swindled out of their bounties. Forged assignments, purporting to be duly signed and witnessed, have been filed at Lansing, batches aggregating $10,000 to $20,000 having been sent in from Detroit and other banks.

Near Batavia, O., a wagon containing five persons fell from a bridge and three of the party, one a woman, were drowned.

James Dempsy reported at Helena, M. T., that his two companions—John Hoag, of Cleveland, and Jacob Scheller, of Lafayette, Ind.—had been devoured by wolves while crossing the mountains. From his position in a tree Dempsey saw the men torn to pieces and devoured.

An evening train carried from Chicago to El Paso, Ill., Mrs. Roy Goode and Miss Lillian Walters, the victims of the pistol of A. J. Burrus, last month. Both are terribly maimed and disfigured. In an interview granted a reporter the ladies denied ever having written malicious letters to Mrs. Burrus, and declared that they would push the prosecution to a close.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. Dr. Clinton Locke, of Chicago, has been requested by a clergyman of Galveston to receive contributions for the sufferers by fire in that city. Jay Gould, the New York millionaire, was among the first to contribute for the relief of the sufferers, the amount of his donation being $5,000. C. P. Huntington gave a like sum.

Anderson Burres, a full-blooded Choctaw, who murdered his wife, was shot dead by the sheriff at Atoka, Indian Territory, in strict accordance with the sentence of the court.

A corrected report shows that 568 residences at Galveston were destroyed by the recent fire, and that the loss is fully $2,500,000. At a mass meeting it was resolved to accept proffered aid from other cities, the distress being much greater than at first estimated. Thus far $68,000 has been received, of which $23,500 has been paid out.

Col. H. W. Rogers, a United States Deputy Marshal, was shot and fatally wounded by some one on the street while standing near the window in the court house at Harlan, Ky. His assassin is supposed to be a moonshiner.

A negro named Noah Cherry, who murdered a white school girl in Princess Anne County, Va., was lynched by residents of the vicinity.

At a hamlet in West Virginia, the arrival of several thousand dollars for arrears of pension started a fight in a family bearing the name of Drake. The old man dropped dead from heart disease before he had touched the currency.

The business portion of the village of Hazlehurst, Miss., was destroyed by fire. Loss $100,000, with little insurance.

The steamer John H. Hanna, loaded with cotton, was burned on the Ouachita River. The loss was $50,000.

In an affray in Edgefield County, South Carolina, Robert Jones killed Edward Pressley and his sons, Edward and Charles, and then surrendered to the authorities.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Eleven hangings are to take place in the Dominion of Canada within the next six weeks.

At Pittsburg on Monday the National Rabbinical Convention of the Reformed Hebrew Church was called to order to consider the propriety of abolishing many of the traditional features of the Jewish religion, such, for example, as the belief of the orthodox Hebrews that they are all to go back to Jerusalem.

A public school-house at Kittanning, Pa., valued at $40,000, was destroyed by flames arising from natural gas. A fire in the Springfield School at Pittsburg was extinguished with a loss of $5,000. Three hundred children were moved out uninjured.

Reports from eight hundred points between Lake Erie and the Missouri River show a decrease in the area sown to wheat this fall. The prospects of the crop are favorable.

The Court of Common Pleas at Cincinnati issued an order that H. J. Jewett and associates turn over to the original owners the $21,000,000 of Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton stock for which they had issued certificates guaranteeing 6 per cent. per annum. The road is now under the exclusive management of its old owners.

The Rabbinical Convention of the Reformed Hebrew Church, in session at Pittsburg, adopted a platform setting forth their belief in one God, and maintaining that Judaism preserved this creed amid struggles and trials. They hold that the antique laws regarding diet, dress, etc., are foreign to the present state of things; and that considering themselves no longer a nation, but a religious community, they do not expect to return to Palestine, nor to engage in sacramental worship. They reject bodily resurrection, and also the belief in hell and heaven as places of future reward or punishment.

The half-breeds of St. Vital, Manitola, held a meeting to arrange for the funeral of Louis Riel, and sufficient money was contributed to pay the cost. Two days before the execution Riel's wife was delivered of a dead male child. While the jury at Regina was viewing the body, locks of hair were cut from the head and beard, buttons were detached from the clothing, and the suspenders were being cut up as relics when officers interfered. Jackson, Riel's lieutenant throughout the rebellion in the Northwest Territory, was found insane by a jury and sent to an asylum. He has now escaped and is thought to have reached the United States.

It is said that at the coming session of Parliament the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will ask further aid to bring about the consolidation and development of the whole railway system of the maritime provinces.

FOREIGN.

Great relief committees have been formed to assist the Russian Poles, compelled to leave Prussia because of Bismarck's continued enforcement of his edict of exile. Great suffering exists among the Poles, who in some cases are ordered to leave by thousands.

The marriage of the Infanta Eulalie of Spain to the son of the Duc de Montpensier is fixed for Feb. 11.

A dispatch from Belgrade says that the immediate reason for Servia's declaration of war against Bulgaria was a fight between troops of the two countries near Vlosina. The Servian forces have captured Trn and occupied the heights.

Trains loaded with soldiers are constantly leaving Philippopolis for the front. The men of the national guard have been summoned to join their commands. Prince Alexander complains that the Servian agent in Bulgaria withheld for eight hours the declaration of war. Russian newspapers declare that the Czar can not permit Bulgaria and Servia to tear each other to pieces. The Sultan has contracted with a steamship line for the transportation of thirty more battalions from Asia Minor to European Turkey. England has assured the Porte of her intention to do her utmost to preserve the integrity of Turkey. The Bulgarian government has asked Turkey for assistance.

The steamer Doowoon, recently sent to Mandalay, the capital of Burmah, to bring away the European residents detained there by the Burmese Government, has escaped from there and reached the British lines.

Dispatches from Belgrade state that the Servian troops have captured four Bulgarian redoubts. The Servians are marching on Sofia, but the Bulgarians are contesting every inch of ground. Turkey refuses to interfere in the quarrel. The London press severely criticises Servia for issuing the declaration of war. The Russian press, in commenting on the Balkan question, abuse Austria equally with England.

Mr. Parnell will contest the Irish district of the city of Liverpool for a seat in Parliament.

A German Socialist convicted of murdering a police officer, was beheaded at Cassel, Germany.

A ward in chancery, heiress to an estate worth £80,000, eloped recently with the steward of her guardian. Her lover was a middle-aged man, with a wife and six children. The guilty pair were captured in Ireland and taken back to the place in Scotland whence they fled. The man is locked up on a charge of abduction.

A fire in Paris caused a damage of 1,000,000 francs at La Fere arsenal, which contained stores and cavalry harness.

The Servians have gained a decided victory over the Bulgarians, near Widdin. The loss was heavy on both sides. The Servians captured 1,000 prisoners. Turkey will not interfere in the quarrel until after the capture of Sofia by the Servians.

Emperor William will decline the proposed ovation on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his coronation as King of Prussia.

The Mayor of Athens visited Paris for an interview with M. de Freycinet, to whom he explained why Greece will shortly be compelled to invade Turkish territory.

The British army of invasion in Burmah has captured the fortified city of Minhla, on the Irrawaddy River, and the way is now believed to be open to Mandalay, the capital.

Desperate fighting between the Bulgarians and Servians has resulted in further advantages for the latter, according to one set of reports, but other and seemingly more reliable advices indicate a disastrous and bloody defeat of King Milan's forces by the Bulgarians.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

De Lesseps, the great engineer, celebrated his eightieth birthday in Paris. All the foreign ambassadors in Paris visited him and paid their respects. He received many presents.

The German Reichstag was opened on the 19th inst. The Emperor in his speech said that the relations with all countries were friendly. The Carolines question would be settled satisfactorily, and he trusted that the Balkan conflict would not disturb the peace of Europe.

The Bulgarians again repulsed the Servian attacks on Slavenza, taking many prisoners. A dispatch from Belgrade states that the Servian headquarters have been withdrawn to Pirot. The Bulgarians are advancing from Sofia in the direction of Pernik to meet the advancing Servian division.

Joseph C. Mackin, the Chicago ballot-box stuffer, was taken to Joliet and entered on the service of his five years' sentence for perjury. He was dressed in convict clothes and ticketed No. 7359. Just a year and a day elapsed between the commission of the crime and the transfer to the penitentiary.

Signor Ettore Barili, the well-known music teacher, who was a half-brother of Adelina Patti, died at Philadelphia.

A woman who had been admitted to a charitable institution at Brooklyn was discovered attempting to murder her two little children. One of them was already dead, but the other will recover. The woman is insane.

The walls of the burned Empire Mills at New York suddenly collapsed, instantly killing a woman and wounding six men, four of whom will not survive their injuries.

Dr. Frothingham, one of the leading physicians of New York, who once saved the life of Charles O'Conor, killed himself with a revolver. The police have become convinced that the shot was an accidental one.

An octogenarian of Bainbridge, New York, named William Thurston, who was possessed of great wealth, hanged himself in his barn. For some months he had suffered from melancholia.

The Canadian Pacific Road has in operation 3,527 miles of track. A cargo of wheat and flour from Winnipeg reached Montreal in about five days.

At the meeting of the National Base Ball League at New York it was decided to hold the next annual convention in Chicago. Brothers, White, Rowe, and Richardson were permitted to play in Detroit, but on the St. Louis club's petition that it be permitted to play games on Sunday no action was taken. The Washington club applied for admission, to take the place of Buffalo, but action was deferred until the meeting of the Schedule Committee in March.

The body of Louis Riel was taken from the police barracks at Regina and buried beneath the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Pere Andre reading the funeral service. A guard had been employed to watch the grave. TO LIFT UP COMMERCE.

Conference of the National Free-Trade League at Chicago.

The Free-Trade Conference which was held at Chicago recently attracted general attention, and was attended by a number of gentlemen of national reputation, among them Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, David A. Wells, Josiah Quincy, Frank Hurd, J. Sterling Morton, and John S. Phelps.

During the closing hours of the session papers were read as follows: "Iron and Its Manufacture," by Mr. Lindley Vinton, of Indianapolis; "The Tariff and Ship-building," by William S. Gibbons, a Delaware ship-builder; "Pauper Labor of Europe," by Thomas G. Shearman, of New York; M. B. Harter, of Mansfield, Ohio, spoke on "The Relation of the Tariff to Agricultural Implement Manufacture." He argued that free trade would be a great benefit to this industry. E. W. Cole, of Connecticut, spoke negatively on the subject, "Does a High Tariff on Wool Benefit the Wool-Grower?"

The committee on nominations submitted a report which was adopted. It named the following as the future officers of the league:

President—David A. Wells, New York. Vice-Presidents, Thomas Holland, New York; Justus Clark, Iowa; M. M. Trumbull, Illinois; William P. Fishbone, Indiana; W. P. Wells, Michigan; N. S. Harwood, Nebraska; ex-Gov. John S. Phelps, Missouri; B. R. Forman, Louisiana; F. W. Dawson, South Carolina; William M. Singerly, Pennsylvania; ex-Gov. J. G. Robinson, Kansas; J. Q. Smith, Ohio; Henry L. Pierce, Massachusetts; J. B. Sargent, Connecticut; Henry Watterson, Kentucky; J. T. Stevens, New Jersey; William E. Jenkins, Texas; J. D. Whitman, Oregon; William Gibbons, Delaware; Rowland Hazard, Rhode Island; B. B. Herbert, Minnesota, and representatives from other States whose names were to be subsequently reported. Executive Committee—Thomas G. Shearman, Josiah Quincy, A. W. Thomas, H. B. Stapler, E. P. Doyle, William G. Browdee, A. A. Healy, W. W. Witmer, Erskine M. Phelps, M. D. Harter, and W. G. Peckham. National Committee—R. R. Bowker, New York; G. Mosher, Iowa; I. N. Stiles, Illinois; P. S. O'Rourke, Indiana; William G. Brownlee, Michigan; J. Sterling Morton, Nebraska; F. L. Underwood, Missouri; W. R. Whitaker, Louisiana; J. J. Dargan, South Carolina; James G. Jenkins, Wisconsin; James D. Hancock, Pennsylvania; Enoch Harpole, Kansas; J. M. Osborn, Ohio; P. J. Sundby, Minnesota; Josiah Quincy, Massachusetts; honorary secretary, R. R. Bowker; western secretary, H. J. Philpot; central secretary, Lewis Howland; treasurer, George F. Peabody.

The committee on resolutions submitted its report, which was adopted after several amendments had been made.

The report was as follows:

We submit to the people of the United States that the continuance of the war tariff, with duties averaging 42 per cent. on over fourteen hundred articles of domestic consumption, and a much higher specific duty on many crude materials, has prolonged the evils of war in times of profound peace, and has been the principal cause of the commercial and industrial depression of recent years.

By forcing labor and capital from naturally profitable into unprofitable lines of business, and by adding to the cost of production, it has decreased the common productive interests of the country, and thereby reduced both the wages of labor and the profit of capital; it has provoked an antagonism between labor and capital, against which our great natural resources and our free institutions should have protected us; it has impaired our power to compete with other manufacturing nations in the markets of the world, and so obstructed national progress and development.

It has destroyed many branches of business, and has kept our people from engaging in other branches of business which would have given increased employment to labor.

By preventing our buying from nations willing to buy from us, and by provoking retaliation in like spirit, instead of promoting friendly reciprocity, it has obstructed the consumption of our agricultural and manufactured products by other countries, and has driven our commerce from the seas.

By impairing our domestic power to buy it has prevented the full development of our interstate commerce, and reduced the legitimate profits of, and has driven into bankruptcy, a large number of our transportation companies, and made domestic traffic more costly.

Through the influence of its lobbies it has enthroned jobbing and corruption in our legislative halls, and has impeded the reform of the civil service.

In short, taking by force the earnings of one class of men to enrich another class, it is opposed to the spirit of American liberty and of the Constitution; it has imposed a new industrial slavery; it has prevented the natural progress of wealth among the laboring classes, depressed wages and their purchasing power, and lengthened the enforced idleness of workingmen, restricted our manufactures from the natural markets, and demoralized the general business of the country.

While lobbying accordingly that favors an aid of private interests, or for any purpose other than the requirements of government, is un-American, unjust, and unwise, and that every protective feature must at the earliest possible date be eradicated from our revenue system, we invite all who oppose the abuses of the present tariff to join us in promoting immediate steps of practical tariff reform, which we believe will increase wages, diminish the frequency of strikes, develop business, and restore our flag to the seas.

We therefore urge upon Congress for action at the ensuing session first, that under no pretense shall any countenance be given to attempts to increase protective duties; second, that articles which are at the foundation of great industries should, in the interests of labor and commerce, be freed from duty, whether they be crude materials as lumber, salt, coal, ore, wool, etc., or partly manufactured—as chemicals, dyestuffs, pig iron, tinplate, wood pulp, etc.; third, that on products from such articles duties should at least be correspondingly reduced, so that the protection, real or nominal, to manufacturers shall not be increased, and that the consumers shall have the immediate benefit of the reduction.

We urge that any steps in tariff reform should simplify the present complicated classification, should do away with mixed duties, reducing them by ad valorem rates instead of by specific duties, which are most burdensome to low-price goods consumed by the great body of the people.

We demand free ships, and the abolition of our restrictive navigation laws, which, together with the tariff, have driven our flag from the seas; and we oppose bounties and subsidies on shipping. We urge revenue reformers to vote only for such Congressional candidates as openly oppose tariff for protection, and to take steps to nominate independent candidates when all party candidates oppose tariff reform, preparing for the step by diffusing sound economic literature and promoting organization, especially in close congressional districts.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that no further reduction be countenanced in the internal revenue tax on spirits and tobacco until the existing tariff has been brought to a strict revenue basis.

A mass meeting in behalf of free trade was held at Central Music Hall, of which a local paper says: "The hall was crowded to overflowing, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission. Standing room was at a premium, and tickets could have been sold at a liberal price for admission to the house. The audience was a cultivated one, and included all classes of Chicago society, with many leading protectionists."

Addresses were delivered by David A. Wells and Henry Ward Beecher. The former asserted that all trade and commerce, in the practical business of life, is the interchange of products and services, and there can be no buying without selling or selling without buying; and the latter claimed that a paternal government was always an infernal government; that the custom-house is a trap and a snare, and that commerce should be as free as thought.

JOHN SHERMAN will now be one of three men of the country elected to five full terms to the United States Senate. Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, was the only man who served thirty consecutive years in the Senate. Henry B. Anthony was elected to five full consecutive terms to the Senate by Rhode Island, but he died soon after entering his fifth term.

THE principals and employes of the London banks have a "prayer union," which meets once a month. A recent meeting was held at the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor. Sir R. N. Fowler, the Lord Mayor, presided, and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon gave an address. Many of the leading bankers were present, and the large Egyptian Hall was crowded.

NORRISTOWN Herald: A New York physician, who looks fifteen years younger than he really is, attributes his favorable condition to the use of lemonade taken regularly four times a day. He has used 3,000 lemons a year for ten years. If he were making lemonade for sale at a circus he wouldn't use 3,000 lemons in 100 years.

A LADY asked Dion Boucicault one day, as Harper's Weekly learns, how it was that on the evening before, when he appeared as Conn, his moustache was wanting, though it was both black and brilliant when he did not act. "Madam," he replied, stroking it softly, "there is no mystery here. In making up as Conn I simply soap it well and cover it with ronge."

A WOMAN'S club in Chicago has made a move in the right direction by opening a school for the training of servants. All branches of housework are taught, and an intelligence office established in connection with the school secures places for competent graduates. This is putting charity upon a practical and substantial basis, and the example is one which should be widely followed.

A GEORGIA negro maintains that the efficacy of prayer depends entirely on the manner in which the petition is worded, and says: "If I ask the Lord to send me a turkey I won't get it, but if I ask Him to send me after a turkey I always get one before daybreak." Prof. Tyndall, who, as the result of scientific tests, has declared that there is no efficacy in prayer, has evidentally been proceeding on insufficient data. Here is a case that will no doubt baffle his boasted science.

THE manager of an electric company says that it is found that wherever steam is used to obtain twenty-five horse power or less, electricity is more economical. The advantages are: a smaller space occupied, much less noise and no heat, and the fact that the power can be turned on or stopped at will. There is no boiler required and no fire, as the power is supplied to the motor by wires from a central station, on the same principle that gas or steam heat is supplied.

AMONG the Irishmen who have gained an illustrious name in New Zealand is the Most Rev. Dr. Croke, first Roman Catholic Bishop of Auckland, whose removal to the see of Cashel is still deplored, not only by those in his former diocese but by Roman Catholics all over New Zealand. To the native race he was a special object of admiration on account of his splendid physique, and the ease with which he cleared a six-foot fence if it stood in his way. These qualities, with the warlike Maoris, went quite as far as his eloquent efforts to induce them to become members of his spiritual flock.

MR. D. A. COFFIN is the most truthful if not the most facetious hotel-keeper in Maine. He advertises on his envelopes: "The original and only third-class hotel in Maine—where everything fails to suit—tough beefsteak, dirty rooms, useless servants, debilitated coffee. This house, of world-wide bad reputation, is owned, occupied and presided over by the laziest man in the State. Satisfaction not guaranteed; no money refunded. Dilapidated stable in connection. Everything warranted strictly shoddy."

IN Kentucky a man who was married a second time died, and his second wife survives him. His children by his first marriage now seek to deprive the widow of all interest in his estate on the ground that he was married to her, not in his real name, but under an assumed name. In Indiana that case would be quickly decided in favor of the widow. By Indiana laws marriage is recognized as a public institution, but it is held also to be a civil contract. A contract binds the individuals who make it. The names assumed at its execution are wholly immaterial. To fix legal responsibility the only requirement is the identification of the contracting parties. So this dead Kentuckian, without regard to the name he may have assumed, if identified as the contracting party, should be held to have been bound by his contract. As the contract binds the ancestor, it likewise binds the heirs. The widow should take her dower.

SIR HARRY VERNEY, who entered the Commons in the first reformed Parliament, will not accept re-election this year. He is eighty-three years old, and has a brother, Mr. Calvert, Q. C., seventy-nine. Sir Harry changed his name from Calvert to Verney on inheriting the estate of the Baroness of Fermanagh, sixty years ago or thereabout. Mr. Talbot, "the father of the House," also retires this fall. He is of the same age as Sir Harry Verney, and was first elected to the unreformed Parliament of 1830 as member for Glamorganshire, and without a break he has sat for Glamorganshire all the fifty-five years since. Mr. Villiers is another veteran, eighty-two years old, who has represented one constituency for now just half a century. Sir Robert Carden was born in 1801, but never entered Parliament until 1880. The O'Gorman Mahon is eighty-two years old, and was elected to the unreformed Parliament, but has not yet had enough of it, and hopes to secure a return this fall.

ONE of the causes of the terrible distress and pitiful poverty of the mining regions of Pennsylvania, says a Philadelphia paper, is the importation of foreign labor. Poles, Hungarians, and Bulgarians swarm through the coal mines. The Poles sometimes make good citizens, and so do the Hungarians. The old Irish and Welsh miners confound the Bulgarians who come here with the Hungarians. The Bulgarians are a wretched lot. They come in great numbers, and will work for almost nothing. They rarely become skilled miners, but are content to remain laborers. They spend nothing. A dollar a week is a good income for one of these Slavs. Fifty or sixty of them will live in a single shanty, sleeping on the floor and eating the refuse of slaughter-houses. With their bread they use lard instead of butter. When a Bulgarian has sent home $300 he quits the country. He has acquired an ample fortune. These people, brought here to make strikes impossible, are at the bottom of the distress in the anthracite regions, and they are beginning to make their appearance among the bituminous coal fields. Low wages, half time, and the tyranny of the company store are starving the miners and their families, and compelling them to bring up their children without education. In a few years the region will be black not only with coal dust but with the darkness of ignorance and of the crimes which spring from ignorance. The Slav is now often the victim of the miner's unconcern, and the casualties in anthracite coal mines have greatly increased within the last two years. The grumbling against these foreign pauper laborers is becoming so loud and threatening that more open enmity is to be feared. The Slav may be the cause of the revival of Molly Maguireism.

A Mississippian's Artifice.

A rich planter boarded a steamer off Natchez. He purchased a paper from a newsboy and was soon lost in its perusal.

"Colonel," said a bland young man, a few moments after, "you have just dropped this," handing him a $50 note.

"I reckon not," said the old gentleman, as he overlooked his spectacles.

"I have just picked it up under your chair," replied the young man, "and see no other way to dispose of it. However, since it seems to belong to neither of us, we might just as well divide it."

The plan worked well. The old gentleman passed over $25 in change, and the young man sauntered carelessly out on land. A few minutes after the vessel had taken to water the old gentleman presented the $50 note to the clerk in payment for his fare.

"Counterfeit!" exclaimed the clerk, and then for the first time the whole truth dawned upon the old man's mind.

"SOMEHOW," said a philosopher, "things are usually kept at an equilibrium. For example: the more prices go up, the more everybody has to 'come down' for everything."

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Views of a Large Number of Members on Important Questions.

The Louisville Courier-Journal recently published letters from 160 members of Congress, 59 Democrats and 91 Republicans. The letters are in response to four questions sent out by the Washington correspondent of the Courier-Journal, as follows:

1. Would you favor an amendment to the rules of the House providing that the general appropriation bills, except the legislative, sundry civil, and deficiency bills, shall be prepared and controlled hereafter by the appropriate standing committees on the several branches of the public service?

2. Do you favor any change in the laws governing silver coinage and silver certificates, and if so, what modification would you regard as desirable?

3. To what extent, in your opinion, would a revision of the tariff and internal revenue laws be desirable at the next session?

4. Who is your choice for the caucus nomination for Speaker?

In the Democratic responses, forty-seven are unqualifiedly in favor of an amendment of the rules, five give a qualified answer, four oppose a change, and three are non-committal.

As to the second, or silver question, four favor legislation, forty-nine oppose, and six are non-committal.

As to the third or tariff-reform question, fifty-three favor tariff agitation, three oppose and three are non-committal.

For Speaker fifty-seven are for Carlisle, one for Randall, and one non-committal.

The whole number of Republican members who responded is ninety-one. For amending the rules of the House, forty-eight unqualifiedly approve, twelve qualify their answers, nine oppose, and twenty-two are non-committal.

Sixty favor legislation on the silver question, sixteen oppose, and fifteen are non-committal.

Seventy-five oppose tariff legislation, four favor it, and twelve are non-committal.

For Speaker, thirty are for Frank Hiscock, twenty-three are for Reed of Maine, eleven for Gov. Long of Massachusetts, and thirty-seven are non-committal.

The correspondent of the Courier-Journal, in summing up on officers of the House, names for Speaker John G. Carlisle; Clerk, John B. Clark, Missouri; Sergeant-at-Arms, John B. Leedom, Ohio; Doorkeeper, Samuel Donelson, Tennessee; Postmaster, Lyenrgus Dalton, Indiana.

Michigan Congressmen on the Silver Problem.

Senator Palmer, of Michigan, who went to Chicago to attend the Fat Stock Show, said to a Tribune interviewer that he should favor the suspension of the silver coinage in the coming session of Congress. He believed the silver dollar should contain 100 cents' worth of silver, and not eighty-five. As to the legislation subsequent to the suspension of the coinage, he said he had made up his mind as to what he should favor. He did not believe under any recommendation that the President might make in his annual message that the silver question would become a party issue.

The Senator's views were nearly identical with those of the Democrat who represents Detroit in the lower house—Congressman Maybury. The latter said, in an interview, he was opposed to the continued coinage of the dollar as it is, and, while not a single-standard man, he nevertheless believed that they should be nearer together than at present. As to the views of the remainder of the Michigan delegation on the silver question, Mr. Maybury said he had talked with none of the members about it, but was inclined to the opinion that quite a number agreed with him.

MR. SAMUEL J. TILDEN is building one of the largest and most complete conservatories in the country on his premises at Greystone. It will be supplied with all kinds of fruit, so that fruit may be plucked the year round.

POSTAL AFFAIRS.

The Number of New Offices Established During the Year—Salary and Allowance.

First Assistant Postmaster General A. E. Stevenson has submitted to the Postmaster General his annual report upon the operations of his bureau for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885. From the report it appears that the number of postoffices established during the year was 2,121, and the number discontinued 885, making the whole number of postoffices at the end of the fiscal year 51,252, a net increase of 1,235 during the year. The number of offices subject to appointments by the President (presidential grade) was 2,233, and the number subject to appointment by the Postmaster General (fourth class) was 49,019. The whole number of appointments during the year was 11,263, made up as follows: On resignations and commissions expired, 6,203; removals and suspensions, 816; change of names and sites, 267; death of postmasters, 412; establishment of new offices, 2,221. The increase in the number of postoffices was distributed as follows: New England States, 48; Middle States and District of Columbia, 11; Southern States and Indian Territory, 638; the ten States and six Territories of the West and Northwest, 375; the three States and three Territories of the Pacific Slope, 65. The greatest increase in any State or Territory was 100 in Virginia. The increase in Dakota for the year was 74, and in Mississippi 59. The only decrease was in Nevada. The total number of money order offices was 5,092, an increase of 719 over the preceding year. The number of changes in postmasters during the year was less than the preceding year, and the large decrease in the number of cases acted upon during the year, as compared with the preceding year, was due, says Gen. Stevenson, to the fact that very few changes were made in the offices during the winter months.

Under the head of free-delivery system, the report states that the number of free-delivery offices at the close of the year was 178, an increase of 18, and the number of carriers 1,358, an increase of 1[illegible]. The entire cost of the service was $3,985,952, leaving an unexpended balance of $79,046. The service has now been extended to nearly all cities having a population of 20,000 inhabitants or returning $20,000 gross receipts per annum, and its further extension must, under the law, await the growth of cities to the requirements above noted, or the qualifications must be lowered by legislation.

The First Assistant Postmaster General says that the success of this system, its convenience to the public, and other merits, in his judgment warrants the recommendation that authority be conferred by legislation for its extension to places of inhabitants having a gross revenue of $10,000. The report briefly states the advantages that have resulted from the consolidation of large free-delivery offices and recommends that the same policy be applied to non-free-delivery offices so as to give them the benefits of free delivery. It is believed that this consolidation would reduce the labor of examining accounts by cutting down the number of separate postoffices and result in greater harmony in the service. Under the head of salary and allowance it is stated that the total amount allowed for clerk hire in postoffices was $1,924,569; for rent, fuel, and light of postoffices, $463,939; for salaries of postmasters (2,435) adjusted during the year, $3,701,600; for salaries of Presidential postmasters, $3,634,600. Since April, 1881, 32,400 applications for review of salaries of postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, were received and filed. The number of salaries reviewed and readjusted was 17,521, and 5,900 applications were allowed, involving the additional amount for compensation or back pay of postmasters of $878,922. As a result of the annual adjustment of salaries, 14 offices were added to the Presidential list and 134 offices were relegated to the fourth class. The grand total of gross receipts at Presidential offices for the four quarters ended March 31, 1885, amounted to $31,792,220, and the aggregate salaries of the postmasters will absorb 11.42 per cent. of the revenues. "The postal receipts," says Gen. Stevenson, "forming the basis of the salaries of Presidential Postmasters fluctuate with the favorable or unfavorable condition of the business of the country. At the present time reports show that the country is entering upon an era of prosperity and plenty, and therefore no less than $3,000,000 will be required to pay the salaries of Presidential Postmasters during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. The amount of compensation for clerk hire required during the same period is estimated at $5,510,000, making the total estimate for this branch of the service, including allowances for fuel, rent, furniture, and miscellaneous items, $5,897,000."

The First Assistant Postmaster General, in conclusion, calls the attention of the failure of Congress to provide for the payment by the Government of rent at third-class postoffices. He renews the recommendation that provisions be made for the payment of rent of offices of that class, and for the payment of expenses of fuel, light, stationery, and miscellaneous items for these offices. It is also recommended that Jan. 1, 1887, be fixed as the limitation of applications for readjustment of salaries under the act of March 3, 1883.

THE RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

From the annual report of General Superintendent Jameson, of the railway mail service, it appears that mileage increased during the past year only 4,007 miles. The increase in the number of pieces of mail matter handled, exclusive of registered matter, was 128,397,500. In a total distribution of 4,948,959,400 pieces the number of errors chargeable to the clerks of the railway mail service was but 887,704, or one error to each 5,574 pieces handled, being at the rate of 221 errors per clerk per annum. The average percentage of mail correctly distributed was 99.98. This is the highest rate attained since the establishment of the service.

The general superintendent recommends that Congress be asked to empower the Postmaster General to pay to the widow or minor children of any clerk killed while on duty an amount equal to one year's salary of the grade to which the deceased belonged at the time of his death. The estimate for special facilities (fast mail service) on the trunk lines for the ensuing year is the same in amount as the sum set apart for the purpose for the current fiscal year—namely, $251,525. The amount of the estimate for railway postal cars is $1,888,577, which is an increase of 7 per cent. over the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year for roads other than those that are subsidized. The sum of $1,877,060 is asked for with which to pay railway postal clerks. This is an increase of 6 per cent. over the amount of the existing appropriation.

The Superintendent strongly advocates the extension of the benefits of the civil-service law to the clerical forces of the railway mail service.

THE MONEY-ORDER BUREAU.

In his annual report to the Postmaster General, Supt. C. F. McDonald, of the Money-Order Bureau, points to the growth of the business from its inception in 1866, when there were 706 money-order offices that issued $4,000,000 in orders, down to the last fiscal year, when the 7,355 offices issued orders amounting to about $120,000,000. The fees now aggregate about $1,000,000 per annum. During the fiscal year 767 money-order offices were established and 16 discontinued. Since the close of the fiscal year 363 offices have been added and 4 have been discontinued. The total amount of payments and repayments of money-orders was $117,906,205, and the excess of payments over issues $137,284. The gross amount of fees received by Postmasters from the public for the issue of domestic money-orders was $923,930. These figures exhibit a decrease in the amounts of orders issued and paid and of fees received.

COST OF MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Second Assistant Postmaster General Knott has submitted to the Postmaster General his annual report of the operations of his bureau during the past fiscal year. It appears that the cost of mail transportation for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1885, was: For 12,371 star routes, aggregating 292,252 miles in length, $5,411,811; star-service for the next fiscal year is $5,850,000, slightly less than the appropriation for the current year. The reduction effected by orders in this class of service from April 1 to September 30, 1885, aggregated $148,696. The reductions in steamboat service effected from April 1 to September 30, 1885, by discontinuances and curtailments of routes amounted to $74,256, and the sum deemed necessary for the current year is $870,648.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Western Michigan is afraid of a kerosene oil famine.

—Negaunee is making a fight to get the county seat away from Marquette.

—Perry Hannah, of Traverse City, denies that he is a candidate for the Governorship.

—Mrs. Evarts, of East Saginaw, who was burned by the upsetting of a kerosene lamp, died of her injuries.

—Patrick Johnson (colored) was arrested at Adrian, charged with having murdered the infant twins of his mistress.

—Charles Pemberton, the seventeen-year-old son of a wealthy farmer near Morley, committed suicide by hanging.

—Charles McFadden received fatal injuries at Negaunee, while attempting to cross the track in front of an engine.

—Numerous deaths in cattle in different parts of the State are laid to the fact of their being fed on half-rotten potatoes.

—Marquette hunters propose to organize a game protection association and put a stop to the illegal slaughter of game and fish.

—Prof. Alexander Agassiz has issued an order against the employment of Knights of Labor by the Calumet & Hecla Company.

—Captain James, of Detroit, naturally excites comment whenever he appears on the street. He is nearly seven feet high and weighs 300 pounds.

—In petitioning a Detroit court for divorce, Louis Stewart alleges that his wife habitually picks up rusty nails, old iron and paving blocks in the street, with which to fill the house.

—Six houses at Hillsdale were raided by burglars, and amounts ranging from 15 cents to a considerable amount in money secured, besides two overcoats and $200 in certificates of deposit.

—Le Yee, a young Chinese lamdryman of Three Rivers, tried to commit suicide by shooting himself in the mouth because his uncle whipped him. He will recover, but says he will try it again.

—About 2,000 citizens of Saginaw put off until the last day the opportunity of being vaccinated free. As there are but 200 vaccine points left the 800 who got left wished they had been "sooner."

—A factory for manufacturing patent medicine is building at Owosso, which will employ twenty-five girls. H. Wesener is erecting three new stores and Woodard Bros. one. Thus the gap created by the late fire will be more than filled.

—J. T. Hurst, of Wyandotte, has sold to Eddy Bros., of Bay City, a tract of pine land in town 17, 3 west, on the Saginaw Bay and Northwestern branch of the Michigan Central, estimated to cut 7,000,000. The consideration was $15,000.

—The highest price in the California Theater is 75 cents, the lowest 25 cents. The highest price for a reserved seat in Detroit is a dollar and the general admission half that sum. The price here, however, is somewhat elastic, depending on the attraction. This is certainly not dear. In London and Paris the prices are much higher, although in most continental cities the cost of theater-going is less than in America.—Detroit Free Press.

—Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, of Michigan, says the Detroit Free Press, is a star of the first magnitude in the brilliant galaxy of women who have added luster to the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union in session at Philadelphia recently. A teacher in the public schools of Detroit during the war, at its close she married Dr. Lathrop, a surgeon of the army. A niece of his has been the only child in the household, so that she has been able to give her life to others. She transferred her relation from the Presbyterian Church to that of her husband's at marriage, and was granted many years ago a license to preach by the quarterly conference—but her first six sermons were preached by invitation of the pastor of the Congregational Church of her own town.

"Kind Sir, Please, Gi' Me Information."

[From the Detroit Free Press.]

Twenty-eight impatient people in a half-circle about the stamp-window at the postoffice the other day. The twenty-ninth was not an impatient people. She was a young woman of eighteen. She had a letter to post and she posed in front of the window, spread out her arms and chewed her gum and said:

"Will this letter take two stamps?"

"No'm."

"Is one enough?"

"Yes'm."

Then she chawed and chawed.

"Do you take Canada money?"

"No'm."

"You don't?"

"No'm."

Then she chawed and chawed.

"Will it go out this afternoon?"

"Yes'm."

"Probably get there to-morrow?"

"Yes'm."

Then she chawed and chawed.

"It isn't a foreign letter, you know?"

"No'm."

"Going to Cleveland, you see?"

"Yes'm."

"If you were me——"

The crowd surged up and swept her ten feet away. She held the letter in one hand and the stamp in the other, and gazed her indignation. Her anger seemed to center on one man—one who had elbowed her the hardest. He seemed to feel it, and he turned and bowed, and whispered:

"Scuse me, ma'am, but this is no idiot asylum?"

Then she chawed and chawed, and went out without posting her letter.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THANKSGIVING, 1885.

The American people have much to be thankful for this year. Times are hard, but are not so bad as have been, and are showing a gradual permanent improvement. Crops have been good this year, and prices are strengthening. The future looks brighter than for some years past.

The government has been safely transferred from one political party to another, and the people are settling down to business with a confidence some claimed one year ago was impossible. The people are indeed the masters, and a change of servants will not bring ruin in the general government any more than in one's private affairs.

But our day of thanksgiving is also a day of great grief and mourning. Last night the telegraph announced that Thos. A. Hendricks, vice president, was stricken with apoplexy. This announcement will bring grief to many households, and destroy the pleasure which would otherwise have been supreme.

We can all be thankful for life and health and such prosperity as we have been able to gain.

Notes and News.

It is said that Gen. Butler has secured the services of several good readers, who are placed on little platforms in different parts of his mills and read to the operatives as they work.

Again the newspaper man has received substantial recognition from the administration in the appointment of Ed. Forsyth, of the Cheboygan Democrat, to the office of deputy collector of customs at that port.

If there is any department of intellectual labor in which experience should be counted to the credit of the worker as enhancing the value of services rendered it is the department filled by the school teacher.—New York Times.

"How soon our ex-Presidents are forgotten! Arthur has hardly been heard of since the day he retired," says the Cincinnati Enquirer. But that depends upon who the ex-President is. Washington, Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Jackson and Grant were not forgotten after they retired. It's the Polks the Hayeses, and the Arthurs who are soon forgotten.—Free Press.

Does Indecency Pay?

A notion has gained ground that it is commercially profitable for a newspaper to cater to low tastes, and that it invariably increases its circulation by gathering and publishing all the details of revolting social scandal. It seems to be the opinion of the Sun that this notion has demoralised the country press which has copied the city press in this reprehensible practice. If now, on such good testimony as the Sun, it turns out that the ways of uncleanness in journalism are unprofitable, and that the scrupulously decent newspaper is, in the long run, the most profitable, a most desirable change may be looked for all along the line. It can not have escaped the observation of newspaper conductors that there has been for some years a general complaint among men who have families that it is difficult to find a paper with the news in it which is decent enough to be admitted into the house. The reply has been that the public demanded the depraved sort of news and was willing to pay for it, and would always by preference buy the journals that furnished it. We are glad to be authoritatively informed that this is a commercial mistake. Our theory of the newspaper is that it is very much what the public want it and make it, and we believe that as a rule the tone of a newspaper is higher than that of a majority of its readers.—Hartford Courant.

Grand Rapids also has a paper called the Boycotter, and it seems to be getting in its work, too. While there are some things very unreasonable in the boycotting business, it is certainly preferable to strikes, which so often end in violence, and inflicting more injury on the workmen than the capitalists. If used in a just cause, boycotting can be made very effective.—Big Rapids Herald.

The increase in circulation of the New York World is really phenomenal. When the present management took control in 1883, the paper had less than 16,000; but to-day it has nearly 200,000. The grand total of circulation the past nine months has been 36,283,130 copies. The World is a staunch democratic paper, hence its success.

GLEANINGS.

The State of New York contains 100,000 French Canadians.

Louisiana is assuming prominence as an iron producing state.

The wheat crop of Oregon this year will be 30 per cent in excess of last year.

The population of Melbourne increased 18,281 last year, and is now 322,690.

Widows in Wareham, Mass., are allowed a barrel of herrings free from the town fishery.

Prohibition is now on trial in 105 of the 137 counties in Georgia, and will soon embrace the whole state.

A tree has been found on the mountains in North Carolina that promises to be of great value for making fine paper.

The Italian Government will erect a monument sixty feet high to the memory of Cavour, the regenerator of Italy. He died in 1861.

The pendulum of the clock in Dr. Tyng's church in New York has not stopped since it was first started, nearly twenty-six years ago.

A man in full, healthy exercise requires about one-half pound of meat, nineteen ounces of bread and three ounces of butter-fat per day.

The largest flouring mill in France has recent adopted rollers, a fact which has not a little disconcerted the stone mill advocates, of whom in France there are not a few.

The process of making paper hangings is similar to that of calico printing. Machines are now in the market that will print from six to a dozen or more colors in one operation.

Victor Hugo, who survived to such old age, was, when born, 'such a tiny, frail, and grotesquely hideous bit of humanity that the doctors declared he could not possibly live to grow up.

A recent traveler in a Corsican village says he saw a troop of young girls carrying on their heads jars containing five or six gallons of water. Before them marched their male relatives bearing flaming torches to light the burden bearers on their way.

When tempted to buy largely of any highly praised and highly priced novelty in flowers, fruits or vegetables get some plant, seed or nursery catalogue printed a dozen years ago and figure out what percentage of the new introductions for that year have fulfilled the fair promise made by their disseminators.

An incident happened on Broadway, N. Y., a few days ago which serves to illustrate the mysterious origin of some fires. A girl was sweeping a room with a carpet sweeper, when she noticed smoke coming from it. On examination she discovered that a match had been lighted by the revolution of the brush inside the sweeper.

It is said the stories which have the largest popular sale of any are those which have "The Duchess" for an author. The identity has been carefully concealed. The books are originally published in London by different firms, through whom American publishers of advanced sheets have dealt. All efforts to get at the writer have failed.

A woman in Springfield, Ohio, has invented and patented an overshoe of cloth, which can be made nearly as small as the ordinary shoe. The sole, shank and heel is one piece. The shoe is light, comfortable and warm. She has also invented a screw with four-pointed heads, which screws into the sole and prevents all danger of slipping, either on the ice, car tops or elsewhere.

During a very tedious ride on a Southern railroad the passengers, tired, dirty, and thirsty, all berated the company with the exception of one single passenger. His fellow passengers commented on this, and asked him why he didn't denounce the road too. "It would be hardly fair," he replied, "as I am traveling on a free pass; but if they don't do better pretty soon blame me if I don't go out and buy a ticket and join you."

Sir John Lubbock told a story in his speech at Shrewsbury which can have no personal application to himself. It was about a traveler who revisited a New Zealand village and inquired after a friend—a leading Maori Liberal and a member of the local Peace Society, it is believed. The reply was discouraging, "Ah," said the village chief, with resignation, "he gave us so much good advice that we had to put him to death mercifully."—St. James' Gazette.

The following is a list of the twelve greatest paintings, according to a New York art critic: 1. Ruben's Descent from the Cross. 2. Rafael's Sistine Madonna. 3. Da Vinci's Last Supper. 4. Rafael's Transfiguration. 5. Domenichino's Last Communion of St. Gerome. 6. Gkido's Aurora. 7. Murillo's Immaculate Conception. 8. Michael Angelo's Last Judgment. 9. Volterra's Descent from the Cross. 10. Titian's Assumption of the Virgin. 11. Gnido's Beatrice Cenci. 12. Correggio's Nativity.

Charles L. Webster, who is to publish General Grant's book, has the draft of the terms of the surrender at Appomattox Court House carefully preserved in a glass case like a folding slate. It consists of two sheets of yellowish paper covered with Grant's writing, and showing but few corrections. Sunk in the frame is the gold pen with which the document was written, and its holder. The only signature is that of Grant, although it has been the prevailing impression that Gen. Lee also signed the agreement.

A letter from Mexico says the poverty of the country may be traced directly to the slovenly system of farming which prevails. The agricultural resources are enormous. Though only one-fifth of the best land in the great plateau is under cultivation, it supports millions of people with a style of farming that would produce starvation in the best sections of New York or Pennsylvania. The Mexican's sole conception of the utility of plowing is to scratch up enough loose dirt to cover the seed: in a great majority of cases the ground is never touched after planting.

The diversions of the old Kaiser William have always been manly, and in striking contrast to those of his Bavarian neighbor, which are taken in solitude and in as much gloom as is compatible with their enjoyment. Perhaps there are few odder figures in history than that of the strange monarch, who may—or strictly speaking, may not—be seen occasionally in the Munich opera house having one of Wagner's lyric dramas all to himself. This potentate is the "Jack Horner" of royalty, who takes his Christmas pie into the corner and eats it by himself.

Job H. Jackson, president of the Delaware car-works, made a remarkable address to the young men of Wilmington on business success. Among his illustrations were S. F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph; George Stephenson, John Wanamaker, Alexander T. Stewart, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Peter Cooper, H. B. Claflin, Senator Brown, of Georgia, who, he says, "could not read at manhood, but with such odds became a governor, judge, and senator;" ex-Senator Davis, of West Virginia, who started life as a brakeman; Austin Corbin, Sherburne S. Merrill, and John Roach.

A young woman resident of Dalton, N. H., is now rapidly recovering from a singular illness. Over a year ago she had several teeth extracted by a dentist while under the influence of chloroform, and immediately afterward she was seized with a bad cough and gradually wasted and took her bed, as it was supposed, in consumption. Several physicians examined her case, one of whom attributed her illness to an ulcer in the throat and gave her a remedy. The medicine resulted in a severe paroxysm of coughing, during which she threw out a tooth that had lodged in her throat while she was chloroformed and remained, nearly costly her her life.

Some Characters at the Exposition.

From an illustrated paper on the New Orleans Exposition, by Eugene V. Smalley, in the June Century, we quote the following anecdotes of some of the types seen at the fair: "The odd characters at the fair are the terror of exhibitors. A Cincinnati furniture-maker discovered a countryman from Arkansas whittling a handsome mahogany cabinet 'to see what the wood was like.' The man's knowledge of furniture was evidently limited to articles which could not be damaged by a reasonable use of the jack-knife. Another exhibitor, who had fitted up a room with the finest specimens of his art, was horrified to find an old lady eating her lunch of fried chicken seated in one of his satin upholstered chairs. 'What's the cheer good for if it ain't to set down in?' she placidly remarked, in reply to his earnest request that she would go somewhere else with her victuals. The same exhibitor one day found that some visitor to his alcoves had left a token of approval on the polished surface of a costly mantel, in the words 'This is pretty good' scratched with a knife.

"The Turks who sell olive-wood, beads, and other trinkets 'from Jerusalem'—all made in Paris—are picturesque additions to the permanent personnel of the fair, though their genuineness, like that of their wares, will not always bear inspection. An amusing scene occurred one day at one of these Oriental bazaars. A tall man, with a rural air, stopped before the stand and appeared to take a lively interest, not in the goods, but in the features of one of the salesmen in scarlet fez and baggy trousers. He surveyed the Oriental in front and in profile, and then, slapping him on the shoulder, exclaimed, 'Hello, Jake, when did you come from Indiana?' The Turk from Indiana acknowledged his old acquaintance and begged that he would not 'give him away.'"

Proper Treatment for Coughs.

That the reader may fully understand what constitutes a good Cough and Lung Syrup, we will say that Tar and Wild Cherry is the basis of best remedies yet discovered. These ingredients with several others equally as efficacious, enter largely into Dr. Bosanko's Cough and Lung Syrup, thus making it one of the most reliable now on the market. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. Samples free. Sold by G. W. Crozier. 2

J. L. Newberry's house on Main street has been repainted and otherwise fitted up so to make a much better appearance.

Thanksgiving service at the Congregational church to-day at ten o'clock. Rev. J. T. Iddings will deliver the address.

The historical society have secured Hon. J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, to deliver a lecture Friday evening next. Subject, "Abraham Lincoln."

L. S. Benham sold a large quantity of very fine honey in town last week. He produced over 2,000 pounds from 30 swarms this past season.

Mrs. W. C. Mears is preparing the operatta of Red Riding Hood to be presented at Lewis' Hall, Boyne City, on Friday evening of this week.

The property of the Bridge street house is being inventoried preparatory to a change of owners. Further particulaas of the transfer will be given next week.

At their last meeting the village council passed a resolution offering three dollars to the first team that will arrive at the engine house when an alarm is given and take the engine to a fire.

Mr. Wm. Mears, of Ellsworth, fell down a well recently, sustaining serious injuries. He caught on a partially completed wall before he reached the bottom else he would have been instantly killed.

Archie Miller, of Traverse City, and A. H. Dane, of Lansing, drove through from Traverse City yesterday, returning this morning. Mr. Dane is traveling in the interest of E. Bement & Sons, manufacturers of agricultural implements.

A number of our delinquent subscribers have made a generous response to our request for some cash but others are still in arrears, some of whom must come to the front pretty soon. All who are a year or more behind will be dropped on the first of January if they do not make some effort to pay up. Look at the time on your address label and see how you stand.

Archie Miller and Miss Celia Bryant, of Traverse City, were married recently, but the matter was kept very quiet. Some of the boys were chafing him about it yesterday, but he bears up under it well. He is evidently prospering, as he is preparing to engage in the grocery business at Traverse City soon. His friends here wish him as full measure of success in his business relations, as he has received in his matrimonial engagements.

J. A. Bacot, has just completed a good, substantial dock, 140 feet front, and 40 feet into the lake, which he claims is the best dock on Pine Lake. He intends to fill it this winter with the best wood on Pine Lake, and next summer will make things lively on his side of the lake. The old gent seems to have taken a new lease of life this fall, and is planning and pushing things better than he has been able to during the past two years.

We omitted last week to mention the job of painting done by Mr. Jas. Hemmings on our postoffice front, whereby it was made very bright and pretty, and has received numerous congratulations, some even claiming to believe the outfit was entirely new. Mr. H. used Sherwin-Williams colors, from L. D. Bartholomew & Co., and made his selections to harmonize with the style of paper already on the walls, with pleasing effect. It will be an excellent recommend for him to those wanting inside or outside decorations.

If any reader of the JOURNAL should be approached by the "Bohemian oat" swindlers, be warned in time and have nothing to do with them. No matter how plausible the object, and the "big money" in it, give them the cold shoulder. Don't be induced to sign any contract or any other paper. If you do you will rue it. The whole "Bohemian oat" gang are on the "make," and the farmer who deals with them will sooner or later find himself swindled.

We have several times mentioned the fact that at different times the waters of the bay near the mouth of Boardman river are considerably disturbed, apparently by the escape of gas from the bottom of the bay. Yesterday this disturbance was noticed in the morning, and continued nearly all day. At times the escaping gas threw the water up in jets, some observers say, to a height af four feet. It is a singular phenomena and should be investigated.—Traverse Eagle.

Frank Hines' show window is again an object of great attraction. Dave Bradbeer has put up a case of photo work, and Frank has combined with the exhibit a few samples of very fine albums,—just to show the combination in their true effects,—winning expressions of admiration from all who pass. Dave says Frank's albums are the finest Christmas presents he ever saw, but thinks they are not complete without a half dozen cabinet photos to go with them.

Capt. Vanderhoef expects to take the Friant to Grand Haven this week. He came here in the spring before the buds opened, and has stayed until the trees are again bare. He has made more regular time and missed fewer trips on account of bad weather than any other boat on the lakes, and his competition has given Charlevoix a better service than she ever before enjoyed. Our people cannot do better than wish Capt. Vanderhoef and his steamer Friant all prosperity, and an early return for next year's trade.

The Historical society met last week with Mr. and Mrs. C. Y. Cook. The program included a guitar duet by Al. Washburn and Maud Loveday, a reading by R. W. Kane, entitled "Maunchausen and the Player," a vocal solo by Al. Washburn, and a guitar solo by Miss Maud Loveday. Dr. Carlstein continued his review of the life of Napoleon, which was listened to with much interest. Instead of the usual weekly meeting next Friday evening, the members will listen to a lecture by Hon. J. M. Rice, of Cadillac, at the Congregational church. Subject; "Abraham Lincoln."

We understand from a reliable source that there was held in Grand Rapids this week, a conference meeting of stockholders and officers of the G. R. & I. R. R. and citizens interested in the development of the country lying around Pine and Torch lakes, and that it has been definitely decided to establish and build a branch of the road north from Traverse City to Elk Rapids and Charlevoix, and returning to Ironton, bridge the arm, and run through Boyne City, connecting again with the main line near Boyne Falls. By this arrangement the railroad company will not only open up a rich country, adding largely to their business, but will also transfer their heavy freight business over more level track and avoid the heavy grade (over 800 feet) between Boyne Falls and Elmira. The intention now is to have the line completed and in operation before the close of navigation next year.

"It has been asserted that the board of supervisors, at their recent session, passed several exorbitant bills because they dared not do otherwise, having reference of course to the county seat question."—Sentinel. What a humiliating confession this is from the "official organ" of the "representatives" of the people! And how proud those supervisors and others in favor of removing the county seat from East Jordan to Boyne City must be of their champion which thus openly and publicly admits them guilty of offering bribes and prostituting their official position in order to try to carry a point which must after all be left to the votes of a majority of the people of the whole county.—When the board lets that and every other question rest on its own merits, and each member works for the greatest permanent good to his constituents, the question of removal and of economy will readily adjust themselves to the wishes of the majority. The people are not to be blinded by any such false notions.

DRY GOODS.

We offer a large invoice of woolen goods, dress goods, underwear, hosiery, flannels, etc. Suitable for winter wear.

These goods were bought at bottom figures during the summer, and before the late advance in values, which at present is from 15 to 20 per cent.

We shall give our trade the entire benefit of our fortunate purchases. Now is the time to lay in Winter Supplies cheaper than goods have ever before been offered. Do not expend a dollar before at least looking over our Stock and Prices.

CLOAKS. CLOAKS.

We are showing an elegant new line of Cloaks at fully one third lower prices than last season.

TEAS.

MAYFLOWER TEA.—OUR OWN IMPORTATION. Another Invoice of Spring pickings just received. The only strictly pure uncolored Japan Tea in the market.

A few weeks ago we placed on sale 25 chests of new 50 cent Japan Tea at THIRTY-FIVE cents, just for fun. Only a few packages of this Tea are left, and we shall hereafter limit the quantity to 5 pounds. Not more than 5 pounds sold to any one buyer.

We desire to return thanks to our many friends, for their liberal patronage of the past year. OUR SALES for the past month were ONE THIRD GREATER than for the corresponding time last year. With a gratifying increase of business we are satisfied with a very small profit margin.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magizine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment, or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Address, The Independent, 251 Broadway, New York City.

BY NEGLECT

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till soon an inflamed condition exists, that powerful remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's cough balsam which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even those who are but the wrecks of their former selves receive wonderful help. In croup and whooping cough it is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

THOROUGHLY TRIED.

After many years of experience in my own family and upon my horses and cattle I am constrained to say that Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the most complete remedy for the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, sore throat, &c., in the human family and of bone spavin, sweeny, ringbone, spavins, bruises, on horses; caked bag, sore teats &c., on cattle, that I have ever known and take pleasure in recommending to others. CAPTIVE.

BY WILLIAM HAUGHTON.

I saw a sad sweet face to-day
Pre sed to the window pane,
Soft, la nid eyes of dark, dark gray,
Tr at in ering looked far, far away
Ac oss the summer plain.

So sad the cheek, so thin and white,
So wan the childish brow,
That as I sat and mose to-night
I see them in the pale dim light;
They haunt my memory now.

The flowers were nodding to and fro,
Their rose-tipped leaves apart,
While sang the brooklet soft and low
The childhood songs she used to know,
Back to her listening heart.

The scene around was wondrous fair,
By vale and river's brim;
Soft summer fragrance filled the air,
And still the white cheek rested there
Till the sweet eyes grew dim.

That vision from the far blue skies,
What dream of hill and dale
Come with those voiceful memories
To light awhile the pensive eyes
And flush a cheek so pale.

A prisoned heart, in sad unrest—
Poor heart, so lone and low,
Fain would I lift the to my breast,
And bear thee to some grassy nest
Where purple violets blow.

The longing, lingering, lonely look;
The wan, sad cheek so white,
The heart that heard the singing brook,
The eyes that sought the shadowy nook,
Are in my dreams to-night.

HAROLD'S MISTAKE.

BY LIZZIE VAN DERVORT.

A bright moonlight night and a gay party. Peals of laughter in all keys float through the keen frosty air as sleigh-load after sleigh-load drive away from a brightly lit mansion, until the street seems filled with the dashing sleighing party.

One, a small shell-like creation drawn by a single black horse, leads the party. Its occupants are Mr. Harold Greystone and his sister, Miss Nellie. Mr. Greystone, after wrapping his sister in the fur robes, devotes himself to putting his horse at a speed that promises to leave the remainder of the party in the distance. For some reason, Mr. Greystone does not seem to share the exuberant spirits of the rest of the party. On the contrary, he seems a good deal put out, to say the least, and his usually good-humored countenance is overcast. His heavy black brows are drawn together, and in spite of the sweeping umstache one can note the firm expression that lurks around the month.

Altogether he looks very grim, Miss Nellie thinks as she turns herself and surveys him.

She is very small herself, and being buried to the chin in wraps, it is a work of time to turn herself sufficiently to see his face. Noting its expression, she began cautiously:

"Harold, ain't you driving the horses too fast? See, the others are away behind."

"We will arrive all the sooner for supper, sis," was the reply.

"O, well, but the oysters are not put on to cook yet, so we needn't hurry on that score."

Harold reluctantly pulled up his horse a little, and, looking back, he growled:

"That fool, Douglass, will dawdle enough for the whole party. It's a grand wonder he would consent to drive a load. However, if my Lady Blanche wanted to go in a load he would not object. It's a mystery to me how as sensible a gal as Blanche Leslie can tolerate such an idiot in her presence. But, pshaw, there is no mystery about it. If a fellow has a full purse it makes no difference whether he possesses any brains or not. G'lang, Jim," slapping the horse savagely with the reins.

"Harold, did you ask Blanche to go with you?"

"No, by Jove, I didn't. I am not quite such a fool as that. My Lady Blanche will find that she cannot twist every one around her finger like Douglass."

"I don't think you need be so hard on Blanche. She isn't crazy after rich people at all. We are not rich, and I am sure she is always goodness itself, though you do put on awful airs and treat her like she was the veriest stranger. As for Mr. Douglass, almost everyone likes him, if he is a little soft. But Blanche isn't the least bit in love with him."

"No, not in love with him, but his pocket-book. I never supposed she was in love with him."

"Harold Greystone, I am ashamed of you. You know there isn't a word of truth in what you say. There, I am glad we have got there at last. I feel chilly in spite of wraps."

Harold lifted his charge from his sleigh and placed her on the steps of the hotel, where the party have planned a dance, to be followed by an oyster supper. The other sleighs drive up, and directly the hotel is alive with the merry party. The evening is heartily enjoyed by all, with the exception, perhaps, of Harold Greystone. The sight of Miss Leslie smilingly accepting the attentions offered her by young Douglas rendered the evening anything but pleasant to him. It is true he had no right to complain.

Nellie was right when she said his own pride had erected the barrier between them. The fact that while Miss Leslie's parents are grown wealthier within late years, his own had grown poorer, was obstacle enough to Harold. He did not fancy the name of fortune-hunter. He told himself she had totally forgotten the old days when they were on an equal footing, and, no doubt, she was ashamed to remember her preference for himself. But he would not presume on that now. Douglass might win her, and he would not lay a straw in his way.

All this and a great deal more ran through his head as he gaily talked and danced with a particular rival of Blanche's, who seemed determined to bring him to her feet.

When at last the party concluded to turn their steps homeward, Harold seized his own particular charge from a crowd of hooded and muffled figures and speedily had her in the sleigh, completely enveloped in the robes.

"Now, sis, remember you are not to move or hardly speak on the way home, else you will be laid up with an awful cold and have a red nose, and then you can not see your dear Fred when he arrives to-morrow. After dancing so much and eating a warm supper you must be doubly careful, and if I hear a sneeze, home you go for the rest of the winter, my child;" which cheerful remarks he emphasized by a gentle shaking.

"You need not be absolutely dumb. Just nod your head to signify your approval of my remarks. Did you have a good time?"

A perceptible moving back and forth was his answer.

"Yes, every one had a splendid time, myself in particular. I entertained myself watching Douglas play the clown for Miss Leslie's amusement. He did it to perfection. By George, I should have thought so many sweet smiles would have made her sick. Shows how much a woman can stand when she makes up her mind to it, and I suppose her mind is made up, don't you?"

A decided negative is indicated by his companion's movements.

"Humph! I firmly believe she intends to marry Softhead (his own name for young Douglass) sooner or later, probably sooner. Why don't you think she does, sis? You can unloosen that shawl or scarf, or whatever it is, enough to let me hear the sound of your voice. I'm getting lonesome. What did you say?"

"I don't think Blanche likes Mr. Douglass very well," was the barely audible reply.

"The deuce you don't! O, well! but you are mistaken, I know. Don't she show him all sorts of favors, dancing with him repeatedly, even giving him the dance she used to always give to me and that I should have enjoyed so much to-night?"

"Did you ask her for it?" murmured the figure at his side.

"Ask her for it? Not I. Though, to tell the truth, Nellie, I was awfully tempted to. If she had vouchsafed me one friendly glance I would undoubtedly have made a fool of myself."

Some violent emotion seemed to be agitating his companion, and her struggles attracted the attention of Mr. Greystone; he shook her vehemently.

"Now, Nellie, I positively forbid you taking off a single shawl," and he attempted to readjust her wraps, but the lady resisted his well-intended efforts and in a trice had torn the veil from her face and displayed to his astonished gaze the laughing countenance of Blanche Leslie.

"Pray, go on with your remarks, Mr. Greystone. Your style, though a little peculiar, is nevertheless highly entertaining. I don't know when I have enjoyed a ride so much."

"Ain't you afraid we shall upset if we don't keep to the road?" for the horse was following its own sweet will and meandering along the roadside in an aimless fashion, while his driver stared at his companion in utter amazement.

"What—an—utter—idiot I have been," his power of speech coming back to him by jerks.

"Where is Nellie, and how on earth did you get here, Blanche?"

"O, Nellie wanted to ride home with the load—I think she was tired of your company, sir—and I hadn't the heart to refuse her when she wanted me to take her place."

"And you have been listening to all my idiotic talk! What must you think of me? Can you ever forgive me for the way I have talked, and," laying his hand on her arm, "tell me, Blanche, that you loathe and despise that fellow Douglass."

"But I do not loathe and despise Mr. Douglass. On the contrary, I consider him one of the pleasantest young men I know. But what do you want to talk of Mr. Douglass for? Are you so infatuated with him that you cannot talk of anything else?"

"I infatuated with him! I heartily detest the man. I wanted to knock him down every time he looked at you to-night. Blanche, darling," slipping his arm adroitly around her waist, "tell me, do you care even a little for me? Are you perfectly indifferent to me, when I have worshiped you all my life?"

"It would serve you right if I hated you, and I don't see why I don't, after the way you have treated me—never to come near me or speak to me at all," with a most reproachful glance.

"But you don't hate me, do you Blanche?"

"No—I don't," she confessed.

Mr. Greystone's horse lagged in a most unaccountable fashion the last half of the way home, but everything must have been very harmonious, for the first time Mr. Greystone met Mr. Douglass, he hailed him with such hearty good humor as to till that gentleman with wonder, and he marveled greatly what had come over that gruff fellow, Greystone. "By Jove, he never used to hardly speak to a fellow."

The Woman Went Back on William.

One of the first men to locate in Franklin County, Ga., was William Settles, a brawny blacksmith who lived in the neighborhood of Blacks Creek. He, together with others, was captured by the Indians once, but being a blacksmith, he did not share the fate of most prisoners. He finally made his escape when most of the braves of the tribe were out on the war-path. Some time after his escape a young lady in the neighborhood was captured by the Indians. Settles, being enamored of the young lady, started in immediate pursuit, with his rifle and dog as his only companions. He followed the Indians several days, and hovered around the camp at night, but found no opportunity of rescuing the fair prisoner until the seventh night. The Indians, believing themselves free from pursuit, left their captive in care of two warriors, and went to meet other members of the tribe. Settles approached as near the camp as he could with safety, got the two Indians in line with his heavy rifle, and sent an ounce ball through their bodies, killing them instantly. He untied the fainting girl, put her upon his horse, selected a fleet pony from among the herd belong to the Indians, and reached home with his fair charge in safety. It is said that the course of true love never did run smooth, and the adage proved true in Settles' case. The girl to whom he had rendered such singular service, and for whom he had dared so much, turned her back upon him, and refused to accept him as her husband. He had better luck in subsequent wooing, and married a charming woman some years after the above occurrence.—Atlanta Constitution.

Little Georgie at Church.

"Well, Georgie," said Mrs. Jinks, on the return of her youngest from church, "did you pay attention to the sermon?"

"Oh, yes, ma; and they had the funniest dressed man I ever saw. He was up on a platform, and did all the talking and he wore his night-gown, and had his pants tied 'round his neck."—Chicago Rambler.

CHOLERA'S TRAVELS.

Courses the Plague Has Pursued in the Past.

[From the Inter Ocean.]

In 1832 cholera prevailed in France to such an extent that 120,000 deaths occurred within the year, 7,000 of which were in the short space of eighteen days. In the spring of the next year it appeared in England and in Ireland. From Liverpool, Cork, Limerick, and Dublin five vessels of emigrants sailed for Quebec, and 17[illegible] deaths occurred during the passage. These ships were put in quarantine at Grosse Isle, but on June 7 a vessel conveyed a load of these emigrants, with their baggage, to Quebec and Montreal. Cases of cholera occurred at Quebec the next day. From Montreal the emigrants were forwarded by the emigrant society as fast as they arrived, and the pestilence was sown at each stopping place. The epidemic in that way reached Detroit, continued west along the great lakes, and in September the military posts on the Upper Mississippi were attacked, and the most fatal effects were displayed when the disease reached Fort Dearborn. The infection was both direct and indirect between the sick and the well. An infected mattress thing from a passing vessel was picked up by a man, and both he and his wife died of cholera.

In October, 1832, the brig Amiael, with 108 persons on board, sailed from New York for New Orleans. The disease appeared on board the sixth day out. The brig was stranded on Folly Island, ten miles from Charleston, and in two days the disease began spreading among the inhabitants of that island. Before that there had never been a case of cholera within two hundred miles of Folly Island. An emigrant ship having cholera on board reached New York, whence the disease spread up the Hudson, and was carried southwardly to Philadelphia, and thence to the West.

In 1833 the disease broke out in Havana, whence it was carried to Mexican and American towns on the Gulf of Mexico, and up the Mississippi and Ohio as far as the western border of Pennsylvania. The next year there was a second outbreak at Quebec, occasioned by a vessel of emigrants coming in. The disease prevailed in Canada and New York, and thence spread all over the country in 1835-36. Then there was a gradual subsidence and the disease disappeared for nearly ten years.

In 1845, however, it entered upon its old path, and reached England in October, beginning with Sunderland, the very town it first visited in 1831. Two vessels sailed from Havre, one for New York, the other for New Orleans, both carrying German emigrants. The New York boat occasioned an epidemic in the quarantine grounds. There was no quarantine at New Orleans, the sick of the vessels were conveyed to hospitals, and a severe epidemic ensued. A boat from New Orleans to Memphis carried the disease to the latter point, and the next spring it spread thence to St. Louis, Cincinnati, and the whole Mississippi Valley. In October it reached Sacramento by means of overland emigrants, and San Francisco by steamer.

In 1849 the disease reappeared in New York, and 5,000 persons died. The disease rested until 1853, when it broke out in Teheran, Persia, destroying 11,000 persons, and reached France, where 114,000 died, and England, where there were 16,000 deaths. In 1854 emigrants introduced it into New York, whence it was carried to Philadelphia, extended to many towns in New England, and was borne along the western channels of emigration. There was a rest until 1864, when the cholera broke out among the pilgrims to Mecca. It reached Europe in 1865, and was thence borne by the usual means to North America and the West Indies. In 1866 it was carried from Halifax in troop ships to New York and the various Southern ports, from whence its progress could be traced to Texas and the Gulf States, and to the towns of the Mississippi and Missouri.

The last appearance of cholera in the United States was in 1873, when it occurred at three points far distant from each other, being introduced in the effects of emigrants. These were Carthage, Ohio; Crow River, Minn., and Yankton, Dakota. In each place twenty-four hours after the poison particles were liberated the disease appeared. It is thus shown that cholera is not general in this country from any local conditions, but depends upon the introduction of the specific poison of the disease. Water is the main channel through which the infectious principles of the disease are spread, but the particles can also be conveyed in clothing, proving fatal when liberated.

The Benefits of the Civil War.

There was no time during the rebellion when I did not think, and often say, that the South was more to be benefited by defeat than the North. The latter had the people, the institutions, and the territory to make a great and prosperous nation. The former was burdened with an institution abhorrent to all civilized peoples not brought up under it, and one which degraded labor, kept it in ignorance, and enervated the governing class. With the outside world at war with this institution, they could not have extended their territory. The labor of the country was not skilled, nor allowed to become so. The whites could not toil without becoming degraded, and those who did were denominated 'poor white trash.' The system of labor would have soon exhausted the soil and left the people poor. The non-slaveholders would have left the country, and the small slaveholder must have sold out to his more fortunate neighbors. Soon the slaves would have outnumbered the masters, and not being in sympathy with them, would have risen in their might and exterminated them. The war was expensive to the South as well as to the North, both in blood and treasure, but it was worth all it cost.—Gen. U. S. Grant.

Not as Easy as It Looked.

It was the first evening I was in a gondola, and, after admiring the skill and ease with which the gondolier manipulated his oar, I was struck with the idea of attempting the feat myself. Nothing looked easier than to imitate that swarthy Italian, to stand up on the rear end of the gondola and dip the oar in and out of the water.

"You look tired," I said to the gondolier; "if you like you may rest a while and I will row for you."

Had I offered to stand on my head and walk to Milan the man could not have looked more astonished.

"You, signore!" he exclaimed. "Why, you couldn't even learn to stand up here under two months."

"Pooh," said I. "I have rowed boats on the Mississippi—from Memphis as far as Hopefield. Do you think I don't know how to work this lumbering thing on the smoother waters of Venice?"

The gondolier smiled a very unsatisfactory smile.

"Ah, bnono—good, signore. I take you where you have a nice swim. Signore, you take clothes off."

This was consoling advice to a confident oarsman, not very flattering to my pride, still I thought I might as well follow his advice; so he slowly pulled over the lagoons between the cemetery and Muran's. I divested myself of all my clothing and prepared for a first lesson in the Venetian art of gondoliering. As I have said, it looks to be the easiest thing in the world. The gondolier stands at the extreme end of the long, slim boat, and the oar rests in an oar-lock that stands up from the deck a foot or eighteen inches. There is nothing to hold the oar in the lock, but this I did not notice until I tried myself. It stayed there so quietly and pleasantly as long as the Italian was at the stern that the idea never entered my head but that it belonged there and stayed there of its own accord. Woful mistake!

I had scarcely taken position on the stern of the boat and made my first stroke when the oar flew out of that lock in a miraculous manner that I am to this minute unable to understand, and I flew out of the boat into the water. Then it was that I thanked that gondolier for his timely warning and advice. The knapsack traveler does not carry with him a very extensive ward[illegible] wate[illegible] been[illegible] it wi[illegible] good[illegible] dola[illegible] the s[illegible] atten[illegible] and [illegible] that[illegible] look[illegible] turned the oar over to the proper hands.—Memphis Avalanche.

Enough to Vex a Saint.

"Of all the men I ever hearn tell of, he's the beaten' of them all. Last night when he come home to supper he'd been a-drinkin' beer till he smelt worse than a Dutchman, and I telled him so, and I telled him he oughten to go out and eat with the hogs, and he never said a word, but just sot and sulked. He's awful tryin' to my patience!

"Well, arter supper he got up and put on his hat. 'You ain't a-goin' out, be you?' says I. 'Yes,' says he. 'Where?' says I. 'Where 'taint so noisy,' says he. 'I hope you'll be arrested!' says I, and out he went, leavin' me that mad I couldn't eat. 'I'll give you a piece of my mind afore I go to bed,' says I to myself, and I sot up till arter midnight, and then I put a shawl over my head and went down to the station-house. 'Where's Jim?' says I to the pleceman. 'I dunno,' says he. 'Ain't he arrested?' says I. 'I dunno,' says he. 'Can't you find out?' says I. 'Yes,' says he, and he runged up the Central Station, and they said he wasn't there. Then he runged up the Gratiot Station, and they said he wasn't there. Then he runged up the Trubble Avenue Station, and they said he was there; so I went down there, and there was Jim a-locked up in a little bit of a place.

"'So you went and got arrested, did ye?' says I. 'What did you do that for?' says I.

"'You hoped I would,' says he, 'and I didn't wanter disrpint ye,' says he.

The Rock-Painting Crank.

Many people are familiar with the sentences: "Prepare for eternity," and other words that appear upon the rocks in Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts. But few people know who paints them. It is George Mayer, a German. He travels most of the time with his paint and brushes. He has put 2,700 sentences upon the rocks since January, and says that every one saves ten souls. He claimed to have saved 520 souls in Paterson, N. J., in one day. He sleeps in barns and gets no pay for his work; but he claims the Lord pays him. He says as soon as he goes to work at anything else the Lord tells him to go to painting again.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Politics Too Much for Him.

A lady on Fifth avenue, New York, quickly summoned a doctor:

"Oh, doctor, my husband is nearly dead. He attended a caucus last night. He made four speeches and promised to be with his fellow citizens again to-day. But, oh, doctor, he looks nearly dead."

"Has he been in politics long?"

"No, only last year. He worked hard for James McCaulay's election."

"He will get well, madam! He has a stomach for any disease, if he worked for him!"

Political life, of short or long duration, is very exhausting, as is evident from the great mortality which prevails among public men. Ex. U. S. Senator B. K. Bruce, who has been long in public life, says:

"The other day, when stepping into a car at a crossing, I found Dr. —— within, who eyed me up and down in a surprised way, remarking:

"'Why, Senator, how well you look!'

"'Well, I feel pretty well,' I answered."

The doctor uttered an incredulous reply, when the Senator frankly told him, in answer to an inquiry, that it was Warner's safe cure which accomplished for him what the profession had failed to do. Senator Bruce says his friends are very much astonished at this revelation of power.—The Globe.

A Kind-Hearted Texan.

Colonel McBride Sumpter, of Austin, while in New York, dropped into a fashionable restaurant, and having surprised his stomach with a small repast, asked the waiter what was the damage. On being told, Colonel Sumpter handed out a $5 bill, but on receiving back the change he made the ghastly discovery that there was a dime missing. He demanded an explanation from the waiter, who was a Frenchman.

"Ze dime is for my douceur,"

"I didn't order any, and I won't pay for it," retorted Sumpter.

"I mean, sore, ze dime is for my pour boire."

"It is for your poor boy, is it? That's a different thing. I didn't know you had sickness in your family. Here's a quarter for him, poor feller."

And, with the consciousness of having relieved the sufferings of the sick and afflicted, Colonel Sumpter put his hat on the side of his head and sauntered out of the hostlery.—Texas Siftings.

Mrs. Runkle's Museum.

Mrs. B. B. Runkle, of Mexico, Mo., has a pet crow that can swear in all foreign languages, and when the saucy bird was heard making a great to-do out in the yard of the lady's residence this afternoon the investigation resulted in beholding "Jim Crow" making full tilt for the house, with a large snake in pursuit. The reptile chased the bird over the porch and into the hall, when, becoming frightened at the shrieks of Mrs. Runkle and her colored servant, it stopped and coiled up, spreading itself out flat, somewhat resembling a plate. In spite of its ugly appearance, Mrs. Runkle grabbed a door-weight and killed the snake, which proved to be a spreading viper a little over three feet in length, and one of the most venomous reptiles known. When the snake was struck a live frog jumped out of its mouth, which frightened the lady more than the reptile itself. The snake, frog and crow are all on exhibition at the Runkle residence.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Eye Doctors of India.

The itinerant eye-doctor of India performs his operations with a confidential celerity which the more civilized oculist would call recklessness. As he enters a town he bawls: "Do you want back your sight?—one rupee only." When a customer appears he takes out his penknife and performs the operation while standing in the open square. Then he binds up the wound, tells his patient to keep in the dark for a fortnight, and pockets his rupee. And this proceeding, it is said, is almost always successful.

"I never made but one mistake in Dr. Shorthand's prescriptions," remarked the pharmacist, looking at one bottle while he reached up for another. "How was that?" asked the customer. "I put up what he wanted," replied the man of drugs. "Usually I try to read his prescription and always get it wrong, but that night the gas went out and I put it up in the dark."—Burdette.

A MAN in Syracuse collected accounts of the lives of ten thousand centenarians. He found that six thousand of them came from Connecticut, and that the majority of them were women. Fifty single women came up to the century mark, but only twelve bachelors. One hundred ministers lived to be 100, and only thirty doctors, ten lawyers, and ten actors. A centenarian newspaper man could not be discovered.

"I have used your Athlophoros for rheumatism with success, and would recommend it to all afflicted with that disease," is the testimony of Oscar Allen, Des Moines, Iowa, traveling agent for Warder, Bushnell & Glessner, of Chicago.

THE HOTEL CLERK'S STORY.

It is the fashion among many so-called humorists to represent the American hotel clerk as a lordly and supercilious being, who, with a headlight diamond in his immaculate shirt front and a look of contemptuous disdain upon his classic features, sends tired and travel-stained arrivals off to impossible regions in the fifteenth story, or haughtily refuses them any lodging whatever.

The fact is that the true American hotel clerk is an invaluable feature of our civilization. The time of the arrivals and departures of all the trains on all the railroads is at his tongue's end; he is full of information about what is interesting at the theaters, and of stories of actors and actresses who have stopped at his hotel, and withal a kindly man, who, if the house is crowded, will let you sleep on a billiard table. Mr. W. P. Hammond, who is clerk at the West End Hotel, 503 and 505 West Madison street, Chicago, is of this obliging disposition and is always ready to give any information regarding the hotel to those who seek it. The accomplished landlady of the West End has recently suffered with rheumatism. The story of her cure is thus told by Clerk Hammond:

"Our landlady was taken with quite a severe attack of rheumatism in the lower limbs, suffering much pain and being scarcely able to walk. She heard of Athlophoros and of the cures it had effected, and sent me to the drug store to buy a bottle of it. I got it, and in half an hour's time after she had taken the first dose she felt relieved, and in a few days the rheumatism was entirely gone."

"How much did she take?"

"About one bottle."

"Has she had any return of the pain?"

"Not to my knowledge," replied Mr. Hammond, "and I am certain she would be likely to say something about it if she had. She speaks of Athlophoros in the highest terms, and has recommended it to many. In one case I remember the cure was as quick as in her own."

The accuracy of Clerk Hammond's statements is fully confirmed by the landlady herself, who is not averse to having it known how she was cured.

"I will tell you something about my cure," she said to a visitor who called to learn the facts in her case. "I was so lame and suffered so much pain that it was impossible for me to bend my limbs or walk around my room without taking hold of the back of a chair for support. My relief, after taking the first dose of Athlophoros, was almost immediate. In fact, after taking a few doses I was well and have not been troubled since. At the same time that I was suffering from the rheumatism, there was a lady boarding in my hotel who was suffering with facial neuralgia so much that it was impossible for her to sit up. I advised her to try my remedy, that being the same I have for Athlophoros. After she had taken two doses I saw a change for the better. My cook was suffering with rheumatism, and in the next thing I knew I saw him rushing down the street as fast as he could go to get a bottle for himself. My colored porter in the office cannot be shaken, and it a positive cure for two hours' headache, and Athlophoros is the best thing I know of for rheumatism. I cannot afford to suffer from rheumatism, neuralgia, or any such trouble while I can get a medicine like Athlophoros."

If you cannot get Athlophoros at your druggist, we will send it, express paid, on receipt of price, one dollar per bottle (six bottles, $5). We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he does not keep it in stock, do not be induced to take something else, but order at once from us. Athlophoros Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

MAX O'RELL says that London contains more Roman Catholics than Rome, more Jews than the whole of Palestine, more Irish than Dublin, more Scotchmen than Edinburgh, more Welshmen than Cardiff, and more country folks than the counties of Devon, Durham and Warwickshire put together. It has a birth in every five minutes; has seven accidents every day in its 8,000 miles of streets; has an average of forty miles of streets opened and 15,000 new houses every year. In 1885 there were added 22,110 new houses to the vast aggregate of dwellings which is called the metropolis, thus forming 368 new streets and one new square, covering a distance of sixty-six miles and eighty-four yards.

It Is a Fact

well established that consumption, if attended to in its first stages, can be cured. There is, however, no true and rational way to cure this disease, which is really scrofulous ulceration of the lungs, except through purifying the blood. Keep the liver in perfect order and pure blood will be the result. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," a purely vegetable compound does all this and more: while it purifies the blood it also builds up the system, strengthening it against future attacks of disease. Ask for Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Take no other. Of druggists.

have much difficulty in swallowing the huge, old-fashioned pill, but anyone can take Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are composed of highly concentrated vegetable extracts. For diseases of the liver and stomach, sick and bilious headache, etc., they have no equal. Their operation is attended with no discomfort whatever. They are sugar-coated and put up in glass vials.

Bilious, Intermittent, and Remittent Fevers, to which people who live near fresh water, during the warm and dry seasons, are particularly subject, are largely caused by a torpor of the digestive organs and a clogging up of the liver. "Prudent Use."

There should be extended through the community an all-pervading sense of the danger there is of falling into this sin. Intemperance is a disease as well as a crime, and were any other disease as contagious, of as marked symptoms and as mortal, to pervade the land, it would create universal consternation; for the plague is scarcely more contagious or deadly; and yet we mingle fearlessly with the diseased, and in spite of admonition we bring into our dwellings the contagion, apply it to the lip, and receive it into the system.

I know that much is said about the prudent use of ardent spirits; but we might as well speak of the prudent use of the plague—of fire handed prudently around among powder—of poison taken prudently every day—or of vipers and serpents introduced prudently into our dwellings, to glide about as a matter of courtesy to visitors, and of amusement to our children.

First or last, in spite of your prudence, the contagion will take—the fatal spark will fall upon the train—the deleterious poison will tell upon the system—and the fangs of the serpent will inflict death. There is no prudent use of ardent spirits, but when it is used as a medicine. All who receive it into the system are not destroyed by it. But if any vegetable were as poisonous to as many as the use of ardent spirits proves destructive, it would be banished from the table; it would not be prudent to use it at all. If in attempting to cross a river upon an elastic beam as many should fall in and be drowned as attempt to use spirits prudently and fail, the attempt to cross in that way would be abandoned—there would be no prudent use of that mode of crossing. The effect of attempting to use ardent spirits prudently is destructive to such multitudes as precludes the possibility of prudence in the use of it. When we consider the deceitful nature of this sin, and its irresistible power when it has obtained an ascendency, no man can use it prudently, or without mocking God can pray while he uses it, "lead us not into temptation." There is no necessity for using it at all, and that it is presumptuous to do so.

A wakeful recollection should be maintained of the distinction between intemperance and drunkenness. So long as men suppose that there is neither crime nor danger in drinking, short of what they denominate drunkenness, they will cast off fear and move onward to ruin by a silent, certain course, until destruction comes upon them, and they cannot escape. It should be known therefore and admitted that to drink daily, at stated times, any quantity of ardent spirits is intemperance, or to drink periodically as often as days, and times, and seasons, may furnish temptation and opportunity is intemperance. It may not be for any one time the intemperance of animal or mental excitement, but it is an innovation upon the system which can not fail to generate disease, and will not be pursued by one hundred men without producing many drunkards.

It is not enough, therefore, to erect the flag ahead, to mark the spot where the drunkard dies. It must be planted at the entrance of his course, proclaiming in waving capitals: "This is the way to death!!" Over the whole territory of "prudent use" it must wave and warn. For if we can not stop men in the beginning, we can not separate between that and the end. He who lets ardent spirits alone before it is meddled with, is safe, and he only. It should be in every family a contraband article, or if it be admitted, it should be allowed for medical purposes only It should be labeled as we label laudanum—and "Touch not, taste not, handle not," should meet the eye on every vessel which contains it.—[Extract from a sermon on intemperance, delivered by Lyman Beecher, D. D., in 1826.

My Boy, Do You Smoke?

The United States navy annually takes into its service a large number of apprentice boys, who are sent all over the world and taught to be thorough sailors. It has been the policy of the government since the war to educate the "blue jacket," up on the principle that the more intelligent a man he is, the better sailor he is likely to become. There is no ack of candidates for these positions Hundred of boys apply, but many are rejected because they cannot pass the physical examination. Major Houston one of the Marine Corps who is in charge of the Washington Navy Yard barracks, is the authority for the statement that one-fifth of all the boys examined are rejected on account of heart disease.

His first question to a boy who desires to enlist, is: "Do you smoke?" The invariable response is "No sir," but the telltale discoloration of the fingers at once shows the truth. The surgeons say that cigarette smoking by boys produces heart disease, and that in ninety nine cases in a hundred the rejection of would-be apprentices on account of this defect comes from excessive use of the milder form of this weed. This is a remarkable statement, coming, as it does, from so high an authority and based upon the results of actual examinations going on day after day, month after month. It should be a warning to parents that the deadly cigarette is sure to bring about incalculable injury to the young. A law passed restricting its use to the dudes would not, perhaps, bring popular disfavor, because it might reduce the number of these objects about our streets, but boys indulging in the cigarette ought to be treated to liberal doses of "rod in pickle" until the habit is thoroughly eradicated.—Scientific American.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Luclus H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petegrum, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows: The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 11th, 1885.

The Independent

The Largest, the Ablest, the Best

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY WEEKLY.

The most influential religious organ in the States.—The Spectator, London, Eng.

THE INDEPENDENT is one of the best papers in the world. Its good points are many and striking. They have only to be stated to be appreciated; and for proof of our claims appeal may be taken to any of the fifty-two issues for the year. Any number of The Independent will show that its contents are marked by—

ABILITY, VARIETY, AND INTEREST.—The great thinkers, the great story-writers, the great poets, men of the highest reputation in all departments of human knowledge, make up its list of contributors. Religion, philosophy, art, science, literature, travels, discoveries, stories, and all conceivable topics are embraced in the contents, and everybody, old or young, learned and unlearned, without regard to sex, employment, or condition, will find something of special interest in every issue.

COMPREHENSIVENESS.—It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined.

BREADTH, CANDOR, EARNESTNESS.—The Independent is tied to no denomination; it is the organ of no clique or party in state or church. It is free, therefore, to discuss all questions, and to speak its mind candidly. It is not swerved by fear or favor. It is a vigorous defender of the Evangelical faith, it preaches practical righteousness, and earnestly supports all moral reforms. All its columns—the advertising as well as the reading—are free from everything of doubtful or objectionable character. No matter what a person's religion, politics, or profession may be, if he desires to keep up with the times and know what the brightest minds are thinking of, the ablest pens are writing about, and what the world at large is doing—he should read The Independent.

More Protection Needed for the Millionaire Syndicate.

Through a system of laws, like, in their aims and results, and only unlike in their processes, the old kingly and imperial grants of monopolies to favored individuals and classes, there has come upon the fair face of this land of the people a growth of political and socialistic fungus, in the form of a moneyed aristocracy—fungi who love to be called capitalists.

Without the chivalric instincts or the bravery of the half savage oppressors of old, these men are as supercilious in their contempt of the masses, and as ruthless and corrupt, if not as direct, in their plunderings, as their prototypes in the art of looting the common people. The only difference is in method.

Force has been succeeded by fraud; sometimes legalized, but nevertheless fraud.

Under the pretense of being great public benefactors, they engage in enterprises by which, it is true, more wealth is aggregated in a community, but the wealth is poured into their pockets and does not circulate. It goes into the vaults of deathless corporations, and its natural distribution is prevented by unnatural laws, as its gathering by an exclusive class is legalized by protective legislation.

Steadily all but a small proportion of our population is being driven into the grand army of the dependent employed. Steadily the small proprietor of independent means is disappearing. Steadily every trade and manufacturing industry is being absorbed, and the next seizure, already conceived, is that of the farming industry.

Unless this tendency is checked, the farmer with his independent, though small, fortune will have to compete with combinations of capital practically unlimited, protected by corporate charters, whose interest it will be to destroy competition by temporarily measuring financial resources with him. The contest will be brief, and then the farmer must enter the ranks of the employed.

The tendency in this country is toward a community of corporations rather than to a continuance of a government of the people.

The democratic success of 1884 has called a halt; but it has also made the monopolists desperate in their efforts to throttle the popular will.

Unscrupulous in principal, with abundant means and ready tools, the moneyed power stops at nothing to gain its ends. Here in our midst we have a coterie, whose members can be counted on the fingers of one hand, who love to style themselves in the Governing Class.

They have been nursed by legislation and grown strong upon power, until the aggregation is a monster that menaces the rights and happiness of a free people.

There has been no fraud on the people during the last ten years past, that this syndicate has not applauded and gloried in, from the theft of the presidency down to the theft of a judgeship.

They have corrupted the state conventions of their own party.

They have shown their contempt of the people by forming a treasury, notoriously for the corruption of voters.

They have procured legislation which placed in the hands of their tools and creatures the control of the elective franchise, and denounced as scoundrels and swindlers all who opposed that infamous law.

They have slandered and vilified all opposed to their fraudulent and wicked conspiracies against the people.

They have sanctioned the vilest and darkest methods in use for the assassination of the private character of citizens contesting their schemes.

They have corrupted the municipal legislature in the interest of their monopolies.

They have secretly furnished the means, and consorted with thugs and representatives of the worst element of society, to the end that notorious corrupt men might be returned to the common council, while with pharisaical cant they professed a desire for reform.

They have over and over again got behind thimble-rigged transfers of their organ to avoid the public odium and contempt which their venom, malice, hypocracy, and falsehood sent out in the columns of that paper has brought upon that instrument of their will.

If intentions and an overt act nominate the criminal, they are assassins of the character of the President.

They are assassins of the reputation of the crippled soldier, Allen B. Morse, and they have endeavored through hirling hands to stab the character of all men who oppose them in this community.

Protective legislation has gone to great lengths in aid of these men.

Corporate power is impersonal, and the individuals behind it are free from legal responsibility.

The syndicate is great, and has for its shields all the cunning devices and dummies that great means, and subsidized intelligence, can manufacture or originate. But the moral responsibility of these men remains: sooner or later they will be held to the smallest measure, and the last jot and tittle of it.

I call their attention to it, so that they may spend the long hours of the coming winter evenings in devising some new code of laws by which they may be "protected" against this new kind of responsibility which is pressing closer and closer upon them.

The time may come, gentlemen, when legislatures will not be subservient to imperial power and imperial cash, or if subservient, when legislative protection will cease to protect. DON M. DICKINSON.

FRIEND STRANG:

The news received here last night of the death of vice president T. A. Hendricks has cast an indiscribable gloom over the entire city. This morning flags were placed at half mast over all public buildings and every evidence of deep and sincere mourning is seen on every side. Democrats and republicans alike, express deep regret at the untimely departure of a loved and respected leader and statesman. All public buildings, including the white house, are being elaborately draped in mourning today. Telegrams of condolence from prominent officials here were at once forwarded to Mrs. Hendricks last night upou receipt of the official bulletin announcing the vice president's death, and arrangements have already been made for senatorial and congressional committees to attend the funeral.

Speculation is rife as to the choice of a president of the senate to succeed Mr. Hendricks, but aside from a few spasmodical booms that virtually die before coming to light, the contest evidently stands between Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, and Senator John A. Logan, of Illinois. In either case or under any possible contingency the choice will undoubtedly fall upon a republican, and therefore but one life (that of president Cleveland) stands in the way of a republican president. A Guiteau or a Booth would quickly produce a reversal of the popular choice for president and return the country to the misrule of republicanism.

The gay season for society is about to open at the nation's capitol, and already the city papers are chronicling the return or arrival of fashion's favorites who are to be the leaders of the "circle" this winter.

But few congressmen have as yet put in an appearance and the usual excitement preceding the opening of congress are lacking.

The weather is delightfully pleasant and cool, and furs, overcoats and gloves are thus far a luxury and not a necessity. Two or three days of wet, disagreeable weather alone remind us that winter is at hand and summer costumes out of place.

So far as I am able to observe our old time friend, Hon. M. V. Montgomery, has been doing the agreeable to all Michigan people who have called here since the adjournment of congress last spring, and this in addition to performing all the multitudinous duties of the office he holds. Few men have the faculty and disposition to satisfactorily represent a great and growing state better and more creditably than does Mr. Montgomery.

Truly yours, JOHNSON.

Bad News for Republican Organs.

Bad news for the republican organs continues to come from the south. A little over a year ago they were predicting with confidence that if Cleveland should be elected the negroes would be abused in the most shameful manner, and the administration of justice upon white offenders in the federal courts would become a farce. Eight months of a democratic administration have passed, and there has not been a single "negro outrage," such as could be counted upon with entire confidence every few weeks as long as there was a republican president.—New York Evening Post.

Mancelona Herald:—It is reported that the night trains will soon be discontinued for the winter. There will be a "kick" of course, but then, we see no reason why a railroad company or corporation should not curtail expenses these hard times the same as an individual would do. We only wonder why the company continued the trains as long as they have.

More Protection Needed for the Millionaire Syndicate.

Through a system of laws, like, in their aims and results, and only unlike in their processes, the old kingly and imperial grants of monopolies to favored individuals and classes, there has come upon the fair face of this land of the people a growth of political and socialistic fungus in the form of a moneyed aristocracy—fungi who love to be called capitalists.

Without the chivalric instincts or the bravery of the half savage oppressors of old, these men are as supercilious in their contempt of the masses, and as ruthless and corrupt, if not as direct, in their plunderings, as their prototypes in the art of looting the common people. The only difference is in method.

Force has been succeeded by fraud; sometimes legalized, but nevertheless fraud.

Under the pretense of being great public benefactors, they engage in enterprises by which, it is true, more wealth is aggregated in a community, but the wealth is poured into their pockets and does not circulate. NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

For some months the farmers near Carthage, N. Y., have been annoyed by the malicious destruction of property. Suspicion has of late fastened on a man named Burns and his four sons, and they have been ordered to leave.

A fire in a tenement structure in East Sixty-fourth street, New York, resulted in the suffocation of a widow and her two little girls, aged six and seven, the other inmates making narrow escapes. Henry Kobal, a Bohemian cigar-maker accused of setting the fire, has been held for arson and murder. He had insurance of $900 on furniture worth about $75.

The East Atlantic coast was visited by a destructive storm on the 24th of November, accompanied by one of the highest tides ever known. A New York dispatch says: "Old river men in this city compared the tide to the disastrous rise of the rivers in 1854. Great discomfort, damage to property, and delay to business were caused by the submerging of slips, streets, and piers, and the flooding of basements and cellars. Ferry-boats stood so high in the slips that teams could hardly get aboard. Along the Jersey coast the storm was especially severe. Sandy Hook was inundated and the Government station was in danger of falling. The Southern New Jersey Railroad tracks were submerged. Two fine summer cottages at Seabright were swept into the Atlantic. Few steamers and no sailing vessels attempted to cross Sandy Hook bar to go to, sea. Off Ocean Beach the ship Malta, from Antwerp for New York, stranded early in the morning. One sailor jumped overboard and was drowned. The other thirty-three members of the the crew were rescued by the life-saving crew. Walks and beach improvements at Ocean Grove, Deal Beach and Atlantic City are submerged and damaged. Houses are undermined all along the Shrewsbury river and many families have had to leave their houses. All along the east shore the docks are submerged. In Jersey City sewers and basements were flooded. Prisoners in the City Prison had to stay in their sleeping bunks to keep out of the water. A sewer in South street burst, flooding the cellars of the finest residences on the Heights. The railroad depot floors were under water, and improvised bridges were laid for passengers to walk on. Most of Coney Island was submerged. The Brighton race track was flooded and the races were postponed. The water is six feet deep on the Sheepshead Bay boulevard. Hotel property on the island is flooded, but will probably not be seriously damaged. The contour of the beach will, however, be much changed by washing away, and the damage to shore improvements is serious. Every house and summer resort bordering on Flushing Bay is more or less damaged. It is estimated that the losses will foot up into the millions."

The West Shore Railway has been sold to J. Pierrepont Morgan, Chauncey M. Depew, and Ashbel Green for $22,000,000.

The Erie Road reports gross earnings of $18,934,572 for the year, and a deficit of $1,576,973. It cost the Erie Company $233,820 to operate the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio Road under the lease.

Warner and Work, who were indicted for aiding and abetting Ferdinand Ward in misapplying $70,327 of Marine Bank funds, appeared in the United States Court at New York, and gave bail each in $30,000.

At Elmira, N. Y., the Rev. Father Bloomer, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, denounced the members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians as wolves in sheep's clothing, unworthy the confidence or respect of good Catholics.

WESTERN.

At the entrance to his residence in East St. Louis, ex-Mayor John B. Bowman was assassinated by an unknown man, who fired a bullet into the back of his victim's head. Mr. Bowman was prominent in politics, having been accounted Congressman Morrison's lieutenant, and it is alleged that the murder is the result of political feuds.

The Duff Comic Opera Company, in Gilbert and Sullivan's latest success, "The Mikado," appears this week at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. The opera is presented by the same excellent company that produced it for over 100 nights at the Standard Theater, New York.

The Federal Commissioner Deputy Marshal arrested at Salt Lake for lewd conduct, assert their innocence of the charges brought by Mormon leaders.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, after consultation with the railroad magnates, reports that the St. Paul will build to Kansas City next year, and that the other Western roads were surveying and making arrangements to environ his State with tracks.

At No. 310 Monroe street, Chicago, Samuel R. Smith murdered his young wife during the night and made his escape. It appears that at the time of their marriage the lady was engaged to Dr. W. S. H. Bickford, of Cleveland, who subsequently tried to persuade her to leave Smith.

Sterling R. Holt, one of the election commissioners, was arrested at Indianapolis, charged with breaking open a ballot-box with a hatchet. The judges had refused to give him the keys to the box, and he broke it open to carry out the order of court for a recount.

The State Board of Horticulture of California memorialized Congress to place a high protective tariff on prunes, raisins, and olive oil, and also indorsed the Mexican reciprocity treaty.

The works of the Calumet Iron and Steel Company, to the southward of Chicago, having been closed for six months by a strike, are about to resume operations at lower wages. Vice President Bradley says thirty-two millers on the pay-rolls formerly averaged from $6 to $11 per day each.

Congressman J. G. Cannon, a member of the Holman committee which has been making a tour of the Indian agencies, is of the opinion that the Indians cannot long retain possession of the Indian Territory, which is capable of maintaining more than ten times its present population if brought under that degree of cultivation of which it is susceptible.

The great three-cornered billiard tournament at Chicago between the world's champions, Schaefer, Slosson, and Vignaux, resulted in a tie, each man winning two and losing two games.

In the Circuit Court at Janesville, Wis., a jury awarded a lad named Hemmingway damages of $10,000 for the loss of his left hand by being compelled to leap from a St. Paul train at a regular station, no stop being made.

John Pierson, the convict in the Nebraska prison who confessed to killing Watson R. Smith, has served five terms in Joliet, one in Chester, two in Columbus, Ohio; one in Louisiana, and one at Anamosa, Iowa. Some time ago at Bloomington, Ill., he accused himself of killing Murray McConnell, and, as a side issue, said he was old man Bender. These stories having been found to be fabrications, it is presumed that the present disclosure is likewise untrue.

Articles of incorporation have been issued to the Chicago Columbus Centennial World's Exposition Company, for the purpose of holding an international fair in Chicago, to be opened in June, 1892. The capital stock is $1,000,000.

SOUTHERN.

It is threatened by the Knights of Labor in Texas that the Chicago syndicate engaged in constructing the new State Capitol will be boycotted if stone quarried by convicts is used in the construction of the building. The boycott, it is declared, will go into effect as soon as the first carload of granite is landed on the Capitol grounds.

A jury at Sparta, Georgia, sustained the will of David Dickson, leaving $500,000 to his colored mistress and child, and disinheriting his heirs.

The Governor of North Carolina has respited to Dec. 7 four men under sentence to hang for the crime of burglary.

L. B. Jones, a young blood of Richmond, was fined one cent and imprisoned for an hour on a jury verdict for sending a challenge to fight a duel. This is the second instance since the war where punishment was inflicted for violating the dueling law.

C. A. Thorp and J. White blew out the gas upon retiring in a Baltimore hotel Sunday night, and were found dead from suffocation the next day.

In an affray at the Union Depot in Atlanta, a hatter named D. H. Pope dangerously wounded Albert Howell, the railway agent, who was Colonel in the Forty-second Georgia regiment during the war.

WASHINGTON.

The accounts of John L. Parish, the Chicagoan who was Consul at Chemnitz, show a deficit of eight thousand dollars.

The continued scarcity of dimes has caused orders to be given to the Superintendent of the Mint to coin into 10-cent pieces all uncurrent subsidiary silver on hand.

Washington special: "Attention has already been called to the fluctuating volume of postoffice business as a barometer of the commercial condition of the country. The reduced postage and the dull times last year combined to prevent any increase, and indeed to cause a slight falling off in the receipts of the department during the fiscal year ended June 30 last. Since then, however, there has been a gain in business activity, which has been reflected in market and rapidly increasing receipts. Each month shows a large gain over the preceding month, and the receipts indicate a very prosperous condition of the country."

The value of imports of merchandise for the twelve months ended Oct. 31, 1885, were $572,417,322, and during the preceding twelve months $752,561,413, a decrease of $80,144,091.

A strong effort is to be made in Washington to get General Logan on both Military and Appropriations Committees in the United States Senate, which positions he lost while the Senatorial struggle was in progress at Springfield. Senators Mahone and Sewell, who succeeded him on the committees, are both to step down, and the friends of Fitz John Porter are anxious to keep General Logan off the Military Committee.

There are usually from twelve to twenty contested election cases in the House of Representatives, but this year there will be only four, three of the contestants being Republicans, and the fourth is Mr. Weaver, the Iowa Greenbacker. The most interesting case is that of Mr. Frank Hurd, of Toledo, the brilliant young free trade advocate, who disputes the legality of the election of Mr. Romeis, a Republican who holds the certificate. Hurd claims that Romeis was elected by illegal voting, and that he was not entitled to the certificate on the count. Mr. G. W. Steele, of Indiana, a Republican, will have to defend his seat against Mr. Kidd, who makes similar charges, and C. H. Page, a Democrat, claims the seat of Mr. W. A. Pearce, a Rhode Island Republican. The contest which has been waging in the Sixth Iowa District ever since the last Presidential campaign will then be transferred to Washington, and Mr. Weaver will have to fight for his seat.

Business failures throughout the country for the week were 240, as against 223 for the week previous. Of the total of 240, 28 were in Canada. Bradstreet's Journal says of the trade outlook:

The general trade situation shows less activity than was reported last week. This is particularly noticed in dry goods. The continuation of moderate weather at the West and North has seriously interfered with the distribution of seasonable fabrics. The regular fall tradegis practically over, and orders received now are largely of the reassortment variety. Eastern jobbers and shippers are shipping very moderately, and complain of the delay in the arrival of steady cold weather. Prices are firm for all varieties except some lines of shirtings, which have been shaded. Wool is quiet and prices are firm, except for fine fleeces, owing to the relatively decreased demand. Low and medium grades are very strong. Transactions are not expected to increase much so long as the outlook for the disposition of heavy goods is so uncertain. The movement of grocery staples has been fair, with lower prices on coffee. There is less activity in pig and in manufactured irons. Prices of both are firm, but there has been no advance, and there is no likelihood of any during the current year.

High Authority on Beef Tea.

As nursing and care of the sick enter, more or less, into the lives of most women, it may be interesting to those who read this column to know what one of the highest dietetic authorities in England says on this subject of beef tea. Beef tea, once so relied upon by physicians in severe illnesses, has been for several years declining in the scale of nutritive liquids, while milk has been gaining a more and more important position.

The celebrated Dr. Roberts, of London, in a paper recently read before the British Medical Society, at Cardiff, deals a staggering blow to beef tea as usually prepared.

"Next to milk," he says, "in frequency of use in high esteem come beef tea and other meat decoctions. Long experience has satisfied us in this country of the usefulness of these preparations in feeding the sick. Beef tea and its congeners, however, take rank as restoratives and stimulants rather than as nutrients. They contain no albuminous matter in solution, and the small quantity of gelatine contained in them cannot be of much account. There is a widespread misapprehension among the public in regard to the nutritive value of beef tea. The notion prevails that the nourishing qualities of the meat pass into the decoction, and that the dry, hard remnant of meat-fiber which remains undissolved is exhausted of its nutritive qualities; and this latter is often given to the cat or dog, or even, as I have known, thrown away as useless rubbish into the midden."

It is so common with us to see this remnant of meat thrown aside as useless, that we consider that Dr. Roberts gives us a valuable lesson in household economy when he tells us that this meat contains a large amount of nutriment, and that when pounded in a mortar or beaten to a paste with a spoon, and duly flavored with salt and other condiments, it constitutes not only a highly nourishing and agreeable, but also an exceedingly digestible, form of food. A French cook would undoubtedly prepare a savory sauce or a dish of tempting croquettes from what we are in the habit of throwing away as useless.

Having proved to us that beef tea is not all that our "fancy painted it," Dr. Roberts proceeds to inform us how we may best extract the nutritive properties of beef and other meats. This is to be done by using "cold-made meat infusions," cold made, because when heated above 131 degrees F. coagulation of the albumen occurs, which destroys the liquid character of the infusion, and converts it into a jelly.

Dr. Roberts recommends the use of an infusion made as follows: Cover the minced meat with half its weight of water, and allow it to stand for two hours, after which press it through a cloth. By this means a highly nutritive infusion is obtained, containing an amount of protein, or nutritious material, equivalent to that found in cow's milk.

"The objection to these infusions," Dr. Roberts adds, "is their raw flavor, which to many is highly disagreeable. The best way of covering the raw taste is to add some ordinary beef tea, or a little of Liebig's extract of meat. Some prefer the flavor communicated by a slice of lemon."

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Decrease of Nearly Ten Million Dollars in the Receipts for the Current Fiscal Year.

Spirits Intended for Export Can Only Remain in the Warehouse Thirty Days.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that the total receipts from internal-revenue taxation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, were $112,421,121, as compared with $122,510,039 for the previous year. It was estimated that the receipts for the last fiscal year would be about $115,000,000, and that they fell over $2,000,000 short of the estimate, resulting from the seven months' extension allowed for the exportation of distilled spirits in bond on which the tax was due. There are now about 7,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits abroad, which to find a market will have to be reimported. This, with more than 10,000,000 gallons that had on June 30 last been in bond for three years or longer under the seven months' extension, afforded ample margin for assuming that the receipts for the current fiscal year would aggregate at least $115,000,000.

A table giving the receipts during the last two fiscal years shows that there was a decrease of $9,391,117 in collections on spirits and an increase of $311,588 on tobacco, an increase of $145,827 on fermented liquors, and an increase of $27,558 from banks and bankers. The total decrease was $8,168,943. The largest collections were made in Illinois, amounting to $23,975,865; Kentucky was second, with $11,812,175; New York third, with $13,828,615; Ohio fourth, with $12,565,510; Pennsylvania fifth, with $7,371,203; Missouri sixth, with $7,276,165; and Indiana seventh, with $7,031,866. The smallest collection was made in Vermont, amounting to $29,896.

The total receipts for the first quarter of the present fiscal year were $28,670,749, being an increase of $23,866 over the collections during the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year. The cost of collection for the present fiscal year was $1,155,130, against $1,076,914 for the previous fiscal year. The total expenses of the service during the past year were about 3-9 of 1 per cent. of the amount collected.

Twenty-four violations of the internal revenue law have been reported by revenue agents during the year; 231 persons have been arrested on their information; property to the value of $171,052 has been reported for seizure, and $52,859 for assessment for unpaid taxes and penalties. The Commissioner recommends an increase in the number of revenue agents.

The report of the tobacco industry for the last fiscal year shows gratifying results. Not only has there been a small increase in the amount of taxes collected, but there has been a marked increase of manufactured products, and an unusually large increase of the quantity of these products exported to foreign countries.

The number of grain distilleries registered during the year was 1,195, of which only 918 were operated. The Commissioner invites special attention to the necessity of legislation having for its object the taxing of all fractions of a barrel of distilled spirits, and says that the operation of the present system of taxation has resulted in the loss of a very appreciable amount of revenue. He adds that the plan has been adopted at several large distilleries of substituting packages of ten gallons capacity and upward in place of the spirit barrel of ordinary size, for the sole purpose, apparently, of obtaining the benefit of the untaxed fraction as frequently as possible. The Commissioner also recommends that the provisions of the law under which grape brandy products are permitted three years' storage in special bonded warehouses be made applicable to distillers of brandy from all fruits.

The quantity of distilled spirits in the United States, except what may be in customs bonded warehouses on October 1, 1885, was 90,107,026 gallons, and the average stock of each retail liquor dealer in the United States is estimated at 150 gallons. There was a decrease of $1,530,011 in the assessments on distilled spirits made during the past year from the amount assessed in the previous year, mainly because the production of distilled spirits three years ago was less than it was four years ago, and because large quantities of spirits on which the tax had become due were bonded for export and suffered to remain in warehouses without payment or assessment of tax for a period not exceeding seven months.

Alluding to the importation of exported spirits the Commissioner says:

Besides the 7,000,000 gallons of domestic spirits on which the internal revenue tax has never been paid, which remained in store in foreign warehouses at the close of the year, there then remained in distillery warehouses 10,229,173 gallons of spirits which had so remained for a period exceeding the three years from the date of the entry for deposit.

It appears that under an opinion of the Attorney General of Dec. 21, 1882, such spirits as are covered by transportation bonds or exportation bonds are allowed to remain in distillery warehouses during a time reasonably necessary in the process of exportation, even after the expiration of the three years' limit fixed by the warehousing bond. This time was limited by my predecessor, with the approval of the then Secretary of the Treasury, to seven months. Not being able to see the necessity for so long a time to accomplish the transportation of the spirits to the port of export, I have, with the approval of the present Secretary, reduced the time to thirty days, and so limited the time within which such bonds may be filed to collect the tax on or before the expiration of the three years within which spirits may remain in distillery warehouses. The only time now obtainable in excess of the three years is that which occurs through the necessary delay in enforcing the payment of the taxes.

DEATH'S SUMMONS.

Sudden Death of Vice-President Hendricks, After a Brief Illness.

He Expires Alone During the Temporary Absence of His Wife from His Bedside.

General Feeling of Grief Throughout the Whole Country Over the Sad Event.

Possible Political Effects of the Occurrence—The Presidency of the Senate in Dispute.

The Vice President of the United States, Thomas A. Hendricks, died at his home in Indianapolis on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 25, of paralysis of the heart. His death was sudden and unexpected. He was absolutely alone in his room at the time. Mrs. Hendricks had left him a few moments before to receive a caller, and his other attendants were absent, believing that he was in no immediate danger, and that the acute attack from which he was suffering had been relieved. While death was not immediately expected, it is true, however, that he was known to be in a critical condition of health, and did not look for many years of life. He had not been in robust health from the time he became subject to senile gangrene, as reported in the newspapers a couple of years ago. He knew that death, when it came, would come suddenly, and he was not unprepared for it.

THE DEATH-BED SCENE.

Particulars of the Vice President's Sudden Collapse.

Indianapolis telegrams give the following particulars of the death of the Vice President: Last night Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception at the residence of the Hon. John A. Cooper, Treasurer of State, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Mr. Hendricks had taken off the heavy clothing which he usually wore and put on a dress suit of light material. Before he got home he complained of chilliness and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to material influences. He sat by the fire for an hour or more before retiring, but declined to send for a physician, although urged to do so. He slept restlessly until about 8 o'clock this morning, when he arose, dressed himself, and ate quite a hearty breakfast, saying that he felt much better, and intended to attend to considerable delayed business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour, and he had apparently regained his physical vigor and cheerfulness.

An hour later, however, he began to be troubled with pains in the region of his stomach, and Mrs. Hendricks sent for the family physician, Dr. W. C. Thompson. As the pain continued to increase, he was given an emetic, and afterward an injection, and finally relief came. He arose from his bed, in which he had lain only a few minutes, and read the morning papers, talking cheerfully with his wife and an old house servant. Just before noon he had a relapse, however, and the physician was again summoned, and administered the usual remedies, besides bleeding the patient. Mr. Hendricks again expressed himself as being greatly relieved. He remained in his room all afternoon, occasionally rising from the bed, to which he was compelled to return by the recurrence of the abdominal pains. To callers who came, and they were numerous, he sent word that he was indisposed, but would be glad to see them to-morrow. About 4:30 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks, who had been at his bedside all day, went to the parlor to see a caller, who had come to consult with her regarding the affairs of a reformatory of which she was one of the managers, and she remained with him about twenty minutes. Tom, a colored servant, and Harry Morgan, Mr. Hendricks' nephew and page in Washington, remained with him. The servant went out, and Mr. Morgan said: Mr. Hendricks tossed uneasily in his bed and complained of great pain, but suddenly it seemed to cease, and he said to his nephew: "I am free at last; send for Eliza," meaning his wife, and these were his last words, for the young man, not realizing the urgency of the message, did not deliver it at once.

Just before 5 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks came into the room and found that her husband was dead. The end of a long and eventful life had come peacefully and quietly. He lay on the bed, outside the covering, only partially disrobed, with his eyes half closed, as if he were in a gentle slumber. On his face there were no traces of pain or suffering, but a pallor had come over it which indicated only too plainly that he had passed away. It needed no close examination to tell that he was dead, and Mrs. Hendricks screamed and ran down-stairs.

A servant was dispatched to the residence of Dr. Thompson, adjoining, and he came immediately, but by the time he had reached the bedside the limbs of the dead Vice President were becoming cold and rigid, and to Mrs. Hendricks' pathetic appeal, "Oh! Doctor, can't you do something?" he was obliged to answer, "It is too late." Mrs. Hendricks became almost distracted with grief, and it was an hour or more before she was sufficiently composed to give any information about her husband's last moments. The family servants, two of whom had lived with them for years, ran about the house crying and moaning, and there was the utmost confusion for a time.

Dr. Thompson says that in his opinion Mr. Hendricks died of paralysis of the brain. For several years he had not been a robust man, and was subject to frequent "bad spells," as he called them, during which sometimes he would be prostrated for days at a time. About two years ago he was confined to his room for several weeks by a gangrenous affection of the foot which it was feared would result in blood-poisoning.

The news of Mr. Hendricks' death spread rapidly throughout the city, and there was a general expression of sorrow over it. Those who were his politically enemies here were his personal friends, and to everybody who called on him or met him he always had a pleasant word. There were crowds around the bulletin boards down town all the evening, while in the vicinity of his residence there was another crowd all anxious to learn the particulars of his sudden demise. The evening papers could not get out extras fast enough to supply the demand. He had been dead but a few minutes when forces of men began draping the State, County and City Buildings in black, and throughout the night similar emblems were placed on nearly all the prominent business houses and residences, so that by morning the city will have put on a general garb of mourning.

Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks had lived in Indianapolis for nearly thirty years. Mrs. Hendricks, who is a brilliant and accomplished woman, was of great aid to him in his political career. Since her husband's serious attack two years ago, both of them have been apprehensive of a sudden end of his life, and the attachment between them has grown very strong—almost sentimentally so. So intense had this become, in fact, that he would not consent for his wife to be away from him for any length of time. Only last week while in Chicago he accompanied Mrs. Hendricks even on her shopping expeditions. They had frequently talked over his condition and the probabilities of his early death, and it is evident that for several months past there has been a growing fear of this kind on his mind.

Mr. Hendricks has no near relatives except a brother, who lives in Shelbyville, Ind., and a sister, the wife of Dr. Winslow S. Pierce, of New York. He owns considerable property in Indianapolis, but his entire fortune is estimated to be no more than $100,000. It is known that it was his intention to abandon politics at the end of his term as Vice President. Only a few days before his death, in a confidential talk with a friend, he said:

"The newspapers say I am a candidate for President in 1888, but it is not true. I shall not be a candidate under any circumstances. I was not a candidate for the position I now hold, but it was forced upon me, and now my political ambition is fully satisfied. I want to retire and rest for the remainder of my life."

The funeral will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Indianapolis, Tuesday noon, and the remains will be laid in Crown Hill Cemetery. The body has been embalmed. Mrs. Hendricks declines to permit an autopsy, feeling certain that it was paralysis of the heart. Telegrams of condolence have been received from Samuel J. Tilden, David Davis, Senators Dawes and Edmunds, the Japanese Minister, Mrs. Gen. McClellan, and many others. About twenty Senators assembled in the Judiciary Committee-room at Washington, and selected the following committee to attend the funeral: Edmunds, Sherman, Harris, Allison, Voorhees, Pugh, Cullom, Gibson, Conger, Blair, Dawes, Camden, and Vest. There was also a meeting of about twenty-five members of the House in the Speaker's room, at which the Clerk of the House was authorized to request the attendance at the funeral of the following, as representatives of the House: Carlisle, Randall, Hiscock, Long, Phelps, Hepburn, Browne, Bynum, Morrison, Holman, Herbert, Blunt, Barbour, Hewitt, and Geddes.

THE CAUSE OF DEATH.

Opinion of the Family Physician.

Dr. W. C. Thompson stated in the course of conversation that it was his belief that Gov. Hendricks died from instantaneous paralysis of the brain and heart. As he lay in bed his position was perfectly natural and peaceful, as of one in sleep. His position was exactly that in which Mrs. Hendricks had left him a few minutes before, when she had tucked the bedclothing about him and went to the lower hall. Dr. Thompson said that, save slight cyanosis of the lips and a lividity of the sides of the jaws, the color of the features was perfectly natural. But there was a slight, although significant drawing aside of the lower lip to the right side, as is seen in facial paralysis of the left side. Mr. Hendricks had suffered for a long time with slight paralysis of the left hand, and Dr. Thompson had often noticed a timidity and carefulness in the use of it in public assemblies. Mr. Hendricks had often told the Doctor that when he died he should like to go off with paralysis, as it was a painless death, and took one off without knowledge or foreboding of the inevitable hour. Dr. Thompson spoke of the great physical and mental strain to which Mr. Hendricks had subjected body and mind during the last eight years, particularly in the last campaign, in which he not unfrequently spoke three or four times a day, and traveled over the entire country. He had warned him of the danger to one of his habit and constitution of overworry and overwork. Only the day before his death Mr. Hendricks had said to him: "Mrs. Hendricks is my best friend, and I want her by me every moment."

THE NEWS AT WASHINGTON.

Meeting of the Cabinet The President Issues a Proclamation.

No event since the election of Cleveland has created such a sensation in Washington as the death of Hendricks. The President was just sitting down to dinner when a telegram was handed him announcing the startling intelligence. The President was greatly shocked at the news, and at once sent the following to Mrs. Hendricks:

"The sudden and lamentable death of your husband excites my profound sympathy for you in this hour of your great bereavement, and I sincerely mourn the loss of one so intimately associated with me in the execution of the people's highest laws, while the nation mourns the loss of an honored citizens and a faithful public servant."

At a Cabinet meeting it was decided that the President and the members of the Cabinet should attend the funeral of the Vice President. When the Cabinet adjourned, the President issued the following:

"To the People of the United States:

"Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice President of the United States, died at 5 o'clock p. m. at Indianapolis, Ind., and it becomes my mournful duty to announce the distressing fact to his fellow-countrymen. In respect to the memory and the eminent and varied services of this high official and patriotic public servant, whose long career was so full of usefulness and honor to his State and to the United States, it is ordered that the national flag be displayed at half-mast upon all the public buildings of the United States; that the executive mansion and the several executive departments in the city of Washington be closed on the day of the funeral and be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days; that the usual and appropriate military and naval honors be rendered, and that on all the legations and consulates of the United States in foreign countries the national flag shall be displayed at half-mast on the reception of this order, and the usual emblems of mourning be adopted for thirty days.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

KIND WORDS FOR THE DEAD.

Expressions of Sorrow—Tributes from Leading Men.

The announcement of the sudden death of Vice-President Hendricks was received everywhere with general expressions of regret by Democrats and Republicans alike. At his old home, Shelbyville, Ind., there was a feeling of profound grief. All the bells in the city were tolled. A feeling of sadness pervaded every heart, and many of Mr. Hendricks' old friends wept bitterly when they heard the news. In many cities and towns public meetings were called to give expression of sorrow over the sad event. At Columbus, Ohio, Gov. Hoadly ordered the flags on the Capitol placed at half-mast, issued a proclamation, and sent a personal telegram of condolence to the bereaved widow. At Cincinnati all the firebells were tolled. At Zanesville, Ohio, where Mr. Hendricks first saw the light of day, there was a deep feeling of sadness, and arrangements were made for a memorial meeting. Public men, without regard to party affiliations, everywhere expressed regret at the death of Mr. Hendricks, and were outspoken in praise of the high personal traits of the deceased.

Hon. John Sherman said: Mr. Hendricks was a man of upright character in private and public life, and stood high in the estimation of his friends. He was a statesman of marked ability.

Jay Gould. He was a great man and an able lawyer.

Hon. David Davis. And so poor Hendricks is dead! He was an able and conscientious man.

Secretary Bayard. The news of Mr. Hendricks' death is painful to us all, but the condition in which the American people are placed by his death through the failure of Congress to pass proper laws regarding the Presidential succession—the fact that there is now but one man's life between the American people and no President is more painful to contemplate.

Ex-Minister John W. Foster. He was eminent at the bar, and no man can be that without a broad and comprehensive intellect. In all his personal and social relations he was a man of the highest integrity. His private character was spotless, and the people of Indiana had great confidence in his honesty of purpose and his regard for the public good. Whenever he was a candidate for office he got votes from Republicans, because, in spite of political differences, they liked him and respected him as a man, and they believed that he would do what he believed to be right, and that he was beyond the reach of sordid temptations.

Senator Ben Harrison.—He has succeeded in acquiring and retaining the confidence of his party friends in a very high degree. His personal character I always regarded as exalted and blameless. His death was a very severe shock to me indeed.

Hon. John C. New.—My acquaintance with Mr. Hendricks began in 1841, and since that time our relations have been of the most friendly character. In politics we never agreed, but that in no wise interfered with our personal relations or my kind feeling for him. His private character was without reproach, and his official career, saving as a partisan, is blameless. He was one of the most eminent citizens of the State, and a man of whom Indiana has reason to be proud.

Senator Daniel W. Voorhees.—I have known Mr. Hendricks intimately for thirty years. I never knew anything of him that it would not be becoming to say of a dead man. He was a man of very great ability, of high character, and a man of great influence. He was a man whom the people trusted. They always knew that he was in sympathy with them, and they were always for him. He was a man of unbounded moral and physical courage. He sought no controversy, but when pressed—when circumstances compelled him to—he was one of the best fighters I ever saw. He was eminent as a lawyer, and as a political speaker he swayed men as few others have been able to do. He was a great strength to his party in his State and in the country.

Senator Edmunds.—I have always had a personal regard for him. I regret exceedingly his death.

THE PRESS ON MR. HENDRICKS.

How the News of the Vice President's Death Was Received.

New York Herald. The distinguishing feature of Vice President Hendricks' political position at the time of his death was his opposition to the progress of what is called "civil-service reform," and the motive which led him to take this position and make himself the rallying point of all the Democratic opposition to President Cleveland's reform policy sprang from what he understood to be the average sense of the people. He did not believe that they wished for anything of the kind. He convinced himself that they wished the "spoils system" to be continued, and therefore he was a champion of its continuance. If he had been convinced that the popular sense is the other way, so would also have been his conduct. It remains to be proved whether his understanding of the people's wish is accurate.

Chicago Inter Ocean.—No public man was more completely identified in every fiber of his nature with the party to which he belonged than Thomas A. Hendricks. His private life was honorable and conscientious, and it is only fair to assume that this mergence of himself in his party was due to the conviction that his party was right in all its fundamental purposes, if not absolutely perfect in detail of action.

New York World. The death of Vice-President Hendricks falls upon the country so unexpectedly and with such awful suddenness that it will be a shock as well as a cause of deepest grief to the people. It leaves a blank in the structure of the government, as well as in the social circle and in the domestic hearth.

Louisville Courier-Journal. Mr. Hendricks was less conspicuous for brilliant talents than for a level head, cool judgment and a kind heart. He rarely lost his balance. He was a steady partisan, but neither implacable nor extreme. His powers of persuasion were very great. He impressed an audience with his sincerity and his amiability. A more plausible, vote-catching speaker has seldom appeared in our political annals. In personal relations he was courteous and tolerant to the last degree. It may be doubted whether he left an enemy behind him, for, despite his strong points of intellect and character, prudence could not but pass him by.

Chicago Times. For many years, more than a generation, Mr. Hendricks has been a bright and prominent in the political constellations of the American sky. Few there have been of the stellar host whose light has been more steady, enduring, than that radiated from the heights on which he stood. * * * He was an influential factor, than which there was none more potent, in his own State. At his death he had no peer among his own particular people. He was apparently less great from a national standpoint. He possibly lacked somewhat of the nerve necessary to manage a great army, while as a corps commander he was unexcelled.

New York Tribune.—Of conciliatory ways and winning manners, Mr. Hendricks was probably the most popular man in his party, and came the nearest to representing its true views and honest wishes. The fact also had much to do with the repeated defeat of his efforts to secure a presidential nomination, as the time had not arrived when the Democratic leaders saw the way open to success with a candidate who presented no ideas other than those popular, with the masses of the party.

New York Sun.—There was no eccentricity and no compromise in his political ideas. The doctrines of Jefferson and Jackson were his doctrines, and he held fast to the traditional statesmanship of his party. He belonged to the people, and knew nothing of that pharisaic and federalist pretension which holds them in distrust and contempt. His political speeches were filled with this spirit, and, like his forensic arguments, commanded respect by their breadth, elevation, vigor of reasoning, and catholic comprehensiveness.

New York Times. Mr. Hendricks was a type of the sincere and earnest partisan Democrat, of upright personal character, and considerable abilities, whose sympathies were too narrow, and his views too restricted to permit him the place in political history to which he aspired.

Chicago Tribune.—Mr. Hendricks was esteemed by all who knew him personally as a man of upright character and a genial nature, being possessed of many social graces and remarkable for his attractive qualities of mind and heart. By the mere force of his personal character and his success in making friends he had obtained a prominence in the politics of his own State which probably no man, with the single exception of Oliver Morton, ever possessed before or since.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Brief Sketch of Gov. Hendricks' Long and Busy Life.

Thomas Andrews Hendricks was born near Zanesville, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1819. On the maternal side he was of Scotch descent. His mother, Jane Thompson, was a grand-daughter of John Thompson, who emigrated from Scotland to Pennsylvania before the revolution, and, by his representations of the advantages of the country, induced a large following of Scotchmen, by whom Cumberland was chiefly settled. Thomas' grandfather was one of the pioneer settlers of Westmoreland County, Pa., and held various township and county offices, and was a member of the State Legislature. John Hendricks, the father of Thomas, was born in Ligonier Valley, and not long after his marriage moved to Zanesville, Ohio, and on a farm near that place Thomas was born.

When he was six months old his parents removed to Madison, Ind., then the residence of his uncle, William Hendricks, who was successively a member of Congress, Governor of the State, and United States Senator. In 1822 he removed again, and located a homestead in the then sparsely settled county of Shelby, and the county town, Shelbyville, is on part of the old Hendricks farm.

In this home Thomas A. Hendricks passed his boyhood till 1837, when he entered Hanover College, at Hanover, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1841. His brother, Abram Hendricks, went through the course at the University of Ohio and at Hanover, and became a Presbyterian clergyman. Thomas went to Chambersburg, Pa., studied law in the office of his uncle, Judge Thomson, was admitted to the bar in 1843, and returned to Shelbyville to practice. His success in his profession was phenomenal. In 1845 he married Eliza C. Morgan, and their only child, a son, died in infancy. In the same year, at the age of twenty-six, he was sent to the State Legislature, where he served one term, but he would not accept a re-election. In 1851 he was elected without opposition a member of the convention that was called to revise and amend the State constitution of Indiana, and was prominent and efficient in that work. In 1853 and again in 1857 he was a member of Congress from the Fifth District of Indiana. At the close of his second term he intended to return to his law practice, but President Pierce appointed him Commissioner of the General Land Office and he served in that capacity for four years, administering the affairs of the office with great ability.

In 1848 he was nominated as Democratic candidate for the Governorship of Indiana, but was defeated by the Republican candidate, Henry S. Lane, who became Governor by 2,557 majority. In the same year Mr. Hendricks removed from Shelbyville to Indianapolis, where, in 1862, he formed a law partnership with Oscar B. Hord, extended in 1868 to Mr. Hendricks' cousin, Col. A. W. Hendricks, under the firm title of Hendricks, Hord & Hendricks.

From 1863 to March, 1869, Mr. Hendricks was a member of the United States Senate from Indiana. He served efficiently on the Committees on Claims, the Judiciary, Public Lands, and Naval Affairs.

In the Democratic National Convention of 1868, in New York, on the twenty-first ballot he received 132 votes as candidate for the Presidency, standing next to Gen. Hancock, who received 135½; but on the final ballot Horatio Seymour was nominated. In the autumn of that year he was again a candidate for the Governorship of Indiana, but was defeated by 561 majority by the Republican candidate, Conrad Baker, who afterward became a law partner of Mr. Hendricks.

At the close of his Senatorial term he returned to Indianapolis, and resumed the practice of his profession. In 1872 he was elected Governor of Indiana, defeating the Republican candidate, Thomas M. Brown, by a majority of 1,148. In July, 1874, he was made permanent Chairman of the State Democratic Convention at Indianapolis. In the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis in June, 1876, he received 140½ votes for the Presidential nomination, and when Samuel J. Tilden was nominated he received 730 out of 738 votes as candidate for the Vice Presidency.

In 1877, and again in 1883, accompanied by Mrs. Hendricks, he made a brief tour of Europe, as a relaxation from his arduous professional pursuits. He was a member of the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in July, 1884, and in behalf of the Indiana delegation nominated Joseph E. McDonald for the Presidency. After the nomination of Grover Cleveland, William A. Wallace, of Pennsylvania, nominated Thomas A. Hendricks for the Vice Presidency, and the entire 816 votes cast for him made him the unanimous nominee of the convention.

Mr. Hendricks was five feet nine inches in height, weighed 185 pounds, and from his irreproachable habits through life possessed a strong and vigorous constitution. He was a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and his private life was without a stain.

THE SUCCESSION.

Probable Political Effect of Mr. Hendricks' Death.

Washington special.

There is no constitutional or statutory provision for the succession to the Presidency should the disability of President Cleveland occur. There is no President pro tem. of the Senate, and there is no Speaker of the House of Representatives, and neither branch of Congress is in session. Several efforts have been made of late years to make some provision for such an exigency as now exists, and always without success, because the exigency seemed remote, and therefore Senators and Congressmen would give no attention to the matter, or the situation was such that any provision that could be made would give an advantage to one political party that the other would not consent to. The House as not a continuing body, so that for nine months in every alternate year there is no Speaker, but the Senate is a continuing body, and it might always have a substitute presiding officer on hand. In former years a good deal of care was taken to have a President pro tem. in existence, but this provision for the future is wholly in the hands of the Vice President, and the last two Vice Presidents have neglected or refused to allow the Senate the opportunity of electing a substitute. It was formerly regarded as obligatory on a new Vice President to absent himself from the Senate one day, so that the Senate could have a chance to elect, but it was very generally remarked on that in the special session of the Senate in the spring of 1881 Vice President Arthur occupied his seat every day and gave the Senate no chance to elect. At the special session of the Senate just sorne the same thing occurred. The Vice President occupied the chair every day, and when the Senate adjourned there was no President pro tem. The propriety of allowing the Senate to elect a President pro tem. was suggested to Mr. Hendricks, but he referred to the precedent established by Mr. Arthur, and followed it. When the Senate meets, it will be called to order by Gen. McCook, the Secretary, and the first question will be whether a President pro tem. shall be elected first, or whether the senior Senator present shall administer the oath of office to the two Senators-elect, Gen. Logan, of Illinois, and Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon. It is entirely immaterial which is done first, for the Republicans will have forty Senators and the Democrats only thirty-four. At the special session of the Senate after the death of President Garfield the Democrats insisted on first electing the presiding officer, and they carried their point and elected Mr. Bayard, who immediately administered the oath of office to the Senators-elect. Thereupon the Republicans acquired a majority, and the next day elected Senator David Davis President pro tem. The presiding officer so chosen will have the right of succession to the Presidency in case of Mr. Cleveland's death until a special election can be had. Who will be elected President pro tem. is already a subject of gossip. Mr. Edmunds will not expect it because he has had the office last, and to elect some one else would be considered as a slight to him.

Discussing the Succession.

The Presidency of the Senate is conceded to be somewhat in doubt. If Senator Edmunds desires that honor, it is undoubtedly within his reach, but on the other hand if the rumors of his disinclination to serve prove correct, there are many circumstances operating in Senator Logan's favor, and it is understood that the latter has begun an active canvass for the place. The fact that he was the Vice Presidential candidate, and the further fact that he has lost his committee positions and is unprovided for, increase his chances in this connection. Senators Sherman and Allison are also mentioned as possibilities in the event of Senator Edmunds' declination.

A CRUEL MOTHER.

She Receives a Severe Sentence, and Loses the Position She Once Held in Society.

Cleveland dispatch.

At Delaware, O., to-day Mrs. William Dunlap, who had formerly moved in good society, being a member of a leading church, was sent to jail for sixty days to subsist upon bread and water and fined $100 for cruelty to her stepchildren. The story of her cruelty as brought out at the trial is most shocking. A few days ago she covered the body of one of the children—a little girl—with soft soap, pumped cold water on the little one, and scrubbed her with a broom. The other child—a boy—had been suspended in a deep well by a rope. Other cruelties were clearly proven by the Humane Society in the prosecution. The woman was followed to the jail by a crowd of 300 people, who jeered, and hooted, and talked freely of tar and feathers.

MICHIGAN AFFAIRS.

—Anthony Seifert, dealer in Library at Detroit, has failed for $24,000.

—Allen Cope, a druggist of Coldwater, was fatally injured by the explosion of a vulcanizer in his office.

—Patrick Johnson, at Adrain, was acquitted of the charge of having murdered his twin children.

—Stephen McEnally, at Detroit, was found guilty of the killing of Burwell Langan, and recommended to mercy. He is 19 years old.

—Barry county has 219 teachers, of whom thirteen hold first grade certificates, twenty-six second grade, 207 third grade, and three have normal certificates.

—Lightning is falling thick and fast among the marriageable people of Flint, and the more bashful among bachelors are moving to less dangerous regions.

—The wrestling hippodrome at Howell was won by McLaughlin. Shellenbarger, his opponent, forgot his "cue." That is he did not remember in which bout he was to throw the Colonel, so the latter had to do most of the business himself and rolled over on his back himself.—Free Press.

—The dullness in the Northern Peninsular that usually follows the close of navigation will be felt this year to any extent, owing to the large preparations being made for an active lumber business. First-class pine is abundant in this district and scarce everywhere else within reach of a market.

—Some lishpearing boys with too much time on their hands have been discovered in a cave which they had excavated in a swamp near the city, together with a stolen barrel of whisky and a case of gin. They had evidently laid in supplies and made everything snug for the winter. A number of arrests have been made of boys ranging in age from sixteen to nineteen years, on suspicion.

—S. W. Tyler & Sons' mill, at Crow Island, has shut down for the season, after running 123 days and cutting 14,300,000 shingles. The boys are all satisfied with their season's work. Nothing is left to mark their former presence save a boot and broom placed in a prominent position on top of the mill as an indication that they are able to "clean" any crew on the Saginaw River.—Saginaw Herald.

The discovery of a raft of logs in one of the Detroit sewers is proof enough, if more were needed, of the faulty construction in placing their outlets so far below the surface of the river. There must be powerful currents backing up in the sewers to wedge logs so tightly that they could not be carried away by the sewer currents. Obstructions of such a kind must, of course, prevent a discharge of the pestilential matter which the sewers are supposed to carry away. Sewers thus choked are well-nigh useless, and the money expended upon them is so much thrown away. What is the sense, therefore, in continuing a system proved to be a waste of money. It is a high time for reform and the adoption of a better system.—Free Press.

—The Washington Capital says: "It is not true that Mrs. Custer was an applicant for the Pension Office at Detroit, and if she had been she probably would have received the appointment. There was quite an influential movement in her behalf, which was encouraged not only among the old friends and neighbors of her husband in Michigan, but in New York, Chicago, and other cities, and some very strong letters were given to the President urging her selection. She did not want the office, but, woman-like, permitted the movement to go on until she thought the President was about to appoint her, when she came over to Washington and attempted to throw her influence, and that of those who had recommended her, in favor of her sister-in-law, the widow of Lieutenant Calhoun, who commanded a troop in the battle of the Little Big Horn, and was killed by Custer's side. As the movement was in honor of General Custer the ladies thought it made no difference whether the appointment went to his sister or his widow, but the President seems to have thought otherwise."

—The horse car companies in this city (says the Detroit Free Press) got their lesson a year ago or more as to responsibility for damages occasioned by piling up the snow in the streets. The companies in Brooklyn have just received their instructions on the same point. The instructions were furnished by the New York Court of Appeals, in a suit brought by a person who was injured in trying to get on a car, the injury being caused by a pile of snow which the company's plow had turned up beside the track. The jury in the nisi prius court gave the plaintiff $9,000 and the company appealed. The Court of Appeals sustained the verdict, and held that street car companies were under the same obligations with respect to the removal of snow as are owners of property adjoining a street in a populous city. "While they are permitted," the court says, "to enjoy the use of their tracks they must take care that they create no obstruction to persons passing to and from the same. They are bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in the removal of snow and in preventing its accumulation during the winter season, and if they are chargeable with negligence are liable for the consequences arising from the same." As additional evidence that the people have rights which the street railway companies are bound to respect, the decision is welcome.

To Our Readers.

We cannot too strongly urge upon our readers the necessity of subscribing for a family, weekly newspaper of the first class—such, for instance, as The Independent, of New York. Were we obliged to select one publication for habitual and careful reading to the exclusion of all others, we should choose unhesitatingly The Independent. It is a newspaper, magizine, and review, all in one. It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined. It has 32 folio pages and 22 departments. No matter what a person's religion, politics or profession may be, no matter what the age, sex, employment, or condition may be, The Independent will prove a help, an instructor, an educator. Our readers can do no less than to send a postal for a free specimen copy, or for thirty cents the paper will be sent a month, enabling one to judge of its merits more critically. Its yearly subscription is $3.00, or two years for $5.00.

Address, The Independent, 251 Broadway, New York City.

The Independent

The Largest, the Ablest, the Best

RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY WEEKLY.

The most influential religious organ in the States.—The Spectator, London, Eng.

THE INDEPENDENT is one of the best papers in the world. Its good points are many and striking. They have only to be stated to be appreciated; and for proof of our claims appeal may be taken to any of the fifty-two issues for the year. Any number of The Independent will show that its contents are marked by—

ABILITY, VARIETY, AND INTEREST.—The great thinkers, the great story-writers, the great poets, men of the highest reputation in all departments of human knowledge, make up its list of contributors. Religion, philosophy, art, science, literature, travels, discoveries, stories, and all conceivable topics are embraced in the contents, and everybody, old or young, learned and unlearned, without regard to sex, employment, or condition, will find something of special interest in every issue.

COMPREHENSIVENESS.—It is a religious, a literary, an educational, a story, an art, a scientific, an agricultural, a financial, and a political paper combined.

BREADTH, CANDOR, EARNESTNESS.—The Independent is tied to no denomination; it is the organ of no clique or party in state or church. It is free, therefore, to discuss all questions, and to speak its mind candidly. It is not swerved by fear or favor. It is a vigorous defender of the Evangelical faith, it preaches practical righteousness, and earnestly supports all moral reforms. All its columns—the advertising as well as the reading—are free from everything of doubtful or objectionable character. No matter what a person's religion, politics, or profession may be, if he desires to keep up with the times and know what the brightest minds are thinking of, the ablest pens are writing about, and what the world at large is doing—he should read The Independent.

THE TRAPPER'S GRAVE.

BY NATHAN D. URNER.

"After life's fever, he sleeps well." Shakspeare.

Deep in a mighty canyon's gloom,
Beneath a gaunt pine,
I stood beside a trapper's tomb,
And read the carven line
That told the name and age of him
Who rested there so well,
And how amid the forest dim,
True to his trust, he fell.

Ay, yonder stood the hut where he
Dwelt with his Indian bride;
And, 'tis recorded, proud and free,
The treacherous foe defied,
Till, as the great gold-seeking bands
Invaded his retreat,
He perished by assassin hands,
Majestic in defeat.

Around this spot, where died his hope,
There bounded then the game;
The red deer and the antelope,
The mighty grizzly came;
And where some mining-camps now hold
Their scenes of strife and blood,
The buffaloes in myriads rolled
Their brown and billowy flood.

These glades, which his last slumber seal,
This cloud-caressing tree,
Once echoed to his rifle's peal,
Or marked the hunter free
Steal through the forest mazes deep
Where the panther's footprints go,
Or on his wiry mustang sweep
In chase of fleeter foe.

Perchance his simple heart despised
And held in said disdain
The glittering dross whose quest so prize:
Disturbed his wild domain;
Pere gone to some still lonelier spot
He, restless, yet had flown,
Had not the dastard, ambushed shot
His massive strength o'erthrown.

No matter; here he takes repose
From war-path and from chase;
No prouder monument e'er rose
O'er hero's resting-place.
The solemn Colorado glades
Around in grandeur sweep;
No sacrilegious, new domain invades
His grand, eternal sleep.

KEZIAH THEW.

Benjamin Thew was returning homeward with a long, heavy rifle on his shoulder when he heard of Basil Boynford's attentions to his daughter Keziah. He met Ezra Lewis in the road, which was little more than a mountain path over the rugged eastern spurs of the Alleghanys. Ezra stopped in the road to admire the large, fat buck thrown across the saddle of the horse Thew was leading.

"You're a famous shot, Uncle Ben," he said. "a famous shot." Benjamin Thew was very proud of his skill as a hunter, and of his daughter Keziah. He turned his dust-colored, wrinkled face toward the setting sun, and a grim, self-satisfied smile gathered about the corners of his thin lips. Then Ezra Lewis added "I reckon there ain't your ekal in this part of Virginny, onless it be young Baz Boynford."

"Yes," Thew replied, "I hear he can shoot a leetle at a blazed tree, but I never knew a Whig yit that had nurve for rail shootin'."

"Why, Uncle Ben, I thought you an' Baz were great friends. I've been hearing he is to be half of a wedding at your house, and your Kizzie t'other half."

At this the point of Thew's high, thin nose, which was curved like the beak of an eagle, appeared to creep down toward his short, straggling mustache, and he replied: "Him, Baz Boynford, why his father in his time was the rankest old Whig on the mountain. What an idea! Who started that lie?"

"I d'no, Uncle Ben. I heard it."

"It's all moonshine, Ez. No half-faced Whig can do any marrying with Kiz whilst I live, nor after; red deer don't mate with gray squirrel."

An hour later, after Benjamin Thew had carefully rubbed his rifle, probed a piece of buckskin into its muzzle and laid it on the pegs near the broad chimney in his kitchen, he turned to Keziah and said: "What's this I hear about Baz Boynford?"

Keziah looked up from the browning corn bread in the Dutch oven, the lid of which she had just removed, and replied: "I don't know, pap, I didn't carry your ears."

"I denied it, Kizzie, right flat."

Keziah bent lower over the oven and said: "Yes, pap, what did you hear?"

"I heerd that Baz Boynford had his eyes set on you."

"Who told you that, pap?"

"I met Ez Lewis when I was coming down the mountain and he told me."

Hearing no response from his daughter, Thew asked: "What do you say to that, Kizzie?"

"Oh, to that? I'm sure I think if Ez Lewis used his hands more and his tongue less he would be much better off."

"Yes, that may be so; he is raither a shiftless critter, but you are not answering about Baz Boynford's eyes on you."

"Oh, that? Well, I'm sure that they are not very bad eyes, pap. I've seen a good many worse."

Thew stood beside his daughter, laid one of his long bony hands on her shoulder, and said: "Now, look here, Kizzie, sence you have no mother nor sister nor brother, I'm responsible for you."

Keziah replied laughingly: "Of course you are, papa, and I am responsible for you since you have no one else to care for you, and you don't know how it worries me sometimes."

"Yes, of course, Kizzie, and my duty is to keep you from going wrong."

Keziah's face became very red at this and she exclaimed hotly: "Me going wrong, pap; did Ezra Lewis dare say that, and did you hear it without shooting him?"

"He said there was talk of you and Baz Boynford marrying."

"Oh, that? is that all?"

"What worse wrong can you do than that, Lizzie?"

"Why, that's nothing, pap."

"Nothing! That nothing! Why, Kizzie, how you talk—Nothing! Nothing! and him—a Whig!"

"Oh, indeed, is that so dreadful bad?"

"Bad! Why, what in the world can be worse?"

"What, to be a Whig?" exclaimed Keziah, with a little laugh; "and what are you, pap?"

"Me? me! Thank God ther ain't nary drop of Whig blood in my veins."

"Isn't there, pap? I didn't know." Then after a little pause Keziah added: "I'm sure my marrying Baz wouldn't add any Whig blood to your veins. Would it, pap?"

Keziah turned the smoking corn bread out of the Dutch oven and laid it on the table while she was speaking. Her father, who was already seated, looked across the table and said: "Kizzie, I'm responsible for you. There ain't no one else, and I'm responsible. I must do my duty by you, daughter, and you must remember you are a Thew."

"And he is a Boynford," said Keziah, interrupting, "but people of different names marry, don't they, pap?"

"Yes, yes, Kizzie, that's all right. I don't object to the name, but he is as much like his father as one fox is like another."

"Well, pap, that isn't saying anything very bad about Baz. I always have heard his father was a very good-tempered and honest man."

"I have nothing to say against that, Kizzie, nothing, no, nothing against that; but—he—was—a—Whig, and I am responsible for you. I must do my duty by you, Kizzie, mind that, child—I must do my duty—and I won't have any foolishness with Baz Boynford."

Then he helped himself liberally to venison and corn bread. He had said his say and laid down the law of marriage in his household. Then he talked of his long and successful tramp over the mountains. But if fathers forget that love takes no account of politics or religion, young daughters with love in their hearts do not, and certainly her father's words did not convince Keziah there was any great wickedness in thinking of Basil Boynford, and she bent her brown face over her plate, eating little and wondering much how she would get down the valley to a frolic to be held that night, to which all the young people of the neighborhood were invited.

While she was wondering she heard footsteps on the porch and a tap at the door, and who of all men should enter but Basil Boynford. He was tall, long-limbed, square-shouldered, and slightly angular, but with his bright gray eyes, long brown hair, and the light down of youth on the chin of his nut-brown, good-humored face, he was very pleasant to look on. When Keziah saw him much sweetness gathered about her mouth and much trouble in her eyes, which deepened greatly when she turned toward her father and saw the stern look on his face. Basil saw nothing of all this. He was eager to escort Keziah to the frolic in the valley, and he plunged into his mission at once. "We'll have a splendid time," so he said. "You ought to come along, Uncle Ben" (so every one called Benjamin Thew), "you'll think yourself young again." Basil was full of love and hope and there was a rollicking jollity in his voice.

Then Benjamin Thew spoke: "Basil Boynford, Keziah Thew can't go down to the valley or anywhere else with you."

"Sho, Uncle Ben, you're joking; of course we'll go. Why, look here, Uncle Ben. Kizzie wouldn't go with any one else, and I wouldn't go with any one but Kizzie. Why, bless you, Uncle Ben, it wouldn't be any frolic, not to me, without Kizzie."

While Basil was speaking Thew walked over to the wall and lifted his rifle from the pegs on which it rested. Then turning toward Basil, he said: "I won't have any Whig running here after my daughter."

"Sho, now!" said Basil, laughing good naturedly. "If I can swallow your rank Locofocoism without getting sick, you oughtn't to make faces over the little Whig in me."

With that Benjamin Thew raised his rifle, and with an ominous softness in his voice he said: "Basil Boynford, I'll give you just a minute to git out inter the road."

Keziah ran in before the muzzle of her father's rifle to shelter Basil, but he brushed her gently aside and said: "Let him shoot, Kizzie, if he wants to." Then looking into the eye sighting along the rifle-barrel, he added:

"You needn't shoot, Uncle Ben, unless you're spoiling for it. That argument is good: it convinces me I ought to go." Then he went out into the road. And the frolic in the valley was held without the presence of either Basil or Keziah.

If any imagine that Keziah put Basil out of her heart after this, they are mistaken. Opposition does not work that way, and Basil only laughed, greeted Thew with a pleasant "How-de, Uncle Ben," whenever he met him, and whispered soft nonsense to Keziah on the sly whenever he could. So the months wore away until Christmas. The third day after Christmas Benjamin Thew started away from home early in the morning with his long, trusty rifle on his shoulder. At midnight, a thing which never occurred before, he was not at home. Near daylight Basil Boynford entered Thew's house, carrying Benjamin Thew on his back.

In the middle of the afternoon Thew slipped on the rocks. In falling he sprained an ankle severely, and at the same time disturbed a great loose rock which rolled over against the stones between which he fell, so that he was confined and in danger of being crushed if he attempted to move the rock in any but one direction, and as to that one he was powerless. Basil Boynford, who was hunting higher up on the mountain, heard his cries for help, and hurried to his side. When he saw who it was, and how he was confined, Basil sat down near him, with his rifle across his lap.

"Well, Uncle Ben," he said, quietly, "you're in a pretty tight fix, ain't you? Accidents ain't no respecters of persons, are they, Uncle Ben? Even your old hide-bound Locofocos are liable to 'em, and you'd like to have help, wouldn't you, Uncle Ben? Now, I'm willing to help you, if you are a Locofoco—for a price, Uncle Ben; for a price, mind you! I won't make any faces about your Locofocoism, and you stand out of the way between me and Kizzie. That's the price, Uncle Ben."

Thew refused.

"All right, Uncle Ben; I'll wait. You had the best of the argement that night. You put me out inter the road, and I've got just a leetle the best end of the argement now."

So Basil waited, sitting on a rock a few feet away, and occasionally walking up and down, stamping his feet to beat the chill out of his bones. The sun went down, the night air became colder, and Thew had not uttered one word after his first refusal of assent to Basil's proposal.

Shortly after midnight Basil stood near his head, and said, gently:

"I'm sorry for you, Uncle Ben, for you're a pretty good man, as Locofocos go, and I'm thinking the heavy frost will make it powerful unpleasant for you afore morning, and after that you can't stand between me and Kizzie. When a fellow's dead he loses his argement. Don't he, Uncle Ben?"

Then Thew muttered, "I wish I had pledged her! I wish I had." After a little pause he added, "I ain't sure but you're right about that, Baz, and I s'pose I might as well have it go on while I'm living as after I'm dead."

"That's about the size of it, Uncle Ben, and a very sensible way of looking at it."

"Very well, Baz, get me out and help me home."

"Certain, Uncle Ben, certain, and I'm powerful sorry if you've been inconvenienced, powerful sorry. But you see it's took a long time to git the argement through you."

Basil rolled the stone away and lifted Thew, who, with the cold and his injury, was unable to stand on his feet. Then Basil took the injured and chilled man on his back. When they were in sight of Thew's home Benjamin Thew said:

"Baz, you're a pretty stout lad, for I ain't no chicken to carry."

Basil laughed and walked on briskly. "Oh," he said, "you're Kizzie's father; that makes the load lighter, Uncle Ben."

"Well, Baz," Thew responded, "there are worse fellows than you, and I'm a man of my word in letter and sperit, but I'm thinking if you want Kizzie bad you had better not brag much about your convincing argement."

"Oh, Uncle Ben, I'm not of bragging stock."

"That's sensible, Baz, and if I was you and wanted Kizzie right bad, I think I wouldn't never let her hear it; not that I'm objecting, Baz, you may tell her as soon as you get to the door, but I'm giving you fair warning, to keep my promise in sperit as well as word."

In two weeks Benjamin Thew was on his feet, and in time the guests assembled at Thew's house to witness the marriage of Keziah and Basil. Among the guests was one Rhoda Roynford, a cousin of Basil's. He accompanied her to Thew's. On the way he confided to her the story of the cold night on the mountain side, about which he afterward said: "It only shows what a fool a man can be at times." Rhoda was an open-mouthed, rattle-brained creature. She ran into the room where Keziah was dressed, and looking pretty as brides do, only waiting for the arrival of Basil to have the ceremony begin, "Oh, how lovely you look. I don't wonder at Basil, dear me; but it was the boldest and smartest thing, and did you never know how your father came to consent?"

Then the story came out. Rattle-brained Rhoda did not observe how the color was disappearing from Keziah's cheek. When she concluded Keziah opened the door, and seeing Basil she beckoned to him. When he was in the room and the door closed, she asked: "Basil, is this story Rhoda tells true?"

Basil hesitated a little, and then admitted.

Then Keziah said: "Come into the other room, Basil." There was something in her low voice that filled Basil with alarm. In the other room and among the guests, Keziah raised her voice. "Friends," she said, "there will be no marriage here to-day." There was a little trembling in her voice, which was quite strong and audible to every one in the room. Basil expostulated. So did Benjamin Thew. Then his daughter whispered in his ear, "Pap, I have heard how he won your consent."

"Nonsense, Kizzie, I think I would have done the same for your mother."

"I don't believe it, pap. It was cruel, very cruel, and I will never marry any man who can be cruel to my father. Never, pap, never!"

Then Keziah turned to the wondering guests: "Come, friends, where is the fiddle? Let us dance." She took the arm of the oldest man in the party. "Come, Uncle Ted, you'll be my partner. If we don't have a wedding, we'll have a good time all the same." The music struck up, and light feet carried wondering heads through the mazes of the Virginia reel.

Five years later the war began. Benjamin Thew and Basil Boynford espoused different sides in the great contest. At the first Bull Run Benjamin Thew heard the command: "Forward! guide center! double quick! march!" He rushed forward and never returned. He was buried on the field where he fell beside his comrades in gray.

The war storm rolled over the land. Several times it approached the home of Keziah Thew, and then receded. In 1863 it burst upon a valley a few miles away. When the battle was over the wrecks of humanity were gathered in a temporary hospital. Tender-hearted Keziah came down from the hills to help the suffering. "I am not on your side," she said to the officer in charge, "but pity and affection have no sides."

The surgeon looked into her sweet, patient face, and gladly accepted her aid. She went about among the wounded blue coats like a ministering angel, with a face of pity and a touch of gentleness, helping the living and whispering words of comfort to the dying. On the second night she was in camp she heard a voice behind her: "Kizzie, is that you, or am I dreaming?" It was Basil Boynford who spoke. The surgeons had amputated both his legs and his life hung on a slender thread. Keziah bent down and kissed him. From that moment he began to grow stronger. When camp broke up Keziah carried Basil over the hills to her home, where she nursed him until he was as well as he ever will be in this world, then she drove with him to his little farm and set his house in order.

Years have passed away. Sweet peace touches the land with happiness and covers it with garlands. Many have gone wooing to the home of Keziah Thew and to all she has said: "I never had heart enough for but one love," and though in all these years she has gone every day, until the threads of gray in her head outnumber the brown, to see what she could do for mutilated Basil Boynford, he has never spoken of the love in his heart which time and Keziah's tender care have strengthened.

Beer.

As for malt liquors: Excellent ale, pure and healthful, is imported from England and Scotland, and some very good beer from continental Europe. Of American ale, some is good and much—especially of the brands that have built up saloon reputation—is bad. American beer, particularly that made in and near New York, must be viewed with grave suspicion. The business of manufacturing it has grown in a short time to vast proportions, and tempting many to engage in it by the excessive profits it affords, has engendered the keenest rivalry. Unfortunately, that rivalry has led, not to the perfection of the product, but to the cheapening of production by employment of rice, glucose, corn and other substitutes for good barley malt; the use of various drugs to take the place of hops or to give supposably desirably effects of flavor, color and headiness, or to compel the thirst of the drinker, and the evil abbreviation of the time necessary for honest brewing. The latter wickedness is perhaps the worst, as it is the one most generally practiced. Four months at least should elapse after beer is brewed before it is drunk, to give time for the proper fermentation and clearing from the baleful yeast germs and impure matter that in its earlier processes it necessarily contains. But in our local beer fermentation is artificially stopped and the stuff is vended when it is no more than fourteen days to two months old. At best, very new beer is blended with that slightly older. Brewers claim that 50 per cent. of properly fermented beer six months old and 50 per cent. of two months old and but half fermented gives 100 per cent. of beer four months old, which is on a par with the affirmation that one fresh egg and one rotten egg mixed gives two good eggs. The universal practice of adding half a pound of bicarbonate of soda to each barrel of beer is a very bad one for drinkers.

We get some fairly good beer from Detroit, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, and other Western cities, and in Philadelphia there is one notably good beer made by an honest and eccentric old German, but good beer made in or near New York, even by brewers who in times past have most loudly claimed honesty for their product, can only be hoped for as a thing of the future, when it shall be necessary to keep intelligent people from discarding beer altogether. —James H. Connelly, in The Cook.

Twins That Look Alike and Think Alike.

Watkinsville boasts as many pretty girls as any town in Georgia to its population, and none are more popular than the twin sisters, Misses Sallie and Mollie Woodis. These young ladies resemble each other so nearly that even their intimate friends are often at a loss to tell "t'other from which," and they have a good deal of fun at the expense of young men who mistake which sister they are speaking to. They are devotedly attached to each other, and have never had a cross word. In fact, not only their tastes and wishes but their thoughts flow in the same channel. It is a singular fact, but nevertheless true, that when one's mind dwells upon a subject the other's thoughts are exactly the same. This has been tested time and again by friends calling one at a time aside and asking her thoughts, and they are found to be identical.—Savannah News.

ACCORDING to Prof. Tyndall's investigations, the singularly blue color of the water of Lake Geneva is due to the presence of small mineral particles, probably derived from glacier dust, brought into the lake by drainage from glacier streams.

A Rare Old Patriot.

Colonel George Mathews, afterward Governor of Georgia, was wounded at the battle of Eutaw Springs, in South Carolina, and was left on the field as the Continental forces were retiring to take another position. A British soldier, in passing him, seeing he was alive, lifted his musket to stab him with his bayonet. His commander caught the musket, and said:

"Would you murder a wounded officer?"

Colonel Mathews, turning upon his back, asked:

"To whom do I owe my life?"

"To me," said the British lieutenant.

Colonel Mathews saw the uniform was British, and said in an angry tone:

"Well, sir, I want you to know that I scorn a life saved by a d—d Britou."

A "Madman's" Legacy.

"Sire," exclaimed a man in the homely garb of a mechanic to Richelieu, Prime Minister of France, as he was entering his palace, "sire, I have made a discovery which will make rich and great the nation which shall develop it. Sire, will you give me an audience?"

Richelieu, constantly importuned, finally ordered the "madman" imprisoned. Even so still he did not desist from declaring his "delusion," which one day attracted the attention of a British nobleman, who heard De Caus's story, and developed his discovery of steam power!

All great discoveries are at first derided.

Seven years ago a man yet under middle age, enriched by a business which covered the continent, found himself suddenly stricken down. When his physicians said recovery was impossible, he used a new discovery, which, like all advances in science, had been bitterly opposed by the schoolmen. Nevertheless, it cured him, and out of gratitude therefor he consecrated a part of his wealth to the spreading of its merits before the world. Such, in brief, is the history of Warner's safe cure, which has won, according to the testimony of eminent persons, the most deserved reputation ever accorded to any known compound, and which is finally winning on its merits alone the approval of the most conservative practitioners. Its fame now belts the globe.—The Herald.

Blaine and Hatton.

"Let me tell you a little story about Jim Blaine and Frank Hatton," said a passenger from Burlington. "A few years ago Blaine was out in Iowa, making speeches, and Hatton was then Chairman of our State Committee, and of course went along with as big a man as Blaine to the various meetings. They were on the cars one day, going to a country town to speak at a meeting, when Blaine turned to Hatton and said:

"'At this town we're going to I believe there's a man named Chris Schlagle, isn't there?'

"'Yes,' replied Hatton, 'and I know him by sight.'

"'If you see him on the grounds,' said Blaine, 'point him out to me. I used to know him down in Washington County, Pennsylvania.'

"After Blaine and Hatton had got upon the stand, and while some local orator was speaking, Hatton spoke to Blaine and told him where Schlagle was standing. Blaine got up and marched straight for the man pointed out to him.

"'How are you, Chris?' he exclaimed, holding out his hand. 'I remember you well. You have changed very little since I knew you down in Washington County. I never forget a face. How is Mrs. Schlagle?'

"'B-but my name ain't Schlagle,' replied the astonished farmer; 'my name is Schermerhorn, and I was never in Pennsylvania in my life.'

"Blaine walked back to the platform quite discomfited. Hatton said he had made a mistake, but Blaine looked at him in a queer sort of a way, as if to say, 'I'll get even with you yet.'"—Chicago Herald.

From the National Capital.

The Washington Post says: We admire the stand taken by numerous eminent physicians in changing the mode of treatment of coughs and colds, and publicly indorsing Red Star Cough Cure because it is efficacious, free from dangerous ingredients, and without morphia or opium. This excellent remedy costs but twenty-five cents.

How Old Sol Used to Shine.

In 1803 and 1804 the Rhine, Loire, and Seine ran dry. The heat in several French provinces during the summer of 1705 was equal to that in a glass furnace. Meat could be cooked by merely exposing it to the sun. Not a soul dared venture out between noon and 4 p. m.

In 1718 many shops had to close. The theaters never opened their doors for three months. Not a drop of water fell during six months.

In 1773 the thermometer rose to 118 degrees.

In 1779 the heat at Bologna was so great that a great number of people were stifled. There was not sufficient air for the breath, and people had to take refuge under ground.

In July, 1793, the heat became intolerable. Vegetables were burned up, and fruit dried on the trees. The furniture and woodwork in dwelling-houses cracked and split up. Meat went bad in an hour.

The Officers Passed Them.

A year or so ago a merchant vessel was sent to Havana to bring back to the United States some shipwrecked sailors. While there they obtained a lot of cheap cigars, which they corded up in a great pile on the deck. Over this pile, which looked very much like cord wood, they threw a lot of old sail cloth, and when the customs officers asked them if they had any dutiable goods on board they pointed to this pile and said it contained cigars. The customs officers thought they were being guyed, and did not look at them.

A Lucky Man.

"A lucky man is rarer than a white crow," says Juvenal, and we think he knew. However, we have heard of thousands of lucky ones, and we propose to let their secret out. They were people broken down in health, suffering with liver, blood, and skin diseases, scrofula, dropsy, and consumption, and were lucky enough to hear of and wise enough to use Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the sovereign blood purifier, tonic, and alterative of the age.

BETTER THAN A GOLDEN LEG.

"Miss Kilmansegg and her golden leg," will never be forgotten so long as the genius of Thomas Hood, with all his gentle humor and tender pathos is remembered, but it is doubtful if any one will ever envy the heroine of that poem her unique limb, which brought with it so many misfortunes. In this prosaic age a good strong leg of flesh, bone, and muscle is much to be preferred, whether its possessor be a professional pedestrian or a solid unassuming citizen.

It is to this last class that Mr. M. P. Schrock, of 672 West Lake street, Chicago, belongs. Mr. Shrock is a well-known dry goods merchant, and counts himself fortunate in having a pair of good strong legs. For one of his legs he has a peculiar regard, as he came near losing it through rheumatism. Athlophoros saved it for him, however, and for that invaluable remedy he now cherishes an almost equal regard. The story is well told by Mr. Schrock in his own words:

"During the Spring of 1884 I was stricken with rheumatism in its very worst form, and was confined to my bed entirely helpless for about four weeks. My leg pained me so intensely that I could not let it rest on the bed without some support. So I had a pulley attached from the ceiling and to that a sling was fastened. I could rest my leg in this, changing the height, and in that manner I managed to obtain some little relief. During the four weeks I lay in bed I tried many remedies without avail. Finally I made a change and employed physicians. They tried their very best to give me relief, but could not. Instead of getting better, I was growing worse.

"My doctor finally decided that it would be necessary to make an incision in my thigh, and if there was not a marked improvement in my condition from that operation, that amputation of my leg would be required. This, as you may well imagine, discouraged and disheartened me beyond measure. About this time my wife noticed in a Richmond, Ind., paper, for which we subscribe, the name of a personal friend who had been cured by the use of Athlophoros. She called my attention to it, and I said at once, 'Get a bottle and try it.' She bought a bottle, the doctor was discharged and we began using it immediately. I experienced great relief in the first few doses. In two days after I began with the medicine I was in my store attending to my business, and I have not been troubled with rheumatism since."

"How much Athlophoros did you use for this remarkable cure, Mr. Schrock?"

"About one and a third bottles. The remaining two-thirds of a bottle is still unused at my house."

"Don't you think it was a very quick cure for so bad a case?" was asked.

"I certainly think it not only quick," answered Mr. Schrock, "but wonderful, and I feel that I cannot say too much for Athlophoros. I never let an opportunity pass when I can recommend it, as it surely did everything for me."

Mr. Schrock is now in the best of health, and considers himself a living example of what Athlophoros can do for those whom rheumatism has brought even to death's door.

A Druggist's Story.

Mr. Isaac C. Chapman, Druggist, Newburg, N. Y., writes us: "I have for the past ten years sold several gross of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I can say of it what I cannot say of any other medicine. I have never heard a customer speak of it but to praise its virtues in the highest manner. I have recommended it in a great many cases of Whooping Cough, with the happiest effects. I have used it in my own family for many years; in fact, always have a bottle in the medicine closet ready for use."

The Youths' Companion Offer, which appeared two weeks ago, was most liberal, and will be repeated this year. Now is the time to subscribe and get the rest of the year free. The Companion comes every week, is handsomely illustrated, and interests every member of the household. Perry Mason & Co., are publishers, Boston, Mass.

Chronic Catarrh.—The result of 25 years' Catarrh:—the bridge, or division of my nose, was about half gone. FOR DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, depression of spirits, and general debility in their various forms; also, as a preventive against fever and ague, and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., of New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

The Children's Health must not be neglected. Colds in the head and sneezing bring on Catarrh and throat and lung affections. Ely's Cream Balm cures at once. It is perfectly safe and is easily applied with the finger. It also cures Catarrh and Hay Fever, the worst cases yielding to it in a short time. Sold by druggists. 50 cents. Ely Bros., Owego, N. Y.

Those to whom I have sold Athlophoros speak of it in the highest praise and recommend it to others. No medicine for rheumatism or neuralgia has given such complete satisfaction. D. W. Hurd, druggist, Aurora, Illinois.

Liquor Laws.

In truth, liquor laws are either to make men better who do not want to be made better, or to make men better who have not self-control, and in both cases at the expense of others. "You shall not enjoy a glass of beer, because if you can get it, so can I, and I shall make a beast of myself." Or, "You shall not enjoy one glass of beer, because you take too many." Is that just? Is it a warrantable interference? Then see the mischief of such laws. The public conscience does not go with them. It is certain they will be broken. Every one knows that stealing is wrong; disgrace follows conviction. But every one knows that drinking a glass of beer is not wrong; no discredit attaches to it. It is done, and when done against the law, you have the usual mischiefs of law breaking, smuggling, informations, oaths, perjury, shuffling, and lies. Besides, as a matter of fact, it fails. Nothing can show this more strongly than the failure in Wales of the Sunday Closing act. Further, what is to be done? Is the sale of drink to be suspended all over the United Kingdom? Impossible. In parts only? Then all the more will be sold elsewhere. On certain days only? Then provision will be made for a store of it, and the drunkard will sot himself at home with no eyes on him to check him. Consider, too, the practical unfairness on men, who, having no cellar, trust to the public house for what is a reasonable and wholesome enjoyment when not abused. Can nothing then be done by law to diminish the mischief caused by drink? I say "No." Whether it is desirable to limit the number of drink shops is a matter as to which I have great doubt and difficulty. But grant that there is the right to forbid it wholly, or partially, in place or time, I say it is a right which should not be exercised. To do so is to interfere with the innocent enjoyment of millions in order to lessen the mischief arising from the folly or evil propensities, not of themselves, but of others. And, further, that such legislation is attended with the mischiefs which always follow from the creation of offenses in law which are not so in conscience. Punish the mischievous drunkard—indeed, perhaps, even punish him for being drunk in public, and so a likely source of mischief. Punish, on the same principle, the man who sells drink to the drunken. But go no further. Trust to the good sense and improvement of mankind, and let charity be shown to those who would trust to them rather than to law. —Drink—Lord Bramwell.

No Check on Bank Tellers.

Scott's steal was the leading topic of conversation in the banks during the day. Several bank Presidents were asked whether paying tellers as a rule were so situated that they could walk off with large sums of money without being immediately detected. President F. D. Tappan, of the Gallatin National Bank, answered this question by pointing to his paying teller and saying: "That man handles the money. He could take a million dollars out of here and I would not know it."

O. D. Baldwin, President of the Fourth National, said that he knew of no means to prevent paying tellers from stealing if they were bound to steal. "A man who handles large sums of money has got to be trusted," said Mr. Baldwin. "It is true that paying tellers are required to give bonds, but the amount of the bond in each individual case is so small that it but a fraction of what the man can easily slip into his pockets. Not a day passes but there is some discussion among bankers as to what can be done to prevent thefts by employes. The question is one of deep solicitude with the heads of financial institutions." Mr. Baldwin conducted the reporter into the "cage" which inclosed the paying teller of the Fourth National. "Mr. ——, show me a parcel of money," said the President. The teller handed Mr. Baldwin a package about ten inches thick containing several large envelopes filled with greenbacks, national bank bills and gold certificates of very large denominations.

"How much is there in this package?" asked the President.

"A little more than $5,000,000," answered the teller.

"Now, see here," said Mr. Baldwin to the reporter, pulling out one of the envelopes, which was about an inch and a half thick, "this envelope contains just $1,000,000; what is to prevent the teller from slipping it into his pocket and taking it away?"

"Nothing except his honesty," interposed the teller.

"Well," continued Mr. Baldwin, "I don't know of any banking institution where the paying teller has not the same opportunities that he has here. Bank officers are compelled to place implict confidence in their tellers?"—New York Times.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

Gen. Gillespie's Arab Horse.

The confidence of a horse in a firm rider and his own courage is great, as was conspicuously evinced in the case of an Arab possessed by the late Gen. Sir Robert R. Gillespie, who being present on the race course of Calcutta during one of the great Hindu festivals, when several hundred thousand people may be assembled to witness all kinds of shows, was suddenly alarmed by the shrieks of the crowd and informed that a tiger had escaped from his keeper. Sir Robert immediately called for his horse, and grasping a boar spear which was in the hands of one of the crowd rode to attack this formidable enemy. The tiger probably was amazed at finding himself in the middle of such a number of shrieking beings flying from him in all directions, but the moment he perceived Sir Robert he crouched with the attitude of preparing to spring at him, and that instant the gallant soldier passed his horse in a leap over the tiger's back and struck the spear through his spine. The horse was a small gray, afterward sent home by him a present to the Prince Regent. When Sir Robert fell at the storming of Kalunga his favorite black charger, bred at the Cape of Good Hope, and carried by him to India, was at the sale of his effects competed for by several officers of his division and finally knocked down to the privates of the Eighth Dragoons, who contributed their prize money to the amount of £500 sterling to retain this commemoration of their late commander. Thus the charger was always led at the head of a regiment on a march, and at the station of Cawnpore was indulged with taking his ancient station at the color stand, where the salute of passing squadrons was given at drill and on reviews. When the regiment was ordered home, the funds of the privates running low, he was bought for the same sum by a relative of ours, who provided funds and a paddock for him, where he might end his days in comfort; but when the corps had marched and the sound of trumpet had departed he refused to eat, and on the first opportunity, being led out to exercise, he broke from his groom, and, galloping to his ancient station on the parade, after neighing aloud, dropped down and died.—Horses, by Lieut.-Col. Charles Hamilton Smith.

Coast Defenses.

Mr. Tilden has written a long letter to Mr. Carlisle, who has been chosen speaker of the house of representatives, urging the necessity of substantial coast defenses, closing with the following pertinent paragraph:

"In constructing permanent fortifications, and in providing an ample supply of the best modern artillery, the annual cost of maintainence is inconsiderable. Nearly the whole expenditure is in the original outlay for construction. If we do not make the expenditure necessary to provide for our sea coast defenses when we have a surplus, and have no need to levy new taxes, we certainly will not make those expenditures when we have no longer a surplus in the treasury. To leave our vast interests defenseless in order to reduce the cost of whiskey to its consumers would be a solecism. The present time is peculiarly favorable for providing for this great national necessity too long neglected. Not only does the surplus in the trrasury supply ample means to meet this great public want without laying new burdens upon the people, but the work can now be done at a much lower cost than has ever before been possible. The defensive works would consist almost entirely of steel and iron. These materials can now be had at unprecedently low prices. A vast supply of machinery and of labor called into existence by a great vicissitude in the steel and iron industries offers itself to our service. We should have the satisfaction of knowing while we were availing ourselves of the supplies which would ordinarily be unattainable, we were setting in motion important industries and giving employment to labor in a period of depression. With encouragement by the guarantee of work, or, perhaps, by the government itself furnishing the plant, the inventive genius of our people would be applied to the creation of new means and improved machinery, and establishments would spring into existence capable of supplying all of the national wants, and rendering us completely independent of all other countries in respect to the means of national defense."

How the Tariff Affects Shipbuilding.

At the recent conference of free traders and revenue reformers in Chicago, Mr. Gibbons, the Wilmington shipbuilder, recited the evil effects of tariff upon the shipbuilding interests in the following words:

"The only manufacturing industry that has enjoyed absolute protection from the competition of foriegn capital is that of building ships—the one that above all others, fits, in an unqualified way, a people to maintain their independence and to receive and enjoy the respect of other nations. This one seems to have been that upon which the crushing influence of protection has been most felt, and almost the only one that is nearly dead. I speak of that which I personally know when I tell you that it it is about as easy for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle' as for an American shipbuilder to build a steamship at a price that would return to him the money he would expend in producing it, leaving all ideas of profit clear out of all consideration. High-tariff duties, or, as they are familiarly called, Protection to American Industry, have protected this noble calling to its death, in that they have caused the advance on prices of all things so that little or nothing produced in the United States can be sold abroad, save only raw materials, and only a few of these, resulting in no business for ships to do. It is not strange that none are built. * * *

"Previons to 1862, before the present high measure of taxation was established, there were upwards of twenty large ship-yards in and around New York city, and more than half as many large foundries and machine shops, all engaged in building vessels and the machinery for them. To-day scarce any of either remain. If the consequences resulting from high-tariff duties have not worked their destruction, pray what did it?"

Michigan Harbors.

Advance copies of the report of the chief of engineers of the army have been printed. The report contains much information of great importance to the navigation interests of Michigan. The report will be endorsed and sent to congress by the secretary of war this week. The chief recommendation is that the government purchase the Portage Lake ship canal of the Portage Lake and River Improvement company for the purpose of making the same a free water way. The engineer recommends the purchase for $350,000; says it is demanded and warranted by the already large and increasing commerce of Lake Superior. At the opening of congress, Senator Conger will introduce a bill to carry out his recommendation. It is proposed to build new and enlarged locks at Sault St. Marie to obtain a depth of 20 feet of water in both the canal and the river. The estimated cost of these improvements is $1,700,000, and $250,000 is asked for to commence the work. To continue and complete the work of getting 20 feet of water in Hay Lake channel, St. Mary's river, the report calls for $2,334,115, and the amount asked for to be expended during the next fiscal year is $500,000.

The obligation to the government to build a dry dock at Sault St. Marie is referred to in the engineer's report. The estimate for carrying this out is $353,872, and the amount which can be profitably expended during the next fiscal year is $215,000, of which $150,000 should be appropriated by the United States, and $65,000 (more or less) transferred by the state of Michigan. The estimated cost of improvements at St. Clair Flats Canal is $153,298.

The work of getting a navigable depth of four feet in the Grand river below Grand Rapids will be continued under the $18,204.22 unexpended and still available. For the harbor of refuge at Portage Lake a navigable channel 300 feet wide and 18 feet deep is sought. To complete this work $197,500 is needed, and $150,000 is asked for the next fiscal year. The project for the ice harbor at Belle river is to get a channel 30 feet wide and 13 feet deep and make a safe harbor against running ice. The estimated cost is $14,465.

The following estimates for other Michigan harbors and amounts needed for the coming fiscal year are given.

	For completion	For next fiscal year.
Frankfort harbor	$80,000	$50,000
Manistee harbor	102,700	50,000
Ludington harbor	419,185	250,000

Grand Haven harbor	210,000	150,000
Black Lake harbor	20,000	20,000
Saugatuck harbor	8,000	8,000
South Haven harbor	82,000	40,000
St. Joseph harbor	51,000	51,000
Cheboygan harbor	100,000	50,000
Thunder Bay harbor	10,000	5,000

What is This But Robbery.

In the course of a speech at Birmingham, England, Nov. 12, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the radical leader, gave the following illustration of the operation of a protective tariff: "I will tell you something that I do not think I have ever told in public before—a very curious incident in my commercial experience. The Americans had a duty of about 100 per cent. upon screws, to protect that poor industry, to keep it in the country for the benefit of working classes. In spite of the duty of 100 per cent. we were able to send screws there, and we did send very large quantities. What happened? The American manufacturers came over here and they said: 'We are making 100 per cent upon our capital. If you continue to send screws to America we shall of course be obliged to reduce our prices. That will of course shut you out, but reduce our profits. That will not be good for either of us. Now let us make a bargain. We will pay you so much a year to sit still and not send a screw to America.' Well they did it. [Loud laughter and cheers.] They did it, and my firm received a handsome income for years from the American manufacturers, protected as they were by the folly and stupidity of this protectionist legislation. We received a very comfortable income to sit with folded hands and send no screws to America. [Renewed laughter.] But after a little while the American manufacturers went to congress and said: 'Here is a native manufacturer deserves protection, employs a lot of working people in danger of being ruined by competition from abroad. You must raise the duties—and raise the duties to abont 120 or 150 per cent. And then of course our income ceased, and we were shut ont. But now I want you to see who are the losers in the thing. Not the American manufacturers who were able to make 100 per cent upon their capital and pay a handsome subsidy. The only people who suffered were the working classes of the United States who had to pay more for every screw they used and every manufacture in which they were engaged."

W. H. Vanderbilt Dead.

A dispatch was received by telephone Tuesday night, announcing that W. H. Vanderbilt, the railroad king, died of paralysis that afternoon. Mr. Vanderbilt was in apparent excellent health, and was discussing the new terminal facilities of the B. & O. with his friend Mr. Garrett, at the time.

The headquarters of the Cattle-Growers' Association has been fixed at St. Louis. The new Secretary, Colonel Cunningham, of Texas, being sick, Mr. Allen, who has been Assistant Secretary under Mr. Atwater, will serve for three months.

The militia, police, and municipal officers of Indianapolis, on Sunday, the 29th ult., escorted the remains of Vice-President Hendricks, from his residence to the Court House. Every building on the line of march was draped in mourning. The body lay in state Sunday and Monday, and was viewed by thousands of people. Mrs. Hendricks sent a message to President Cleveland urging him to remain in Washington, owing to the weighty public reasons that exist against his coming West to attend her late husband's funeral. Many public men, both Republicans and Democrats, called upon the President and urged him not to make the trip, and he received many letters and telegrams on the subject, opposing his going. The Executive finally decided to heed the advice and remain at the capital. He said:

> In the first moment of the shock of Mr. Hendricks' death I yielded to my inclination, and declared my intention to be present at the funeral. Of course, in reaching that conclusion I did not put out of view a peremptory press of public business or what I deemed a sufficient consideration of my duty to the people. The public business I thought I could dispose of by additional application and more hours of work, and I considered it to be my duty to the people to answer a tender sentiment of respect and affection to the dead Vice President which does them great honor. I am satisfied now that I was at fault in considering the question, and that I did not take as comprehensive a view of the duty I owe the public as I should—that is, I did not look at every phase of it, and I am afraid my strong personal desire somewhat clouded my judgment. I am now reminded by some of the best and most patriotic and thoughtful of our citizens that the real and solemn duties of my office are at the National Capital, and that in the present peculiar and delicate situation I ought not to take even the remote chance of accident incident to travel to gratify a sentiment so general and so characteristic as that involved in this subject. I have been profoundly impressed by these considerations, but most of all influenced by their strong and unanimous presentation by the devoted friends of the late Vice President living in his State and city, and their indorsement by the noble and patriotic woman who, in the infinite sorrow of her widowhood, reflects the spirit and character of her honored husband in her solicitude for the public good. I am now certain that neither my desire, nor the sentiment referred to, nor the difficulty that attends in this case a change of design, nor any stubborn idea of heroism, will justify me in subjecting the country to any greater chance of disaster than attends my performance of strict duty here, and that I ought not to inflict upon my countrymen even the unrest and anxiety attending my departure, absence, and return in attendance upon the funeral ceremonies.

The contestants in the recent billiard tournament have agreed to play off the ties in Chicago just before Christmas. The winner will take the net receipts of the games to come, with $1,000 conditionally offered by Mr. Bensinger.

Gov. Hubbard, of Minnesota, has decided not to call an extra session of the Legislature.

From the opening of lake navigation to Nov. 30, there were shipped by lake to Buffalo, 2,783,558 barrels of flour and 48,969,371 bushels of grain. The shipments from Buffalo of coal, cement, and salt are largely in excess of the shipments last season.

The Apache Indians have again broken loose in Arizona. A Tucson dispatch says: The Chiricahuas killed the driver of Graham's bullion team last evening, sixteen miles from San Carlos Agency, and drove off all the stock. The people of the Globe Agency are much alarmed, fearing further depredations. The Indians have killed, besides the driver mentioned, some American herders, nine White Mountain squaws, and several children. The reservation has been raided for sixty miles. The renegades crossed the Gila, going south, at the sub-agency. Gen. Sheridan arrived at Fort Bowie, and is conferring with Gen. Crook.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has decided that the Cleveland and Cincinnati election law is unconstitutional.

In regard to the Nebraska land conspiracy, for which several arrests were made at Omaha, it is believed that the same parties have been involved in land frauds in Wyoming. It is said that the conspiracy is heavily backed financially.

The female members of St. Albert's Polish Catholic Church at Detroit threw the new priest into the street and locked the doors. Twenty-five policemen soon dismounted from patrol-wagons and engaged in a bloody fight with the enraged women, who used umbrellas, stones, and clubs. The contest lasted for an hour. The deposed priest quieted his people by promising to remain until the trouble was settled.

SOUTHERN.

A narrow-gauge train was thrown from the track near Gastonia, N. C., twelve persons being seriously wounded.

Mayor Fulton and Colonel R. G. Lowe, editor of the News, engaged in an encounter at Galveston, Texas. The Mayor broke a stick over Lowe's arm, and Lowe securing the broken portion, both men belabored each other soundly.

Before the body of John Harvey was interred at Atlanta, Ga., it was noticed that the coffin was very light, and, the lid being removed, the discovery was made that sand had been substituted for the remains, which, it is supposed, the doctors had stolen.

An assignment was made by Robert Lawton & Co., saddlery and harness dealers at Baltimore. The assignee's bond is for $100,000.

WASHINGTON.

Washington special: The President and the two New York members of the Cabinet are opposed to a change in the House rules. They fear that any curtailment of the powers of the Appropriations Committee will be looked upon as an attack on Randall, and will widen the breach between the majority and the minority of the party. They are also afraid that the distribution of the appropriation bills among several committees will result in increased appropriations, which would be used to the disadvantage of the Democratic party in the Congressional elections next fall. The administration has little hope now of getting control of the Senate, and if the Democratic party lost the House the administration would feel rather lonesome.

The inquiries of Secretary Manning have developed a strong sentiment against tariff agitation by Congress.

The annual report from the life-saving service shows that there are 203 stations, 157 being on the Atlantic, thirty-eight on the lakes, seven on the Pacific, and one at the falls of the Ohio, Louisville, Ky. Out of 2,226 lives imperiled in 256 disasters to vessels 2,196 were rescued, and of a total value of property placed in jeopardy amounting to $1,684,450, the report says that $3,352,760 was saved.

John L. Sullivan, who had just secured a divorce, was last week married in Washington to a variety actress named Annie Livingston.

The Federal Commissioner of Railroads recommends that the debt of the Pacific lines be extended to a period more convenient to the companies. The Union Pacific has $225,551,447 of stock and debt; the Central owes $133,823,218.

Under instructions from Secretary Manning, the Customs Collector at Baltimore will make retrenchments in salaries to the amount of $20,000 per annum.

POLITICAL.

The Prohibitionists carried Atlanta, and the county of Fulton, in which it is situated, after a prolonged and desperate contest, by the very narrow majority of 219 in a poll exceeding 9,000 votes. The fight was so fierce as to excite the whole State of Georgia as spectators of the battle. The city proper gave an anti-Prohibition majority of 324, but the county precincts went "dry" by 539, thus beating the "wets" in the city by 219.

The following Federal appointments are announced from Washington:

Richard H. Lancaster to be Surveyor of Customs for the port of St. Louis, Mo. Oliver P. Remick to be First Assistant Engineer in the marine service of the United States. M. L. Cornuck, of Grand Forks, Dak., to be Secretary of Dakota Territory. To be Registers of Land Offices: Robert V. Yeakle, of Little Rock, Ark., at Little Rock, Ark.; Henry C. Tipton, of Melbourne, Ark., at Harrison, Ark.; Chester H. Warner, of Colfax, Washington Territory, at Walla Walla, Washington Territory. Bartholomew Colley, of Salem, Oregon, to be agent for the Indians of the Umatilla agency in Oregon.

Jacob Schoenhof, of New York, to be Consul of the United States at Tunstall, England. Frank Je Parke, of West Virginia, to be Principal Clerk of the Public Lands. William K. Ramsay, of Arkansas, to be Register of the Land Office at Camden, Ark. John R. Thompson, of Arkansas, to be Receiver of Public Moneys at Camden, Ark.

Postmasters: Edward D. Porter, at Joplin, Mo.; James S. McGee, Paris, Mo.; D. W. Scott, Galena, Ill.; John Marcus, Hamilton, Mo.; Lloyd N. Lease, Tiffin, O.; W. H. Cannon, Merrill, Wis.; Robert J. McNally, Keeseville, N. Y.; Frank White, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The eight Indian murderers sentenced to death for their bloody deeds in the late Northwest rebellion were hanged at Battleford. They met death stoically. The murders for which they were hanged were in each instance cruel and unprovoked. The eight hanged were: Wandering Spirit, leader in Frog Lake massacre, for killing Agent Quinn; Round-the-Sky, for killing Father Fafard at Frog Lake; Manachoos and Miserable Man, for killing Charles Gouin, a British-Columbian half-breed, at Frog Lake; Mapaz and Little Bear, for killing George Dill, brother of the member for Muskoka; Man-without-blood, a young Assiniboine Indian, for killing Bernard Tremont, near Battleford, on the morning of the uprising; Ietch, an old Assiniboine, for killing Instructor Payne, at Eagle Hills. While Riel was alive these men were full of the hope that their lives would be spared, and spent their time in such gayeties and amusement as their position permitted, but with the news of his death their manner changed and they became serious. Upon first learning their own fate and that hope of reprieve was past they broke down and wept for days together.

FOREIGN.

The steamer Greyhound last month started out from Hong Kong on a trading trip with 120 passengers. When twenty miles from shore, forty of the passengers fired on the officers, killing the captain. The vessel was robbed of $10,000 worth of goods, which were placed on three junks. Six men concerned in the outrage have been captured, and will be beheaded at Canton.

Two naturalized Americans, residents of Illinois, named Peter Jepsen and Martin Graasloch, visiting at Hadersleben, have been ordered to quit Germany.

Charles Stewart Parnell was elected to Parliament from the city of Cork by a vote of 6,745. Timothy Healy, who was on the ticket with him, received 6,536 votes.

Parnell will hold the balance of power in the next English Parliament. A cable special to the Chicago Tribune says:

> Several things in regard to the election seem to be settled to-day which were uncertain yesterday. First, the Liberals have abandoned the hope of attaining a majority; second, the most of the Liberals who will sit in the next Parliament will be Moderates, and Lord Hartington will be their leader—not Mr. Chamberlain; third, the Tories will not have a majority over all, and Mr. Parnell will hold the balance of power. The attitude of the Irish leaders has caused the intensest indignation among English Liberals. Several of the largest Liberal employers of labor in Manchester are beginning quietly to get rid of their Irish hands. The Liberal collapse is variously explained. The Tory papers talk incessantly of the "Tory reaction." This is nonsense. There is no Tory reaction. The sweeping defeat of the Liberals in London and Lancashire are entirely due to the Parnellite vote, to the unequaled perfection of its organization, and to the frantic energy of the Irish leaders and rank and file. The Tories are turning upon their Irish allies with amusing celerity. The chief Tory organ has already told Thomas Power O'Connor, whose stumping of Lancashire produced the Tory victories, that he will soon be turned out of his Liverpool seat. The Tories have also defeated the Land-Reform candidates in Scotland, considering that they were thereby defeating Parnell. The fact is, Parnell had refused to have any dealings with the land-restorers, and their sole Irish partisan was Michael Davitt.

Under instructions from the War Office in London, preparations are being made at Alexandria and Cairo for a new expedition to Dongola, comprising about 6,500 men.

Prince Alexander's forces have defeated the Servians at Pirot and captured the town. The Porte has asked the Prince to stop the advance of his victorious troops. Meanwhile Turkish war preparations continue on a large scale.

The German government has declined to permit the landing of an American cable on its coast.

The hangman at Norwich, England, severed the head from the body of Robert Goodale as though it had been done with a razor. Many spectators sickened at the sight. The drop was six feet, and the weight used was fifteen stone.

King Theban, of Burmah, becoming alarmed at the rapid approach of the British expeditionary force, notwithstanding the resistance offered by the Burmese, sent a messenger to Gen. Prendergast begging him to grant an armistice for the purpose of peaceably settling the difficulty between Burmah and the Indian Government. Gen. Prendergast, in reply, demanded the surrender of the Burmese army and Mandalay, the capital, stating that only then could he entertain any request looking to a settlement of the dispute. King Theban acceded to the terms, and the Ava forts, with twenty-eight guns, were turned over to the British troops. A garrison was placed there, and the British troops proceeded to Mandalay.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

A London dispatch of the 2d inst. says: "All the manufacturing districts in the counties contested to-day and yesterday, so far as heard from, have returned liberals, and reduced the conservative gains to forty-seven, with nine constituencies to hear from, all of which are claimed to have gone against the conservatives. The actual corrected official returns give the liberal majority up to midnight as thirty-one seats, sixty-two votes on a division. The Conservatives require seventy-five more net gains to beat, as against forty-seven net gains in all since the election commenced. Unless something extraordinary occurs the Tories, therefore, cannot possibly have a majority. A Liberal Cabinet is consequently assured if Gladstone will take office, unless a sudden revolution should take place in the unpolled constituencies."

King Theebaw of Burmah has surrendered himself to the British invaders.

News has been received at San Francisco that Clarence Whistler, the well-known wrestler, died at Melbourne, Australia.

The Turkish Ministry has decided to grant autonomy to Eastern Roumelia, and to set aside the commission appointed to restore Turkish administration in that country. The Roumelians denounce the new decree as a scheme to facilitate the re-entry of the forces of the Porte. The Sultan has notified Prince Alexander that he has sent a commission to Pirot to assist in arranging an honorable peace with King Milan.

The Farmers' National Congress assembled at Indianapolis, sixty delegates being present, representing eleven States. The address of the President, Robert Beverly, of Virginia, demands the creation of a Secretary of Agriculture as a Government department, an extension of the benefits of the signal service, and the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia.

The President has appointed A. A. Wilson, a prominent insurance man of Washington, Marshal of the District. In making his appointment the President has directed that Mr. Wilson shall consider himself bound only to perform the duties imposed upon him by law. This means that Mr. Wilson will not act as court chamberlain on great society occasions at the White House. Hayes followed this plan when objection was made by society to Frederick Douglass, whom he appointed Marshal. Mr. Hayes designated Col. Rockwell, of the army, to act as major domo at the White House, and introduce visitors to the President at the grand receptions. This plan was adhered to until Marshal Henry came in, when he served as court chamberlain.

Sam Randall is said to be at work on a new tariff bill which will reduce the revenue $30,000,000.

Washington special: "The declarations of the Congressmen from the West and South who have arrived are not very reassuring to those who have hoped that it might be possible to repeal the silver-dollar law. Many of these Congressmen are outspoken in their declaration that no compromise will be accepted. It is quite certain that the 'root and out' will not consent to the unconditional repeal of the silver-coinage act. So determined are they on this point that it is evident that they would resort to all parliamentary means to defeat the passage of a bill having that end in view if one could be favorably reported from a committee."

Lima has been surrendered to Gen. Caceres. Eusebio Sanchez was appointed President of Peru until an election can be held and general amnesty has been proclaimed.

DEPOSED BY DEATH.

The Youthful King of Spain Succumbs to the Universal Enemy.

Princess Mercedes Proclaimed Queen Under the Regency of Her Mother.

The death of King Alfonso removes one restraining influence that has kept people and parties in Spain within proper bounds. Alfonso was accepted as executive by the Spanish nation as a sort of compromise. Spain had been in a ferment for twenty or thirty years, and Alfonso was accepted in 1874, not because he was satisfactory to Monarchists or Republicans, but because all could tolerate him. Since his accession Spain has enjoyed ten years of comparative tranquillity. He succeeded in reconciling factions and establishing on a firm basis a constitutional monarchy, and the question of who can fill his place is a serious one.

THE MONARCH'S DEATH.

The Queen Appointed Regent—Political Future of Spain.

London dispatch:

King Alfonso of Spain died at Madrid on the morning of Wednesday, Nov. 25, of consumption, accelerated by dysentery. Throughout Monday night the King had spasmodic fits, the result of fever and debility. Six doctors from Madrid and two physicians of El Pardo were in constant attendance upon him. They decided on Tuesday morning that his Majesty was in a dangerous condition. The fits continued throughout Tuesday, and finally resulted in his death. The Pope's benediction arrived before he expired. All officers of state and the Cabinet members, except the Minister of War and the Minister of the Interior, were present at the death-bed. The Cabinet met immediately, and the Queen was appointed Regent. In accordance with the law, the members of the Cabinet have tendered their resignations, but will remain in office pending the Regent's pleasure.

Grave fears are entertained of a disturbance, and orders have been given to have the troops confined in the barracks. It has been decided to proclaim a state of siege at Madrid. A large force of military and police is being quartered throughout the country as a precaution against a Carlist uprising.

Princess Mercedes, the five-year-old daughter of Alfonso, will be Queen under the regency of her mother, Christina. Senor Sagasta will form a new Cabinet.

Washington telegram.

The Spanish Legation on Massachusetts avenue is draped in mourning on account of the death of King Alfonso. Mr. Valera, the Spanish Minister, speaking of the probable effect of the King's death upon the political future of Spain, said to-day:

"I see no reason why it should materially disturb the existing condition of things. It is natural to suppose that the Queen will be appointed Regent until her eldest child, now five years old, shall reach her majority. The King had grown in popularity ever since his succession to the throne eleven years ago. At that time the republican spirit was very strong among a certain portion of the Spanish people, and Alfonso had many bitter prejudices to overcome. This he gradually did."

When asked whether Castelar, the famous Republican leader, now a member of the Spanish Parliament, would be likely to attempt to restore the republic, Minister Valera shrugged his shoulders and said:

"I can't say what that man will do, but we Monarchists hope for the best. The nobles and ruling classes will be, as a unit in favor of a regency, but whether they will succeed or not is as yet a mere matter of speculation."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Historical Sketch of the Deceased Ruler.

Alfonso XII., Alfonso Francisco de Assisi Fernando Pio Juan Maria de la Concepcion Gregorio, etc., King of Spain, eldest son of the ex-Queen Isabella II., was born Nov. 28, 1857. When his mother was driven from the throne by the revolution of 1868, he accompanied her to Paris, where he resided with her for some time, but subsequently he went to Austria, in order to prosecute his studies in the Theresianum, or nobleman's academy, at Vienna, to which he was admitted Jan. 20, 1872. He remained there three months. June 25, 1870, Queen Isabella formally abdicated her right to the throne of Spain in favor of her son, but no open steps were taken at that time to secure for him the position which this abdication left open to him. His pretensions were, however, opposed by his cousin, the eldest son of the Duke of Montpensier, and his aunt, the Infanta Luisa, but as so many pretenders were calculated to complicate matters, the claim of Louis Philippe's grandson was ultimately waived in favor of the heir of Isabella. Early in 1871 the Prince of the Asturias, as he was then styled, visited England, was entered as a student at the military college at Sandhurst, and witnessed the autumn maneuvers at Aldershot, Dartmoor, and other places in the fall of the year, December 29, 1871, General Martinez Campos proclaimed him King of Spain in Valencia, and a few days later Alfonso, who had gone over to Paris in order to spend the deuil de l'An with his mother, left France for Spain, arriving at Madrid Jan. 14, 1875. He was most enthusiastically received. Feb. 16, 1876, he departed from Madrid to take command of the troops operating against the Carlists, and the 28th of the following month he returned in triumph to the capital at the head of 25,000 men, having subdued the Carlist insurrection. In the same year the ex-Queen Isabella returned to Spain, and was received by her son at Santander July 20.

King Alfonso married, Jan. 23, 1878, at Madrid, his cousin, the Princess Maria de las Mercedes, Infanta of Spain, daughter of the Duc de Montpensier. (She was born June 24, 1860.) The ex-Queen Isabella was much opposed to this union, and to make her disapproval she left Spain and went to Paris before the marriage ceremony took place. Queen Mercedes died June 26, 1878. King Alfonso married secondly Nov. 29, 1879, Maria Christina, daughter of the late Archduke Charles Ferdinand, of Austria. (She was born July 21, 1858.

DEATH'S SUMMONS.

Sudden Death of Vice-President Hendricks, After a Brief Illness.

He Expires Alone During the Temporary Absence of His Wife from His Bedside.

General Feeling of Grief Throughout the Whole Country Over the Sad Event.

Possible Political Effects of the Occurrence—The Presidency of the Senate in Dispute.

The Vice President of the United States, Thomas A. Hendricks, died at his home in Indianapolis on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 25, of paralysis of the heart. His death was sudden and unexpected. He was absolutely alone in his room at the time. Mrs. Hendricks had left him a few moments before to receive a caller, and his other attendants were absent, believing that he was in no immediate danger, and that the acute attack from which he was suffering had been relieved. While death was not immediately expected, it is true, however, that he was known to be in a critical condition of health, and did not look for many years of life. He had not been in robust health from the time he became subject to senile gangrene, as reported in the newspapers a couple of years ago. He knew that death, when it came, would come suddenly, and he was not unprepared for it.

THE DEATH-BED SCENE.

Particulars of the Vice President's Sudden Collapse.

Indianapolis telegrams give the following particulars of the death of the Vice President: Last night Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception at the residence of the Hon. John J. Cooper, Treasurer of State, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Mr. Hendricks had taken off the heavy clothing which he usually wore and put on a dress suit of light material. Before he got home he complained of chilliness and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to malarial influences. He sat by the fire for an hour or more before retiring, but declined to send for a physician, although urged to do so. He slept restlessly until about 8 o'clock this morning, when he arose, dressed himself, and ate quite a hearty breakfast, saying that he felt much better, and intended to attend to considerable delayed business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour, and he had apparently regained his physical vigor and cheerfulness.

An hour later, however, he began to be troubled with pains in the region of his stomach, and Mrs. Hendricks sent for the family physician, Dr. W. C. Thompson. As the pain continued to increase, he was given an emetic, and afterward an injection, and finally relief came. He arose from his bed, in which he had lain only a few minutes, and read the morning papers, talking cheerfully with his wife and an old house servant. Just before noon he had a relapse, however, and the physician was again summoned, and administered the usual remedies, besides bleeding the patient. Mr. Hendricks again expressed himself as being greatly relieved. He remained in his room all afternoon, occasionally rising from the bed, to which he was compelled to return by the recurrence of the abdominal pains. To callers who came, and they were numerous, he sent word that he was indisposed, but would be glad to see them to-morrow. About 4:30 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks, who had been at his bedside all day, went to the parlor to see a caller, who had come to consult with her regarding the affairs of a reformatory of which she was one of the managers, and she remained with him about twenty minutes. Tom, a colored servant, and Harry Morgan, Mr. Hendricks' nephew and page in Washington, remained with him. The servant went out, and Mr. Morgan staid. Mr. Hendricks tossed uneasily in his bed and complained of great pain, but suddenly it seemed to cease, and he said to his nephew: "I am free at last; send for Eliza," meaning his wife, and those were his last words, for the young man, not realizing the urgency of the message, did not deliver it at once.

Just before 5 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks came into the room and found that her husband was dead. The end of a long and eventful life had come peacefully and quietly. He lay on the bed, outside the covering, only partially disrobed, with his eyes half closed, as if he were in a gentle slumber. On his face there were no traces of pain or suffering, but a pallor had come over it which indicated only too plainly that he had passed away. It needed no close examination to tell that he was dead, and Mrs. Hendricks screamed and ran down-stairs.

A servant was dispatched to the residence of Dr. Thompson, adjoining, and he came immediately, but by the time he had reached the bedside the limbs of the dead Vice President were becoming cold and rigid, and to Mrs. Hendricks' pathetic appeal, "Oh! Doctor, can't you do something?" he was obliged to answer, "It is too late." Mrs. Hendricks became almost distracted with grief, and it was an hour or more before she was sufficiently composed to give any information about her husband's last moments. The family servants, two of whom had lived with them for years, ran about the house crying and moaning, and there was the utmost confusion for a time.

Dr. Thompson says that in his opinion Mr. Hendricks died of paralysis of the brain. For several years he had not been a robust man, and was subject to frequent "bad spells," as he called them, during which sometimes he would be prostrated for days at a time. About two years ago he was confined to his room for several weeks by a gangrenous affection of the foot which it was feared would result in blood-poisoning.

The news of Mr. Hendricks' death spread rapidly throughout the city, and there was a general expression of sorrow over it. Those who were his politically enemies here were his personal friends, and to everybody who called on him or met him he always had a pleasant word. There were crowds around the bulletin boards down town all the evening, while in the vicinity of his residence there was another crowd, all anxious to learn the particulars of his sudden demise. The evening papers could not get out extras fast enough to supply the demand. He had been dead but a few minutes when forces of men began draping the State, County and City Buildings in black, and throughout the night similar emblems were placed on nearly all the prominent business houses and residences, so that by morning the city will have put on a general garb of mourning.

Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks had lived in Indianapolis for nearly thirty years. Mrs. Hendricks, who is a brilliant and accomplished woman, was of great aid to him in his political career. Since her husband's serious attack two years ago, both of them have been apprehensive of a sudden end of his life, and the attachment between them has grown very strong—almost sentimentally so. So intense had this become, in fact, that he would not consent for his wife to be away from him for any length of time. Only last week while in Chicago he accompanied Mrs. Hendricks even on her shopping expeditions. They had frequently talked over his condition and the probabilities of his early death, and it is evident that for several months past there has been a growing fear of this kind on his mind.

Mr. Hendricks has no near relatives except a brother, who lives in Shelbyville, Ind., and a sister, the wife of Dr. Winslow S. Pierce, of New York. He owns considerable property in Indianapolis, but his entire fortune is estimated to be no more than $100,000. It is known that it was his intention to abandon politics at the end of his term as Vice President. Only a few days before his death, in a confidential talk with a friend, he said:

"The newspapers say I am a candidate for President in 1888, but it is not true. I shall not be a candidate under any circumstances. I was not a candidate for the position I now hold, but it was forced upon me, and now my political ambition is fully satisfied. I want to retire and rest for the remainder of my life."

The funeral will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Indianapolis, Tuesday noon, and the remains will be laid in Crown Hill Cemetery. The body has been embalmed. Mrs. Hendricks declines to permit an autopsy, feeling certain that it was paralysis of the heart. Telegrams of condolence have been received from Samuel J. Tilden, David Davis, Senators Dawes and Edmunds, the Japanese Minister, Mrs. Gen. McClellan, and many others. About twenty Senators assembled in the Judiciary Committee-room at Washington, and selected the following committee to attend the funeral: Edmunds, Sherman, Harris, Allison, Voorhees, Pugh, Cullom, Gibson, Conger, Blair, Dawes, Camden, and Vest. There was also a meeting of about twenty-five members of the House in the Speaker's room, at which the Clerk of the House was authorized to request the attendance at the funeral of the following, as representatives of the House: Carlisle, Randall, Hiscock, Long, Phelps, Hopburn, Browne, Bynum, Morrison, Holman, Herbert, Blunt, Barbour, Hewitt, and Geddes.

THE CAUSE OF DEATH.

Opinion of the Family Physician.

Dr. W. C. Thompson stated in the course of conversation that it was his belief that Gov. Hendricks died from instantaneous paralysis of the brain and heart. As he lay in bed his position was perfectly natural and peaceful, as of one in sleep. His position was exactly that in which Mrs. Hendricks had left him a few minutes before, when she had tucked the bedclothing about him and went to the lower hall. Dr. Thompson said that, save slight cyanosis of the lips and a lividity of the sides of the jaws, the color of the features was perfectly natural. But there was a slight, although significant drawing aside of the lower lip to the right side, as is seen in facial paralysis of the left side. Mr. Hendricks had suffered for a long time with slight paralysis of the left hand, and Dr. Thompson had often noticed a timidity and carefulness in the use of it in public assemblies. Mr. Hendricks had often told the Doctor that when he died he should like to go off with paralysis, as it was a painless death, and took one off without knowledge or foreboding of the inevitable hour. Dr. Thompson spoke of the great physical and mental strain to which Mr. Hendricks had subjected body and mind during the last eight years, particularly in the last campaign, in which he not unfrequently spoke three or four times a day, and traveled over the entire country. He had warned him of the danger to one of his habit and constitution of overworry and overwork. Only the day before his death Mr. Hendricks had said to him: "Mrs. Hendricks is my best friend, and I want her by me every moment."

THE NEWS AT WASHINGTON.

Meeting of the Cabinet—The President Issues a Proclamation.

No event since the election of Cleveland has created such a sensation in Washington as the death of Hendricks. The President was just sitting down to dinner when a telegram was handed him conveying the startling intelligence. The President was greatly shocked at the news, and at once sent the following to Mrs. Hendricks:

"The sudden and lamentable death of your husband excites my profound sympathy for you in this hour of your great bereavement, and I sincerely mourn the loss of one so lately associated with me in the execution of the people's highest laws, while the nation mourns the loss of an honored citizens and a faithful public servant."

At a Cabinet meeting it was decided that the President and the members of the Cabinet should attend the funeral of the Vice President. When the Cabinet adjourned, the President issued the following:

"To the People of the United States:

"Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice President of the United States, died at 5 o'clock p. m., at Indianapolis, Ind., and it becomes my mournful duty to announce the distressing fact to his fellow-countrymen. In respect to the memory and the eminent and varied services of this high official and patriotic public servant, whose long career was so full of usefulness and honor to his State and to the United States, it is ordered that the national flag be displayed at half-mast upon all the public buildings of the United States; that the executive mansion and the several executive departments in the city of Washington be closed on the day of the funeral and be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days; that the usual and appropriate military and naval honors be rendered, and that on all the legations and consulates of the United States in foreign countries the national flag shall be displayed at half-mast on the reception of this order, and the usual emblems of mourning be adopted for thirty days.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

KIND WORDS FOR THE DEAD.

Expressions of Sorrow—Tributes from Leading Men.

The announcement of the sudden death of Vice-President Hendricks was received everywhere with general expressions of regret by Democrats and Republicans alike. At his old home, Shelbyville, Ind., there was a feeling of profound grief. All the bells in the city were tolled. A feeling of sadness pervaded every heart, and many of Mr. Hendricks' old friends wept bitterly when they heard the news. In many cities and towns public meetings were called to give expression of sorrow over the sad event. At Columbus, Ohio, Gov. Hoadly ordered the flags on the Capitol placed at half-mast, issued a proclamation, and sent a personal telegram of condolence to the bereaved widow. At Cincinnati all the fire-bells were tolled. At Zanesville, Ohio, where Mr. Hendricks first saw the light of day, there was a deep feeling of sadness, and arrangements were made for a memorial meeting. Publicmen, without regard to party affiliations, everywhere expressed regret at the death of Mr. Hendricks, and were outspoken in praise of the high personal traits of the deceased.

Hon. John Sherman said: Mr. Hendricks was a man of upright character in private and public life, and stood high in the estimation of his friends. He was a statesman of marked ability.

Jay Gould.—He was a great man and an able lawyer.

Hon. David Davis.—And so poor Hendricks is dead! He was an able and conscientious man.

Secretary Bayard.—The news of Mr. Hendricks' death is painful to us all, but the condition in which the American people are placed by his death through the failure of Congress to pass proper laws regarding the Presidential succession—the fact that there is now but one man's life between the American people and no President—is more painful to contemplate.

Ex-Minister John W. Foster.—He was eminent at the bar, and no man can be that without a broad and comprehensive intellect. In all his personal and social relations he was a man of the highest integrity. His private character was spotless, and the people of Indiana had great confidence in his honesty of purpose and his regard for the public good. Whenever he was a candidate for office he got votes from Republicans, because, in spite of political differences, they liked him and respected him as a man, and they believed that he would do what he believed to be right, and that he was beyond the reach of sordid temptations.

Senator Ben Harrison.—He has succeeded in acquiring and retaining the confidence of his party friends in a very high degree. His personal character I always regarded as exalted and blameless. His death was a very severe shock to me indeed.

Hon. John C. New.—My acquaintance with Mr. Hendricks began in 1841, and since that time our relations have been of the most friendly character. In politics we never agreed, but that in no wise interfered with our personal relations or my kind feeling for him. His private character was without reproach, and his official career, saving as a partisan, is blameless. He was one of the most eminent citizens of the State, and a man of whom Indiana has reason to be proud.

Senator Daniel W. Voorhees.—I have known Mr. Hendricks intimately for thirty years. I never knew anything of him that it would not be becoming to say of a dead man. He was a man of very great ability, of high character, and a man of great influence. He was a man whom the people trusted. They always knew that he was in sympathy with them, and they were always for him. He was a man of unbounded moral and physical courage. He sought no controversy, but when pressed—when circumstances compelled him to—he was one of the best fighters I ever saw. He was eminent as a lawyer, and as a political speaker he swayed men as few others have been able to do. He was a great strength to his party in his State and in the country.

Senator Edmunds.—I have always had a personal regard for him. I regret exceedingly his death.

THE PRESS ON MR. HENDRICKS.

How the News of the Vice President's Death Was Received.

New York Herald.—The distinguishing feature of Vice President Hendricks' political position at the time of his death was his opposition to the progress of what is called "civil-service reform," and the motive which led him to take this position and make himself the rallying point of all the Democratic opposition to President Cleveland's reform policy sprang from what he understood to be the average sense of the people. He did not believe that they wished for anything of the kind. He convinced himself that they wished the "spoils system" to be continued, and therefore he was a champion of its continuance. If he had been convinced that the popular sense is the other way, so would also have been his conduct. It remains to be proved whether his understanding of the people's wish is accurate.

Chicago Inter Ocean.—No public man was more completely identified in every fiber of his nature with the party to which he belonged than Thomas A. Hendricks. His private life was honorable and conscientious, and it is only fair to assume that this mergence of himself in his party was due to the conviction that his party was right in all its fundamental purposes, if not absolutely perfect in detail of action.

New York World.—The death of Vice-President Hendricks falls upon the country so unexpectedly and with such awful suddenness that it will be a shock as well as a cause of deep grief to the people. It leaves a blank in the structure of the government, as well as in the social circle and by the domestic hearth.

Louisville Courier-Journal.—Mr. Hendricks was less conspicuous for brilliant talents than for a level head, cool judgment and a kind heart. He rarely lost his balance. He was a steady partisan, but neither implacable nor extreme. His powers of persuasion were very great. He impressed an audience with his sincerity and his amiability. A more plausible, vote-catching speaker has seldom appeared in our political annals. In personal relations he was courteous and tolerant to the last degree. It may be doubted whether he left an enemy behind him, for, despite his strong points of intellect and character, malice could not but pass him by.

Chicago Times.—For many years, more than a generation, Mr. Hendricks has been bright and prominent in the political constellations of the American sky. Few there have been of the stellar host whose light has been more steady, enduring, than that radiated from the heights on which he stood. * * * He was an influential factor, than which there was none more potent, in his own State. At his death he had no peer among his own particular people. He was apparently less great from a national standpoint. He possibly lacked somewhat of the nerve necessary to manage a great army, while as a corps-commander he was unequaled.

New York Tribune.—Of conciliatory ways and winning manners, Mr. Hendricks was probably the most popular man in his party, and came the nearest to representing its true views and honest wishes. The fact alone had much to do with the repeated defeat of his efforts to secure a presidential nomination, as the time had not arrived when the Democratic leaders saw the way open to success with a candidate who presented no aims other than those popular with the masses of the party.

New York Sun.—There was no eccentricity and no compromise in his political ideas. The doctrines of Jefferson and Jackson were his doctrines, and he held fast to the traditional statesmanship of his party. He belonged to the people, and knew nothing of that pharisaic and federalist pretension which holds them in distrust and contempt. His political speeches were filled with this spirit, and, like his forensic arguments, commanded respect by their breadth, elevation, vigor of reasoning, and catholic comprehensiveness.

New York Times.—Mr. Hendricks was a type of the sincere and earnest partisan Democrat, of upright personal character, and considerable abilities, whose sympathies were too narrow, and his views too restricted to permit him the place in political history to which he aspired.

Chicago Tribune.—Mr. Hendricks was esteemed by all who knew him personally as a man of upright character and a genial nature, being possessed of many social graces and remarkable for his attractive qualities of mind and heart. By the mere force of his personal character and his success in making friends he had obtained a prominence in the politics of his own State which probably no man, with the single exception of Oliver Morton, ever possessed before or since.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Brief Sketch of Gov. Hendricks' Long and Busy Life.

Thomas Andrews Hendricks was born near Zanesville, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1819. On the maternal side he was of Scotch descent. His mother, Jane Thompson, was a grand-daughter of John Thompson, who emigrated from Scotland to Pennsylvania before the revolution, and, by his representations of the advantages of the country, induced a large following of Scotchmen, by whom Cumberland was chiefly settled. Thomas' grandfather was one of the pioneer settlers of Westmoreland County, Pa., and held various township and county offices, and was a member of the State Legislature. John Hendricks, the father of Thomas, was born in Ligonier Valley, and not long after his marriage moved to Zanesville, Ohio, and on a farm near that place Thomas was born.

When he was six months old his parents removed to Madison, Ind., then the residence of his uncle, William Hendricks, who was successively a member of Congress, Governor of the State, and United States Senator. In 1832 he removed again, and located a homestead in the then sparsely settled county of Shelby, and the county town, Shelbyville, is on part of the old Hendricks farm.

In this home Thomas A. Hendricks passed his boyhood till 1837, when he entered Hanover College, at Hanover, Ind., from which he was graduated in 1841. His brother, Abram Hendricks, went through the course at the University of Ohio and at Hanover, and became a Presbyterian clergyman. Thomas went to Chambersburg, Pa., studied law in the office of his uncle, Judge Thomson, was admitted to the bar in 1843, and returned to Shelbyville to practice. His success in his profession was phenomenal. In 1845 he married Eliza C. Morgan, and their only child, a son, died in infancy. In the same year, at the age of twenty-six, he was sent to the State Legislature, where he served one term, but he would not accept a re-election. In 1851 he was elected without opposition a member of the convention that was called to revise and amend the State constitution of Indiana, and was prominent and efficient in that work. In 1851 and again in 1853 he was a member of Congress from the Fifth District of Indiana. At the close of his second term he intended to return to his law practice, but President Pierce appointed him Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he served in that capacity for four years, administering the affairs of the office with great ability.

In 1860 he was nominated as Democratic candidate for the Governorship of Indiana, but was defeated by the Republican candidate, Henry S. Lane, who became Governor by 9,757 majority. In the same year Mr. Hendricks removed from Shelbyville to Indianapolis, where, in 1862, he formed a law partnership with Oscar B. Hord, extended in 1866 to Mr. Hendricks' cousin, Col. A. W. Hendricks, under the firm title of Hendricks, Hord & Hendricks.

From 1863 to March, 1869, Mr. Hendricks was a member of the United States Senate from Indiana. He served efficiently on the Committee on Claims, the Judiciary, Public Lands, and Naval Affairs.

In the Democratic National Convention of 1868, in New York, on the twenty-first ballot he received 132 votes as candidate for the Presidency, standing next to Gen. Hancock, who received 135½; but on the final ballot Horatio Seymour was nominated. In the autumn of that year he was again a candidate for the Governorship of Indiana, but was defeated by 371 majority by the Republican candidate, Conrad Baker, who afterward became a law partner of Mr. Hendricks.

At the close of his Senatorial term he returned to Indianapolis, and resumed the practice of his profession. In 1872 he was elected Governor of Indiana, defeating the Republican candidate, Thomas M. Brown, by a majority of 1,148. In July, 1874, he was made permanent Chairman of the State Democratic Convention at Indianapolis. In the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis in June, 1876, he received 133½ votes for the Presidential nomination, and when Samuel J. Tilden was nominated he received 730 out of 738 votes as candidate for the Vice Presidency.

In 1877, and again in 1883, accompanied by Mrs. Hendricks, he made a brief tour of Europe, as a relaxation from his arduous professional pursuits. He was a member of the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in July, 1884, and in behalf of the Indiana delegation nominated Joseph E. McDonald for the Presidency. After the nomination of Grover Cleveland, William A. Wallace, of Pennsylvania, nominated Thomas A. Hendricks for the Vice Presidency, and the entire 816 votes cast for him made him the unanimous nominee of the convention.

Mr. Hendricks was five feet nine inches in height, weighed 185 pounds, and from his irreproachable habits through life possessed a strong and vigorous constitution. He was a consistent member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and his private life was without a stain.

THE SUCCESSION.

Probable Political Effect of Mr. Hendricks' Death.

Washington special.

There is no constitutional or statutory provision for the succession to the Presidency should the disability of President Cleveland occur. There is no President pro tem. of the Senate, and there is no Speaker of the House of Representatives, and neither branch of Congress is in session. Several efforts have been made of late years to make some provision for such an exigency as now exists, and always without success, because the exigency seemed remote, and therefore Senators and Congressmen would give no attention to the matter, or the situation was such that any provision that could be made would give an advantage to one political party that the other would not consent to. The House is not a continuing body, so that for nine months in every alternate year there is no Speaker. But the Senate is a continuing body, and it might always have a substitute presiding officer on hand. In former years a good deal of care was taken to have a President pro tem. in existence, but this precaution for the future is wholly in the hands of the Vice President, and the last two Vice Presidents have neglected or refused to allow the Senate the opportunity of electing a substitute. It was formerly regarded as obligatory on a new Vice President to absent himself from the Senate one day, so that the Senate could have a chance to elect, but it was very generally remarked on that in the special session of the Senate in the spring of 1881 Vice President Arthur occupied his seat every day and gave the Senate no chance to elect. At the special session of the Senate last spring the same thing occurred. The Vice President occupied the chair every day, and when the Senate adjourned there was no President pro tem. The propriety of allowing the Senate to elect a President pro tem. was suggested to Mr. Hendricks, but he referred to the precedent established by Mr. Arthur, and followed it. When the Senate meets, it will be called to order by Gen. McCook, the Secretary, and the first question will be whether a President pro tem. shall be elected first, or whether the senior Senator present shall administer the oath of office to the two Senators-elect, Gen. Logan, of Illinois, and Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon. It is entirely immaterial which is done first, for the Republicans will have forty Senators and the Democrats only thirty-four. At the special session of the Senate after the death of President Garfield the Democrats insisted on first electing the presiding officer, and they carried their point and elected Mr. Bayard, who immediately administered the oath of office to the Senators-elect. Thereupon the Republicans acquired a majority, and the next day elected Senator David Davis President pro tem. The presiding officer so chosen will have the right of succession to the Presidency in case of Mr. Cleveland's death until a special election can be had. Who will be elected President pro tem. is already a subject of gossip. Mr. Edmunds will expect it because he has had the office last, and to elect some one else would be considered as a slight to him.

Discussing the Succession.

The Presidency of the Senate is conceded to be somewhat in doubt. If Senator Edmunds desires that honor, it is undoubtedly within his reach, but on the other hand if the rumors of his disinclination to serve prove correct, there are many circumstances operating in Senator Logan's favor, and it is understood that the latter has begun an active canvass for the place. The fact that he was the Vice Presidential candidate, and the further fact that he has lost his committee positions and is unprovided for, increase his chances in this connection. Senators Sherman and Allison are also mentioned as possibilities in the event of Senator Edmunds' declination.

A CRUEL MOTHER.

She Receives a Severe Sentence, and Loses the Position She Once Held in Society.

Cleveland dispatch.

At Delaware, O., to-day Mrs. William Dunlap, who had formerly moved in good society, being a member of a leading church, was sent to jail for sixty days to subsist upon bread and water and fined $100 for cruelty to her stepchildren. The story of her cruelty as brought out at the trial is most shocking. A few days ago she covered the body of one of the children—a little girl—with soft soap, pumped cold water on the little one, and scrubbed her with a broom. The other child—a boy—had been suspended in a deep well by a rope. Other cruelties were clearly proven by the Humane Society in the prosecution. The woman was followed to the jail by a crowd of 300 people, who jeered, and hooted, and talked freely of tar and feathers.

POPULAR SCIENCE.

By carefully conducted experiments, Mr. J. C. Arthur has demonstrated that bacteria are the direct cause of the disease known as pear blight. Sap from an affected tree invariably produced the disease when inoculated into a healthy tree.

DR. PERCY F. FRANKLAND'S experiments have shown that the best filters for drinking water are made of green sand, coke, animal charcoal or spongy iron, but in every case the filter loses its power to remove all organic particles after being used a month.

M. PLATEAU, the eminent physiologist of Ghent, announces as the result of years of study the discovery that insects are unable to distinguish one object from another by its outward shape. For example, a fly cannot recognize the person who is trying to destroy it, nor does a bee know just which one of a group of persons it intends to sting.

GERMAIN SEE, the French physiologist, has found that pneumonia may be epidemic, but that it is always due to a specific parasite, and never to cold. In this it differs from such other forms of acute inflammation as bronchitis or bronchopneumonia, in which cold is the first cause, and microphytes play but a secondary role. Parasitic pneumonia has a regular and definite course, extending over no more than nine days.

THE authorities of Albany, Ga., have efficiently drained a troublesome pond by boring a well-hole through the ground to a deep subterranean stream. An outlet for the sewerage of a large Western university has been found in one of the numerous "sink-holes" with which the cavernous limestone of the country is marked, where a similar underground stream carries the stuff to parts unknown. Such expedients are good provided the subterranean stream used for the sewer outlet is not a source of supply for some well.

THE luminous rays of the solar spectrum have wave-lengths ranging between the narrow limits of .000014 and .000025 of an inch. Below these are dark heat rays of somewhat greater wave length, but Prof. S. P. Langley finds good reason for believing that the heat radiated by the soil has a wave-length twenty times as great as that of the lowest visible line in the solar spectrum, and that there are probably wave-lengths of something more than 1-2000th of an inch. These results are of much interest and importance, as showing that all heat is not of the same quality as that of the sun.

DR. R. HARVEY REED, of Mansfield, Ohio, after a study of the subject as it affects his own State, concludes that among the results of the destruction of the forests and the drainage of the land are more wind, more humidity, more rainfall, more dust, more sudden dashes of rain, more sudden changes from one extreme to the other of temperature and moisture, more rapid transmission of water from the periphery to the great basins, robbed of the natural regulators of distribution and diminution of the common supply of springs and wells. These changes have been followed by a decrease of all forms of malarial diseases, and an increase of typhoid fever, catarrh, deafness, and chronic pulmonary troubles, and the increase in wind and dust favors the spread of zymotic and contagious diseases.

DR. TOMMASI-CRUDELL, in his article quoted in the London Lancet, asserts that malarious poisoning is not due to noxious gases emitted by decaying vegetation, but is caused by living micro-organisms which find conditions favorable to their reproduction in the malarious swamps and other centers of infection. He believes that three conditions are absolutely necessary to the fertility of the disease germs: A temperature not lower than eighty-six degrees Fahrenheit; a certain amount of moisture in the soil; and the action of the oxygen of the air upon the stratum of soil infected. He recommends drainage as the most reliable remedy, but thinks it may be sometimes supplemented by covering the marsh soil by a layer of dry dirt. The planting of forests as a protection he considers a mistake, as they lessen the drying effect of the sun's rays. He claims to be able to show that the health of certain districts has been decidedly bettered by the cutting down of these alleged protective forests.

Some Notable Manuscripts.

I had much to do with Mrs. Stowe's and Hawthorne's manuscripts in their later novels. Mrs. Stowe's was handsome, plain, and apparently dashed off with vigor; Hawthorne's carefully and closely written in every part, and altogether without interlineation. Mrs. Stowe was not careful, and though she did not interline a great deal, it was no uncommon thing to find inaccuracies in her writing. I worked hard to help her make her negro dialect consistent one place with another. Hawthorne was the most remarkable writer I ever knew in one respect. There is not an italicised word in his works from one end to the other. His style is so perfect that he seems never to have felt the need of any emphasizing except what itself furnished. Mr. James T. Fields carefully preserved the manuscript of all Hawthorne's novels. I regret to say that I had not presence of mind sufficient to hold on to that of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which passed through my hands, but I have a portion of that of "Pred" preserved, which may be of interest by and by, though this was not one of Mrs. Stowe's successful stories—not half so successful as it should have been, in my opinion. —Templeton, in Hartford Courant.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Twenty-five years ago the republican party came into power facing the question of slavery, which, with polygamy, they styled the "twin relics of barbarism." The slavery question was settled only by the loss of millions in treasure and the best blood of the continent, but the other "twin" they seemed loth to engage with in a death struggle. They have ever since been talking about it, and trying to scare it away by threats and promises, but it didn't scare. To-day the new democratic party has met it face to face in a struggle that will not end in a day or a month. The administration at Washington is committed to the eradication of polygamy, and the church government at Salt Lake City is collecting its hosts for a resistance to the bitter end. There has already been a conflict between the local and government authorities, resulting in bloodshed and loss of life, and the government is concentrating troops for the better enforcement of law. Our readers may look for some exciting news from that quarter in the near future.

FACING DEATH.

Terrible Experience of the Steam Barge Kingsford.

Most of our readers know that E. M. Clark, of this place, took passage on the steam barge Kingsford on her last trip to Milwaukee. The experiences of the voyage will not soon be forgotten. From the Milwaukee Sunday Sentinel we take the following details, as related by an officer of the boat:

"After loading wood at Charlevoix, we lay two days at the Manitou island on account of heavy weather, but got away at 4 o'clock Friday morning, with the schooner Odd Fellow in tow, for Milwaukee. The wind was east and light, with light snow, and we headed for Two River point in order to make the west shore. When in midlake, about noon, the wind backed around to northeast, and we were obliged to change our course direct to Milwaukee to get the sea after us. By 3 o'clock in the afternoon a tremendous sea was running, and a blinding snow storm had set in. The Odd Fellow was steering so badly that we were obliged to cast her adrift."

"Then you saw nothing more of her?"

"No, nor of any other vessel, but if there were any out, and have not been heard from, the worst may be feared. Why, at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon the wind was at least sixty miles an hour, and the weather had become bitterly cold. The seas broke continually over the vessel's stern, the water coming in through the top of her smoke stack, which is forty feet above the water line. Every sea swept clear over her hurricane deck, and there was not a door or window of her cabin that was not smashed in, the seas breaking completely through from floor to ceiling, and there was not a dry article aboard, all the bed clothing being thoroughly saturated. The small articles were floating around the cabin, and the ice chest on the lower deck was carried several feet out of place. The water rushing in through the doors and windows was sufficient to fill and sink her, had not half a dozen men remained in her fire hold bailing water with pails, which they would hand to others on deck to be emptied. This was after her pumps had become clogged up, and could not be made to work. The efforts of the men was not sufficient to keep her entirely free, as there was at all times two feet of water in the hold, and the fireman worked since early yesterday afternoon until we arrived here this morning, in water above his knees. He was a hero, if there ever was one, as he kept the steam on the boat, though with difficulty. As the boat rolled, and the water rushed to one side, he would grab a shovel of coal on the other and dash it into the furnace, but often the water rushing back would wash the coal from his shovel."

"Was the brave man not relieved at all?"

"For a few hours, but his partner gave out, and he had to return. But he was not the only one who had a siege. Every man was up for thirty hours, and for twenty-four hours Lawrence Kavanaugh, the engineer, stood at the throttle prepared for an emergency. His position was a most perilous one. He was directly in front of a door, which every few minutes would be dashed open under the weight of a heavy sea. The water would completely submerge him, and pass out through a window on the opposite side, while the water continually poured down on him through the floor of the cabin above, and day and night he remained at his post, nearly chilled by his thoroughly wet clothing. Many of the others were in as perilous positions, as it was almost impossible to stand on deck, the wind taking away a person's breath, while the seas broke over them and the snowstorm raged. Then, too, none of the men had eaten anything for twenty-four hours, as it was impossible to cook, but no one thought of this, as everyone knew it was a battle for life. At 2 o'clock this morning there seemed little hope for us. At that hour our rudder chain parted, when we were perhaps twenty-five miles off Sheboygan. We felt as though the last had come. Oh, it was a terrible hour. Men were rushing into each other, as each was endeavoring to do something to help out the dangerous situation. They could not see each other, as there had not been a light—not even a signal lamp—on the boat all night, as all had been extinguished by the wind and sea as soon as lit. Everything was done in darkness, and when it was thought possible to light a lamp, not a dry match was to be found. For twenty minutes after the rudder chain parted the boat rolled in the trough of the sea, but the engine was worked slowly to keep her moving, in the hope of saving her from foundering. To attempt to steer her, a crowbar was placed in her tiller and seven men in the hold attempted to control it, but with the first big sea they were thrown from their positions against the sides of the boat, and several other attempts were no more successful. Finally a line was placed from the tiller to the end of the broken chain, and the break was thus temporarily repaired. About this time the snowstorm subsided, but the sea seemed heavier than ever, and one mountainous sea which boarded her, swept away her deckload, even with the sail. She was kept before the sea, however, and came into harbor under a full head of steam, at 7 o'clock. There was not a dry piece of clothing aboard, and every man was wet to the skin, but was soon provided after reaching the dock."

The vice president's widow is left in comfortable circumstances. She has herself largely taken charge of the private business affairs of her husband and has managed them with signal success—"much better," the vice president used to say, "than I could have done myself." The residence where Mr. Hendricks died, in Indianapolis, is worth $10,000, and he had other property in the city, valued, all told, at about $60,000. His life was also insured in a considerable sum. Altogether it is estimated that he leaves $100,000, the bulk of which represents the earnings of his professional career.—Detroit Journal

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land being in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

Dated Sept. 24, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petequom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 396, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

The Charlevoix village council has passed a resolution offering $3 to the first team that will arrive at the engine house when an alarm is given and take the engine to a fire. This is much cheaper than feeding a span of horses and hiring a man to take care of them; besides it makes fun for private owners and profit for the winner. Great heads have those Charlevoix village papas.—Detroit Evening News.

To undertake to suppress a railroad item favorable to Charlevoix for fear East Jordan will thus learn the facts and attempt to head us off, and then because it is not surpressed to declare that it is not reliable, is not only a gross insult to the gentleman who gave the information, but betrays a weakness and a fear of East Jordan's capacity for heading off Charlevoix enterprises that is truly surprising.

The teachers and pupils of the public schools will give an entertainment at the opera hall on Wednesday evening, Dec. 16th, being the last week of the term. A fine program is being prepared and the patrons of the school, and citizens generally may be sure of a most enjoyable evening. The proceeds will be applied toward the purchase of an organ for the school, should the receipts warrant it.

Rev. H. H. Van Auken, now pastor of the Congregational church at Alpena, was a passenger on the propeller Arundell the other afternoon with his family and household goods. He reports that his trunk was broken open at Lansnig and a suit of clothes, with some silver plate, all of a value of $100, extracted. The thieves overlooked about $4,000 worth of notes and papers.—Gaylord Herald. The stolen property has since been found with other plunder in an out of the way place in Lansing.

At Manistique last week, they held a carnival at the rink, and the enterprising Sunday Sun gave a complete list of attendants and the costume worn. The following refers te a brother of W. H. DIED.

In Ironton, Dec. 6th, Mr. S. W. Steel, aged nearly 80 years.

Mr. Steel was born in Massachusetts, but has lived in Michigan nearly 50 years. He was a member of the Baptist church, and for 53 years strove to exemplify the Christian religion, doing good in every way possible. As a minister of Christ, and a dispenser of the words of life, he aimed at that simplicity of life and word which made him always a welcome guest wherever there were those in trouble or in need of counsel. In burying the dead or visiting the sick, he was not only a willing worker, but a most welcome one. In his death, the loss of the family is his eternal gain.

Money to be Made.

It is said that dull times are not known by the agents for the great publishing house of George Stinson & Co., of Portland, Maine. The reason of this exceptional success is found in the fact that they always give the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present, we understand, their agents are doing wonderfully well on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co. undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being away from home over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time, or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co. guarantee grand success to all who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm; their full address is given above.

LAID TO REST.

The Remains of Vice-President Hendricks Consigned to the Grave

Indianapolis Crowded with Distinguished People to Pay Respect to His Memory.

Impressive Services in the Church Where He Had Worshiped During His Lifetime.

Lying in State.

The remains of the late Vice President Hendricks lay in state at the City Hall in Indianapolis from Sunday forenoon to Monday afternoon, the 30th ult., and were viewed by over 50,000 people. So great were the crowds at times that the military and police were called into requisition to keep the mass moving and to prevent a blockade. When the doors of the building were closed a waiting crowd, numbering thousands, stood in line trying to take a last glance at the face of the dead statesman. At 4 o'clock p. m. Monday the doors were closed, and the casket was borne through the south entrance to the street, where it was placed in the hearse, and, escorted by the four Indianapolis military companies, was returned to the parlor of the homestead. All along the line of march the people flocked to see the sad spectacle.

Public Sorrow.

On Tuesday, the 1st of December, the mortal remains of Thomas Andrew Hendricks, the fifth Vice President to die during his term of office, were conveyed to the tomb prepared for their reception. The clergy of Indianapolis, without respect to sect, joined in the obsequies, the bells of all the churches tolled a requiem, and the presence of the populace in the column which followed his funeral car, or stood as silent spectators of the solemn spectacle, attested their fealty to his memory. The early morning trains on all the railways brought delegations from the national capital and all the leading cities of the Union, together with an influx of people from all the interior cities and hamlets of Central Indiana and Illinois. The train arrivals swelled the multitudes on the streets to an extent to impede the ordinary progress on all the chief thoroughfares. The emblems of mourning which began to appear on public and private buildings the day of the Vice President's death had grown in quality and design until the whole city was in funeral garb. Washington street presented an almost unbroken line of draped houses, while on every business street, and even along the residence streets, the people were lavish in their display of the signs of public sorrow. Portraits of the deceased, all shrouded in black, were profusely hung in windows. The general effect told in mute eloquence of the high respect with which the people of Indianapolis regarded their fellow-townsman.

At the Modest Home.

One of the central points of attraction for the visiting multitude was the modest home of the late Vice President, a plain, two-story brick structure. On the front door of the house was a black rosette, from which was pendent a strip of black crape, which constituted the only outward emblem of mourning.

The scene presented in the interior of the house, however, carried with it all the evidence of death. Emblems of mourning and memorial floral designs were at hand everywhere. The oil portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks were almost hidden in banks of flowers and trailing smilax.

The most notable representation of the designs in flowers was that of the log cabin in which Mr. Hendricks was born in Ohio. It stood at the head of his coffined remains, and was the work of ladies of Shelbyville, where Mr. Hendricks had formerly lived. It was six feet in length, and four in height, its sides being composed of calla lilies, hyacinths, carnations, and roses. The roof was of English ivy and smilax, and the chimney of red and white carnations. On one side of the miniature structure, in purple immortelles, was the inscription: "The Home of My Boyhood;" and beneath, "Shelbyville."

On the end of the cabin was suspended a black satin banner bearing, in letters of gold: "God's fingers touched him and he slept;" and the second inscription underneath: "Shelbyville mourns her distinguished and gifted son."

At 9 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks entered the room for her last leave-taking, accompanied only by her brother and Mrs. Morgan. The ordeal was most trying and the desolate woman seemed to be utterly prostrated, clinging to the last to the clay so soon to be hidden forever from her view, and impressed with the placid and life-like appearance of the dead, she desired to preserve this last scene, and so, late as it was, she sent for a photographer to take a picture of the casket.

Shortly after this the pall-bearers arrived. The draped hearse and the carriages for the family and friends were marshaled before the door, and preparations were made for the final removal of the body. This was done without further leave-taking.

At the Church.

The police and military kept the curious but always respectful mass of people out of the way, and the little cavalcade moved quietly with its military escort through the densely lined streets to the Cathedral of St. Paul. The casket was borne into the church at 11:40 o'clock, the vast congregation having already been seated, with the exception of the immediate relatives and the church vestry. The officiating clergy, four in number—Bishop Knickerbocker, of the Indianapolis Diocese; the Rev. Dr. Stringfellow, of Montgomery, Ala., the first rector of St. Paul's, and under whose ministrations Mr. Hendricks joined the church; the Rev. Dr. Fulton, of St. Louis, a former rector of St. Paul's; and the Rev. Dr. Jenckes, the present rector—in their robes of office, met the remains at the main entrance of the cathedral on Illinois street. The body was borne up the central aisle, the clergymen and members of the vestry going in advance. Bishop Knickerbocker voiced the opening sentence of the burial service, "I am the resurrection and the life," followed by the Rev. Drs. Stringfellow and Fulton in their recitation of the other verses used for the dead, until the casket had been carried and placed outside the chancel.

The great audience stood while the impressive scene was enacted. After the bier came the widow, leaning on the arm of her brother, Mr. S. W. Morgan, followed by the other relatives, all in deep mourning.

When the casket had been placed in front of the chancel rail the choir sang the anthem "Lord, Let Me Know My End." The lesson for the dead was then read by the Rev. Dr. Jenckes. This was followed by the singing of the hymn "Lead, Heavenly Light," by the choir, the audience joining. The Rev. Dr. Jenckes, speaking from the lectern, delivered an eloquent and touching funeral oration.

"Mr. Hendricks' youth," said he, "has a prolific lesson for the youths of our land. In an adjoining county some fifty years ago his life began. The days so often spent by thoughtless boys in pointless diversions from hard study he, with energy and application, devoted to the acquisition of useful, permanent knowledge, laying, with painstaking earnestness, and perseverance, and zeal, the foundations of that sturdy, indomitable character which in later life carried him to the proud pinnacles of exalted success. The years of his early manhood were years of trial and comparative privation. With the sturdy men who were his co-laborers in the aggressive work he carved out in the wilderness a great, and prosperous, and happy commonwealth. He was an honest, brave, exemplary young man, who seemed to do a mean or unworthy action; who recognized the restraining influences of moral obligations, and by both precept and example inculcated probity and purity of life.

"Then in maturer years we have this sturdy, hearty man, with a strong mind and a warm heart in a sound body, observing an active, earnest, prominent part in the affairs of his State and country. As the second officer in the administration of this great nation he was everywhere and always the same able, conservative, consistent, and conscientious character.

"No one who appealed to him for sympathy, counsel, or assistance ever turned away empty. Though his right and his left hands were not in each other's confidence, still there is a record somewhere of his open-handed liberality in numberless cases of destitution and suffering. He experienced in his daily life the joy of faith and the patience of hope and the comfort of love. These were with him ever: faith, hope, and charity—these three, but the greatest of these was charity. And the admirably organized charities of our city have long felt the guiding impulses of his skillful hand and been cheered by the sympathetic throbbings of his generous heart.

"Dare we tread upon the verge of hallowed ground and touch upon the conjugal relations of Gov. Hendricks and describe how for forty years and two months he passed along with dignified, steady, and faithful pace beside the noble and devoted woman whom he had chosen for better or for worse; and how, through storm and sunshine, like Isaac and Rebecca, they lived faithfully together in perfect love and peace?

"Eminent citizen, faithful friend, Christian gentleman, honest man—farewell!"

When the speaker had concluded, Mrs. Doner, of Chicago, sang "Rock of Ages," the Bishop closing with prayers and benediction. The casket was then lifted and borne from the church, the audience remaining seated.

To the Cemetery.

The bells of all the city churches began their tolling when the remains were taken from the house, and continued their pealing during the continuation of the church rites and while the procession was on its long march to Crown Hill Cemetery. The column moved in the following

The carriages were driven three abreast. The movement was slow, the progress at times being almost imperceptible, until the column emerged upon Meridian street, a broad and very handsome avenue leading to the entrance to the beautiful Crown Hill Cemetery. The cortage moved on by the handsome homes of the wealthy, whose windows and sidewalks were filled with great throngs. The broad thoroughfare stretched out into the country beyond the limits of the city, and when the head of the column came within sight of the cemetery, a mile distant, the Indianapolis Light Artillery began to fire minute guns, which was continued until the hearse approached the grave.

At the Tomb.

Winding through a thick growth of Beach and maple trees, the military division came upon a large open view, and, approaching the open grave on the Hendricks family lot, which occupies the most commanding view in the grounds, turned to the left and then again to the right, finally completely encircling the tract of which the Hendricks plat forms a part.

The most careful attention had been given to the matter of decoration at the cemetery. The monument of the deceased statesman—a massive and beautiful shaft of about thirty feet in height, and built entirely of polished gray granite—stands on probably the most attractive as well as commanding ground in the inclosure. Immediately opposite is the exquisite chapel of the Cemetery Association, while a little to the northwest is the burying-ground of the Indiana soldiery. In the midst of this a tall flag-staff bore a superb garrison flag at half-mast, and another of the same character was trained about the monument. The latter was covered to a suitable extent with smilax and choice flowers, and about the two sides of the base, on the interior, were ferns and potted plants in great profusion. The grave was closely walled up with mosses, smilax and cut flowers, and the casket was seemingly deposited in a chamber of floral beauty. A heavy marble vault, of size proportioned to that of the casket, was first placed in position, and, on the deposit of the latter, received its cap slab of like material, and this in turn was laden with flowers. The last glimpse of the sorrowing widow and mourners thus suggested nothing of the unpleasant features of the ordinary interment. About the grave wide mats had been placed to protect the immediate participants from the dampness of the turf, and they also extended down the inclining sward to the carriage-way.

The grave of little Morgan, the idolized son and only child of the Vice President and his widow, lies immediately to the left of the resting place of his illustrious father, and on the west side of the monument. The singular affection entertained for the little one by his honored parents is known as a household word in the community where they lived. The utmost care had been taken by those in charge of the matter to decorate the little one's grave and its surroundings.

When the hearse had halted near the lot, the casket was borne to the grave. The venerable Bishop Knickerbocker preceded it and read a few verses for the dead, and after the lowering of the casket the Rev. Dr. Jenckes read the committal services, the Bishop closing with prayer and benediction.

Only the widow and her supporters approached the grave, the remaining multitude standing off, silent spectators.

Honors for the Dead.

At Washington the Supreme Court met on Monday, the 30th ult. On the opening of the court, Attorney General Garland made formal announcement of the death of the Vice President, and, after paying a tender tribute to his memory, moved that the court adjourn out of respect to the deceased. Chief Justice Waite responded, expressing regret at the sad event, and adjourned the court until Thursday, the 3d inst.

The Indiana Bar Association met at Indianapolis, Judge Gresham presiding. A lengthy memorial was adopted and brief eulogistic addresses delivered by distinguished members of the association. At South Bend, Ind., memorial services were held in a large rink, which was completely packed. Business was generally suspended, and the services were participated in by all classes, Republicans and Democrats alike. The New York Stock Exchange and Boards of Trade in nearly all the cities, the departments at Washington, the departments in the various State capitals, and all the post-offices were closed out of respect to the memory of the deceased.

Incidents of the Day.

Bells were tolled during the afternoon in many of the cities of Virginia.

President Cleveland sent an autograph letter of condolence to Mrs. Hendricks.

At Pittsburg and Allegheny the day was generally observed. The arsenal guard fired the three regulation salutes.

The Galveston bar adopted resolutions of respect. All public places were closed and business was suspended generally.

New York and Brooklyn were dotted with half-masted flags, and the public offices and exchanges were closed most of the day.

All the offices of the General Government at Washington were closed. It was like Sunday at the White House. The building was never so well draped.

Sergeant-at-Arms Leedom, of the House of Representatives, had an attack of vertigo and sustained painful injuries by falling on the church steps at Indianapolis.

Public business was suspended at noon in Baltimore. The city bells were tolled. Memorial services were held at the Grand Opera House. Judge Fisher was the orator.

AGRICULTURAL MATTERS.

Synopsis of the Annual Report of Commissioner Colman.

Commissioner Colman, of the Agricultural Bureau, in his annual report, says the year which opened in gloom, threatening the destruction of winter crops by the severity of the temperature, is closing with bright prospects of abundance for man and beast, produced at a cost which is not a burden to the producer and to be sold at a price which is not a barrier to the poor consumer. For many years, he says, it has become more and more apparent that one great need of the agricultural interests of the United States is a better understanding and a more intimate relation between the several agricultural and experiment stations, and a more practical co-operation between these institutions and the Department of Agriculture. These colleges were endowed by Congress. They are now separately carrying on experiments at an expense of time and means, and yet without any central head through which to report and compare results with each other. He submits that the department should have full authority and ample means to avail itself of the peculiar advantages offered by those endowed institutions in order to test, in a manner and on a scale sufficient to determine all questionable points, the adaptability of new and rare seeds to the various sections of our country.

Of the Bureau of Animal Industry he says:

"The law establishing the bureau does not authorize the slaughter of animals affected with contagious diseases, and it is impossible for the department to maintain under it an effectual quarantine. The characteristics of pleuro-pneumonia make it a difficult disease to extirpate except by the slaughter of all affected animals and the slaughter or quarantine of all that have been exposed."

He describes the serious effect upon our foreign trade in live stock resulting from the existence of contagious diseases among cattle, sheep and swine, and says that the restrictions upon our interstate commerce from the same cause have been a very great burden, and that the restriction in value of cattle in the affected States has been enormous.

Of the work of the Division of Chemistry he says:

"The investigation of the influence of climate and soil in the composition of cereals has progressed far enough to scientifically determine what parts of the country produce the best cereals."

The experiments are described which were undertaken with a purpose to check the present enormous waste of sugar, fully one-half, in the milling process, and with highly gratifying results. The division has also begun an important series of investigations upon food adulteration. The work has so far been chiefly with butter and honey, but it is proposed to extend it until uniform methods of examination and standards of comparison are established.

In the Entomological Division the work has greatly increased during the year, and Prof. Riley considers that under conditions the most favorable to grasshopper increase the injury can never be as widespread as it has been in the past, owing to the advance and increase in settlement in the Northwest.

The annual report of Mr. Dodge, the statistician of the department, for the present year, contains, the Commissioner says, a review of the course of agricultural production during fifteen years, which shows an estimated increase in corn of 37,000,000 acres, or 80 per cent.; in oats, of 13,000,000 acres, or 142 per cent.; in all cereals taken together, 67,000,000 acres, or 97 per cent. The enlargement of the wheat area was extraordinary during the period of partial failure of the crops of Western Europe; the extension of the breadth in maize was aided by the reserve of the foreign trade in beeves and fresh meats and by the sudden enlargement of exports of pork products induced by the cheapness of corn, and the cultivation of oats has received special impetus from the seeding of rust-proof varieties in the South and from the necessity of less heating feed for horses than a too exclusive maize ration. The increase from 69,000,000 acres of cereals in 1870—a breadth nearly equal to the superficial area of Missouri and Ohio—to 136,000,000 acres, an increase of 67,000,000 acres since 1870, means the seeding and harvesting of an additional area equal to the entire surface of Iowa and North Carolina.

The average estimated product of the principal food crops of the last five years is compared with the average of the ten years preceding, from 1870 to 1879, inclusive, showing an enormous annual increase in the aggregate as well as per acre.

The average yield of corn per acre has been 23.9 bushels, against 27.1 for the preceding period; the average value has therefore been higher, 44.7 cents per bushel, instead of 42.6, and the average value of an acre $10.67 instead of $11.54.

The average yields of wheat in the two periods are nearly identical, 12.3 and 12.4 bushels, respectively, but the price has averaged 90.1 cents instead of 104.9, the demand not being equal to the supply.

There is perhaps, no subject in which the department can be used to greater benefit than in its attention to forestry interests; and, considering the vast importance to the nation of a proper investigation of the subject, no branch has been more poorly endowed by Congress. Efforts should be made at once to arouse and enlighten the people to the dangers which threaten through the destruction of the forests.

The Commissioner concludes his report with reference to the usefulness and growing importance of the department.

OUR LIFE-SAVERS.

Statistics of the Life-Saving Service.

The annual report of the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service shows that at the close of the last fiscal year the establishment embraced 203 stations, 157 being on the Atlantic, thirty-eight on the lakes, seven on the Pacific, and one at the Falls of the Ohio, Louisville, Ky. The number of disasters to documented vessels within the field of station operations during the year was 256. There were on board these vessels 2,206 persons, of whom 2,196 were saved. The estimated value of the vessels involved in these disasters was $3,519,550, and that of their cargoes $1,084,965, making the total value of the property imperiled $4,604,455. Of this amount $3,352,760 was saved. The number of vessels totally lost was forty-six.

The total loss of life within the scope of the service is the smallest ever reached since its general extension, except in the year 1880, when but nine lives were lost. Since that time, however, the field of operations has been greatly enlarged by the addition of twenty-four stations in localities especially selected on account of their dangerous character.

PENSIONS.

Commissioner Black's Report—Soldiers of 1812 and 1861 on the List—Total Payments.

The annual report of Gen. John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions, for the year ending June 30, 1885, shows that there were at the close of the year 345,125 pensioners. During the year there were added 35,767 new names and 1,835 reinstatements. During the same period the names of 15,233 pensioners were dropped from the roll for various causes, leaving a net increase of 22,369. The average annual value of each pension at the close of the year is shown to be $110.33, and the aggregate annual value of all pensions is $38,090,985—an increase over like value for the previous year of $3,634,881. The amount paid for pensions during the year is $54,978,435, an increase in amount over the previous year of $8,069,838. The amount paid to 37,839 new pensioners during the year upon first payments was $27,115,912, and there remained in the hands of the several pension agents 83,677 of this class unpaid, on which there was due $2,243,567.

The acts of 1871 and 1878 provided for a pension on account of service during the war of 1812. Since 1871, 78,500 claims of this class have been filed—34,673 by the surviving soldiers and sailors and 43,823 by the widows of those who served in the war. Of this number (war of 1812) 59,868 have been allowed—25,676 to the survivors and 34,192 to the widows. In the aggregate, since 1861, 968,840 claims have been filed, and 580,897 have been allowed. The amount paid for pensions since 1861 is $744,040,541. Out of all army invalid claims filed prior to July 1, 1880, a little more than 66 per cent. have been allowed, and at the close of the present year there remained pending of this class 73,415 claims.

The Commissioner suggests that an increased pension should be given in cases of total deafness and in those cases which in lesser degrees approximate total deafness, and recommends a rating of $30 for total deafness and proportionate ratings for lesser degrees of this trouble. He also suggests that the benefits of the act of March 3, 1885, be extended to soldiers and sailors who, while in the line of duty, lost an arm above the elbow joint or a leg above the knee joint, and who in consequence thereof have been substantially disabled to the same degree as though amputation had been performed at the shoulder or hip joint. Gen. Black calls attention to the widespread feeling that the limitation imposed by section 2 of the act of March 30, 1879, is unjust in its operations. If a soldier was entitled to a pension at any time prior to the first day of July, 1880, no good reason is known to exist why he should not now be allowed to make proof thereof. Regarding fraudulent and illegal claims, the Commissioner says extended inquiries are being prosecuted with a view to purging the pension rolls of the various agencies of the names of those fraudulently and illegally borne thereon, and great success is attending the work. At the same time the greatest care is exercised not to disturb the rights of any worthy pensioner.

THE BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

Report on the Foreign Commerce of the Country for the Year 1885.

Col. W. F. Switzler, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in his annual report on foreign commerce, gives an analysis of our foreign trade, and, among other things, shows the magnitude of our commerce as compared with the commerce of all other countries; the growth of our exports of products of agriculture, of manufactures, of mining, etc.; the condition of the imports and the carrying trade of the country, and other facts of interest. The report says the total value of our foreign commerce in merchandise, including the in-transit trade, during the year 1885 was $1,388,588,165, of which the value of the exports was $742,000,000, of the imports $577,060,000, and of the in-transit and transshipment trade, $68,000,000. The imports and exports of gold and silver coin and bullion during the same period amounted to $85,232,000, of which the value of the exports was $42,000,000, and of the imports $43,000,000. The value of our foreign commerce in merchandise, including the in-transit trade, during the preceding fiscal year was $1,481,840,086, showing a falling off in our foreign trade during the last fiscal year of $93,251,921. It appears that in the value of foreign commerce the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland stands first, Germany second, France third, and the United States fourth. The total value of the foreign trade in merchandise of the nations during the year 1883 was as follows: Of the United Kingdom, $3,563,877,370; Germany, $2,450,428,745; France, $2,033,885,514; the United States, $1,547,020,316. The most notable features of our foreign trade during the last fiscal year, as compared with the trade of 1884, was a decrease in the imports of merchandise of $90,000,000, and a falling off in the exports of gold of $32,000,000. The report shows in detail the countries and the articles in which the decline in imports of merchandise occurred. The decrease occurred mainly in the values of imports of sugar and molasses, silks, wool, and manufactures of silk and wool, and iron and steel, and manufacturers of iron and steel. Among the exports of our manufactured products which show the most rapid developments since 1866 are agricultural implements, clocks and watches, manufactures of cotton, manufactures of iron and steel, including locomotives, sewing-machines, tools and hardware. Great Britain not only takes about 40 per cent. of our agricultural and unmanufactured products, but also a larger share, amounting to twenty-seven per cent., of our manufactures than do Central America, the West Indies, and South America combined. Colonel Switzler says there has been, since 1860, a very marked decline in the percentage of imports of manufactured articles, and a corresponding increase in the percentage of imports of crude or partially manufactured articles. This is a significant fact, showing a steady growth in the demand for crude articles to be manufactured at home.

MEN OF NOTE.

Hon. Alfred P. Edgerton, One of the Civil-Service Commissioners.

Alfred P. Edgerton, of Indiana, who has been made Chairman of the Civil-Service Commission, is a native of Plattsburg, N. Y., and is now seventy-seven years of age. He was in early life a clerk in a mercantile house in New York City, but while yet a young man went to Northern Ohio as the agent of the Northern Land Company. He established a law office at Hicksville, Defiance County, at which 140,000 acres of land were sold. In 1852, Mr. Edgerton found himself the owner of 40,000 acres in Northern Ohio, which he sold to actual settlers on the most liberal terms as regarded payments. He reserved for himself a country-seat near Hicksville, which he still holds, and where he resides part of each year. In 1845 he was elected to the State Senate of Ohio. Here he opposed Alfred Kelley, leader of the Whigs in that body, and brought himself into wide repute thereby. In his official action he evinced such knowledge of the finances of the State that he was strongly urged for Governor by leading Democrats. In 1848 he was a delegate-at-large to the Baltimore Convention. In 1850—after the close of his term in the State Senate—he was elected a member of Congress from the Toledo District, and re-elected in 1852, and was the Chairman of the Committee on Claims of that body. In 1853 he was elected by the Board of Fund Commissioners the Financial Agent of the State of Ohio to reside at New York City. In 1856 Mr. Edgerton was Chairman of the National Democratic Convention at Cincinnati. In 1859 he was very appropriately appointed by the Ohio Legislature one of the committee to investigate frauds upon the State Treasury, and made an elaborate report, exposing the frauds and their authors. In 1857 he removed to Fort Wayne, but retained his citizenship in Ohio until 1862. Two years later he was a delegate-at-large to the Chicago Convention. In 1859, in connection with the late Pliny Hoagland and Hugh McCulloch (late Secretary of the Treasury), he became lessee of the Indiana canals, and then general manager. In 1868 he was nominated on the ticket with Hon. T. A. Hendricks for Lieutenant-governor of Indiana, and was defeated by less than 1,000 votes. He declined the nomination of the O'Conor Democrats for Governor in 1872. By appointment of ex-Governor Porter, Mr. Egerton is now a Director of Purdue University. He has been engaged in many successful business enterprises, is in easy circumstances, and is a practical student of public affairs. He is a man of such high integrity that he paid over $500,000 to the creditors of his brother-in-law some years years ago, although his legal obligation was, at the outside, $200,000. He was for many an intimate friend and associate of Chief Justice Waite, who, with Senator Henry B. Payne, Governor Gray of Indiana, Vice President Hendricks, and many leading citizens of Ohio and Indiana, warmly indorsed him as possessing qualities peculiarly fitting him for the work of the Civil-Service Commission. He is in fullest sympathy with the reform.

ELECTION ECHOES.

The Official Figures in New York.

The complete official vote of the State of New York for the State officers voted for at the election held Nov. 3 has been published. The vote of Davenport, Republican, for Governor, was 489,727; for Hill, Democrat, 501,418; for Jones, Greenbacker, 2,127; for Bascom, Prohibitionist, 30,866.

In 1881 Blaine's vote in New York was 562,001, Cleveland's 563,018, Butler's 16,955, St. John's 24,999. In a total vote of 1,171,263 Cleveland had a plurality of 1,017. The total vote at the last election was 1,024,138, or only 147,125 below the very heavy vote of 1884. There was a falling off in the Republican vote of 72,274, and a falling off in the Democratic vote of 61,630. There was a falling off in the Greenback vote of 14,828, and an increase in the Prohibition vote of nearly 6,000.

Official Count in Dakota.

The official canvass of the vote cast in Dakota at the election held Nov. 3 shows the following results:

For the Constitution	25,138
Against the Constitution	6,527
For Prohibition	15,572
Against Prohibition	15,218

Following is the vote on the location of the State capital: Huron 12,695; Pierre, 10,571; Chamberlain, 3,170; Sioux Falls, 3,338; Alexandria, 1,374; scattering, 192; total vote, 31,815; Huron's plurality, 2,121.

Following is the vote on the State ticket, there being no opposition:

Governor—A. C. Mellette, 28,994; scattering, 226.

Lieutenant Governor—A. E. Frank, 28,726; scattering, 200.

Secretary of State—H. S. Murphy, 28,417; scattering 156.

A Help to Good Digestion.

In the British Medical Journal Dr. W. Roberts, of England, discusses the effect of liquors, tea, coffee, and cocoa on digestion. All of them retard the chemical processes, but most of them stimulate the glandular activity and muscular contractions. Distilled spirits retard the salivary or peptic digestion but slightly when sparingly used.

Wines were found to be highly injurious to salivary digestion. On peptic digestion all wines exert a retarding influence. They stimulate the glandular and muscular activity of the stomach. Effervescent wines exert the greatest amount of good with the least harm to digestion. When one's digestion is out of order everything goes awry, unless, as in the case of T. T. Seals, of Bellaire, Ohio, who had bad dyspepsia for seven years, the digestive apparatus is kept in apple-pie eating order by Warner's Tippecanoe, the best appetite producer and regulator in the world.

Tea, even in minute quantities, completely paralyzes the action of the saliva. The tannin in strong tea is injurious. Weak tea should be used, if at all. Strong coffee and cocoa are also injurious if used in excess.—The Cosmopolitan.

The Deadly Cigarette.

Cigarette smoking has the same effect on boys and young men as opium has on grown people. The tobacco which the cigarettes are made of is so mild in taste that the smoke from them can be drawn on the lungs or inhaled, which, in time, will have an injurious effect upon the smoker. The inveterate cigarette smoker will reject a fine imported cigar for a cigarette, preferring the latter, which, in bundles, cost only half a cent apiece. The price of the article ought in itself to be a sufficient proof that cigarettes are made out of common material, and cheap things are always bad. Some people imagine that gum opium is used in cigarettes, but this is a mistake, as that drug costs $6 a pound, which would be too expensive to the cigarette manipulator. The white paper is bleached by an arsenical preparation, and that is poisonous enough, heaven knows. Cigarettes ought to be stamped out of existence, for they are sapping the life out of our young men.—Tobacco dealer, in Brooklyn Union.

Peril of the Theological Student.

One of the religious papers, the Chicago Interior, thinks that the girls play the mischief with the theological students. "The young brother, as soon as 'Rev.' is duly fastened on before his given name, makes a bee line for his girl, and she meets him half-way down the lane, and they kiss each other a few times and walk lovingly together to some old preacher who ought to know better, and he puts his hands on their heads and tells them to be good—and so spoils a missionary."

A Decided Difference.

At the last meeting of the Conundrum Club the following was propounded:

"What is the difference between woman's sphere and woman's fear?"

After a long and severe struggle the conundrum was given up, and the perpetrator said:

"One is a house, the other a mouse."—New York Morning Journal.

Force of Habit.

A well-known Texas gambler was converted and became a minister. One Sunday, just before the service began, he was absorbed in thought, when he was approached by the organist, who, referring to the opening hymn, said: "What shall I play?"

"What kind of a hand have you?" responded the absent-minded minister.—Aleck Sweet.

Feeble Frames, Shaky Nerves

And dyspeptic stomachs are usually found in conjunction. Vitality is lacking in all three. How can this be created? Simply by using Hostetter's Stomach Bitters with regularity, abstaining from habits inconsonant with health, and by the use of a digestible diet. As an initial step toward the reinforcement of a depleted system, a resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is most desirable, since it corrects acidity consequent upon a vitiation of the gastric juices and the presence of bile in the stomach, and having regulated and, as it were, lubricated the digestive mechanism, sets it to and keeps it at work. An immediate gain in vigor is the result. The food is converted into blood, upon which the system draws for nutrition, the nerves as they acquire vigor become tranquil, the muscular fiber gains substance and hardness, and appetite and sleep improve. Constipation, fever and ague, rheumatism and renal ailments yield to the Bitters.

Gently does DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS relieve the constipated bowels; at the same time thoroughly toning their inner membrane and restoring their mechanical action. Yet the result is solely due to nature, re-embraced and sustained by the best vegetable alterative and tonic that ever passed the lips of the sick and suffering.

THE HAPPINESS OF ELYSIUM.

Elysium was the name given by the ancient Greeks to the resting place of the righteous dead, where they should enjoy eternal peace and happiness. None but the pure in heart, the truthful and generous could tread the asphodel meadows of the Elysian fields, and it was a land of everlasting delight. When, therefore, Mrs. Kate Sherman, of Streator, Ill., said recently that she had been in Elysium, though of course she spoke figuratively, it argued that some great good fortune and joy had come to her. And such, indeed, was the truth. Mrs. Sherman tells how it was in this way:

"I have suffered from inflammatory rheumatism for more than thirty years. Heretofore the pain would succumb to the application of hot wet flannel, but at my last attack circumstances had conspired to aggravate the disease, and I became helpless. My hands and feet were swollen enormously, and I suffered almost mortal agony. My physician bought me a bottle of Athlophoros. After taking the third dose I was in Elysium, and was free from pain. By the time I had taken a bottle and a half I felt so wonderfully improved that I discontinued the medicine. I have an ungovernable dislike to all medicine, but I will say that Athlophoros probably saved my life, as I was running down rapidly, and could not have endured the pain much longer. It afforded me the only relief I ever experienced except from hot water, and that had failed me."

The Rev. Samuel Porter, of Crete, Ill., says of the effect of Athlophoros upon his wife:

"Mrs. Porter was very much benefited by the first bottle. Before she commenced taking it she could not walk, she was so badly afflicted with rheumatism, but she was soon able to walk. She sleeps well. Mr. John Hews, our neighbor, was very badly off with the rheumatism last winter, and was not able to work or even to get out of his room. One bottle of Athlophoros cured him, but he has to keep it by him to take when he feels his old difficulties."

Another clergyman, the Rev. C. Hartley, of Huntley, Ill., gives this as his experience with the remedy:

"For six months I suffered severely from an attack of rheumatism. A friend sent me a notice of several reliable cures effected by Athlophoros. I procured the medicine, and less than one bottle completely cured me, and I have not had the least indication of a return of the painful disease. I have recommended it to others, and results similar to those in my own case have followed. I regard Athlophoros as invaluable."

A. M. Blakney, who lives at the corner of Union and Green streets, Decatur, Ill., only confirms the general testimony to the value of Athlophoros when he says:

"During the past winter I was stricken with a very severe attack of rheumatism—a disease with which I had been afflicted for several years—and was rendered almost helpless, and confined to my bed. I tried various medicines, and was prescribed for by physicians with no avail. Finally I was induced by my druggist to try Athlophoros. I was relieved and cured so quickly that words could not tell my surprise. I do not hesitate in recommending it to any one suffering with that most painful complaint, rheumatism."

If you can not get ATHLOPHOROS of your druggist we will send it, express paid, on receipt of regular price—one dollar per bottle. We prefer that you buy it from your druggist, but if he hasn't it, do not be persuaded to try something else, but order at once from us, as directed. ATHLOPHOROS Co., 112 Wall street, New York.

Witchcraft.

There were, no doubt, many designing and lazy old women in former times, who pretended to be witches in order to get an easy living. They helped to spread the superstition concerning witchcraft, and brought many harmless people to death through their impostures. The charms by which so-called witches worked were short rhymes at the different stages. In the fifteenth century an old dame was tried for using witchcraft in curing diseases, when the judges promised to liberate her if she would divulge her charm. This she readily did, and informed the court that the charm consisted in repeating the following words, after the stipulated pay, which was a loaf of bread and a penny:

My loaf in my lap,
My penny in my purse,
Thou art never the better,
And I am never the worse.

IT is claimed that nothing can move without making a noise. The man who gets away in the night to avoid paying rent gives silence a close shave.

How to Get Strong.

Dumb-bells and horizontal bars, Indian clubs and the trapeze are valuable under certain conditions, but they are detrimental rather than beneficial if the blood is poor and thin and poisoned with bile. Use of the muscles necessitates waste as well as induces growth. If the blood does not carry sufficient nutriment material to repair the waste, loss of strength necessarily follows, and growth is out of the question. Purify and enrich your blood with Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," and then exercise will develop and not consume your physique.

Add to these Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" and you will get well through the world without much trouble. The Pellets prevent constipation and surplus of bile which lead to many different complaints. Inclosed in glass, always fresh, entirely vegetable, prompt, and perfectly harmless. Any druggist.

Lost Faith in Physicians.

There are innumerable instances where cures have been effected by SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA, or Blood and Liver Syrup, for all diseases of the blood, when the patient had been given up by physicians. It is one of the best remedies ever offered to the public, and as it is prepared with the greatest care, as a specific for certain diseases, it is no wonder that it should be more effectual than hastily written and carelessly prepared prescriptions. Take SCOVILL'S BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP for all disorders arising from impure blood. It is endorsed by all leading professional men.

DROPSY
TREATED FREE.
DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS,
Specialists for Thirteen Years Past,
Have treated Dropsy and its complications with the most wonderful success; use vegetable remedies, entirely harmless. To-day, all symptoms of dropsy in eight to twenty days.
Cure pronounced hopeless by the best of physicians.
From the first dose the symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed.
Some may cry humbug without knowing anything about it. Remember, it does not cost you anything to realize the merits of our treatment by trying it. In ten days the difficulty of breathing is relieved, the pulse regular, the urinary organs made to discharge their full duty, the eyes restored, the swelling all or nearly gone, the strength increased, and appetite made good. We are constantly curing cases of long standing—cases that have been tapped a number of times, and the patient declared unable to live a week. Give full history of case. Name sex, how long afflicted, how badly swollen and where, are bowels costive, have legs bursted and dripped water. Send for free pamphlet, containing testimonials, questions, etc.

Around the County.

Marion.

Mr. Steve Smith has just completed a dwelling for himself where he intends to reside this winter. It stands a little north of his old house.

The "Farmers Club" which meets every other Tuesday have excellent times at their meetings which are held in the Black school house. Singing, reading, recitations and remarks go to make up some of their fine programs.

Mr. John Ward has two men engaged in cutting shipping wood for him.

The people of this vicinity have arranged for a Christmas tree and entertainment to be had in the Black school house. Little folks anxiously await the time.

A Boom in Boyne City.

BOYNE CITY, Dec. 7.—There is to be built and in operation before the close of navigation next year a railroad from Traverse City via Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, Ironton, terminating at Boyne City, which will open up a grand country around Pine Lake. Every house is crowded in this place, newcomers with families arriving every day. Plenty of work for everybody. It is estimated that there will be 8,000,000 feet of hardwood logs got out here this season, making it a prosperous season for everybody.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

THE GREATEST PAIN KILLER

ENRICH THE BLOOD.

HAMILTON'S GERMAN BITTERS are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially indigestion, dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these Bitters are just what you need Only 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

ARE YOUR CHILDREN PEEVISH

And sad eyed? Do they have abnormal appetites and crave food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. No child can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a sure remedy. It is called PARMELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES. They are perfectly harmless but will quickly dissolve the worms pass them off through the bowels. Buy no other. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

The Murder Trial.

The circuit court is in session at East Jordan this week, for the trial of Barry, Durga, Moore and Graham, for the murder of Geo. Optegezhic, Indian, last summer. The trial of Barry began yesterday at 10 o'clock, with the following jury: Elisha Shepard, Joseph Cook, Charles Todd, Henry Dickenson, John Newville, Albert Towsley, Wm. Claspill, Jasper Cater, Joseph McConnell, George Howe, David H. Gillett, Wm. Adams.

The prosecution is expected to close to-day, and the entire case to be finished this week. The following abstract of testimony taken up to 3 o'clock yesterday was received last night:

D. M. Colby, the first witness for the people, testified in substance as follows: I reside two miles southwest from Charlevoix on the Petoskey road; heard unusual loud hallowing on the night of Aug. 2d. Got up three times during the night, once finding some boys in the yard with my boy. In the latter part of the night an Indian came to my house and told me another Indian was dead at the foot of the hill, whereupon I went to the hill and remained there until the inquest about noon. The body lay on its back about 2 or 3 rods from the junction of the McSaba road and the Petoskey and Charlevoix state road.

Cross examination.—Resided on that place two years; got up three times during the night of Aug. 2d; unusual loud hallowing. Did not know the Indian's name who came after me, and could not make out what he said exactly, but inferred that an Indian was nearly killed at the foot of the hill. McSaba's road runs at right angles from the Petoskey and Charlevoix state road. The body lay on the ground with feet on some brush. The body had not been removed. Did not examine the body nor marks of violence. Some of the Indians wanted we to examine the body, but would not, and told them that life was extinct, and that they must not touch him.

LATER.

The prosecution closed their case at 11:20 to-day, and the defense will begin this afternoon. Next week we hope to continue with a full abstract of the testimony.

Temperance Column.

Conducted by a Committee of the W. C. T. U.

When an organization has moved steadily along a given course for a dozen years, it begins to have a character, rather than a notoriety or reputation, and that of the W. C. T. U. seems pretty well established. Some things which enter into the character are just now of more than usual interest. The personnel of the society has always been of a marked quality and type. Of all the bodies of women, and there are many in these days, none seem so widely and evenly developed, intellectually, as this. It is not a few brilliant women leading the many to certain conclusions and lines of action, but every woman seems to have reached her own conclusions by a path of logic and experience, that to her, is demonstration, and all this she is able to express clearly, strongly, and eloquently. The debates are never diffusive exhibitions of rhetoric, but statement, sentiment, and argument, and seek at once the center, and finds it, too, in much less time than is usual. The fact that three minutes was the limit for each speaker, on the one moving question at Philadelphia, shows what is expected in way of terse and compact expression. Another thing is true concerning the intelligence of this body. These temperance women are obliged to know more than one thing. So many-sided is the work for delivering the nation from the curse of rum, that the ground of the learned professions has been well traversed for the truth relating to it. Medicine, law, theology, political economy and social science, are not taken on hearsay, or second hand, but hundreds of these women are at home in their vocabulary, and familiar with their principles, while to these devout students, they all mean the science of coming to the best possible for human nature.

As to age, most of the white ribbon women begin in the thirties and run up to the snowy hairs of the sixties, and even seventies. Lately the young woman's C. T. U.'s are sprinkling the conventions with faces young and fair. Fashionable women are notably absent. Now and then somebody "cries for them," but they are still away; not because they do not need the union, but because the union has no use for this lady of the genus butterfly, until she is regenerated. They need to come with the earnest throng who stand for pure bodies, pure homes and pure legislation for the sake of club tempted husbands and spineless sons, whose oyster-like organizations are no match for this real world of work of sin; but the fashionable woman does not come yet. The morning after adjournment at Philadelphia, one of these, sitting at breakfast in a hotel, which had been quite headquarters for delegates during the convention, said: "Well, those white ribbon people are gone at last, and I am glad of it; was it not dreadful to have the creatures around?" We do not mean by this that the W. C. T. U. is not in good society. To be sure it is, you have only to visit the homes of ease, culture, health, and refinement in every state, presided over by "these creatures." We are not talking of good, but fashionable society women, when we said they were absent. It takes conviction, courage, perseverance, thought, study, and self sacrifice to be useful in the W. C. T. U.; therefore the godly women who know and love Christ, make up the ranks of this noble organization.

No compromise with the evil against which they war, and no alliance offensive or defensive, with those who sustain it, is another striking element of this growing character. Some women in that fearless majority of eight to one, who re-affirmed the St. Louis resolutions are the wives and mothers in homes where husbands and sons object to a prohibition paper in the house, and even forbid it, while the white flag of truce, of a tireless patience, stands between them and their best beloved. Political intolerance has reached the hearthstone since November, 1884. But with dauntless courage they again cry in the ears of all men, that to these principles, this army of women 200,000 strong and more to follow, are unalterably committed. This business of nation poisoning, in the interest of a few thousand of the worst villains in the country, is going down. No compromise, however, does not mean no toleration of those who differ. We donbt if the world has ever seen a finer illustration of the Christly spirit than has been repeatedly shown by the leader of the national union and her followers. The protest of the minority at Philadelphia, was received with respectful attention in an hour of intense excitement and the secular papers made note of the fact that the business went on with no break in the harmony of good feeling. Once only, the convention broke into a many-toned burst of disapproval, at some words of severe and what seemed un just criticism, uttered by Mrs. Foster against the Union Signal and its management; but it was over in a moment, and no bitter words were spoken in return.

Our organization has been rebuked sometimes for its display of mutual admiration and extravagant laudation of individuals, but these words of high commendation are not for one, or for a few, but for the aggregate of worth which has given a most remarkable character to the organization known as the Women's Christian TemperanceUnion. Such are the friends of total abstinence for the individual, and prohibition for the state, and such the unswerving, though ballotless allies of the party which stands for a nation united against the liquor traffic.—Mary T. Lathrap.

Almost a Blaze.

Last Thursday night Alfred Van Deusen awoke with a feeling of suffocation by smoke, and a hurried investigation showed the cause to be a fire under one of the stoves, which had burned the carpet about two by six feet, and charred the floor,—in one place burning nearly through to the cellar. A few minutes more time, or a sudden gust of wind from any direction would have started a blaze that would probably not have ended until the house was entirely destroyed. It is supposed to have caught from a spark falling on to the carpet.

The Fleet wing was safe in Milwaukee on Monday.

A TRIBUTE TO MR. HENDRICKS.

To the Congress of the United States: Your assembly is clouded by a sense of public bereavement caused by the recent and sudden death of Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice President of the United States. His distinguished public services, his complete integrity and devotion to every duty, and his personal virtues, will find honorable record in his country's history. Ample and repeated proofs of the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his fellow-countrymen were manifested by his election to offices of the most important trust and highest dignity, and, at length, full of years and honors, he has been laid at rest amidst general sorrow and benediction.

CONSTITUTIONAL DUTY.

The Constitution, which requires those chosen to legislate for the people to annually meet in the discharge of their solemn trust, also requires the President to give to Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to its consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient. At the threshold of a compliance with these constitutional directions, it is well for us to bear in mind that our usefulness to the people's interests will be promoted by a constant appreciation of the scope and character of our respective duties as they relate to Federal legislation. While the Executive may recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient, the responsibility for legislative action must and should rest upon those selected by the people to make their laws. Contemplation of the grave and responsible functions assigned to the executive branches of the Government under the Constitution will disclose the partition of power between our respective departments, and their necessary independence, and also the need for the exercise of all the power entrusted to each, in that spirit of comity and co-operation which is essential to the proper fulfillment of the patriotic obligations which rest upon us as faithful servants of the people. The jealous watchfulness of our constituencies, great and small, supplements their suffrage; and, therefore, in the tribunal they establish every public servant should be judged.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

It is gratifying to announce that the relations of the United States with all foreign powers continue to be friendly. Our position, after nearly a century of successful constitutional government, maintenance of good faith in all of our engagements, the avoidance of complications with other nations, and consistent and amicable attitude toward the strong and weak alike, furnish proof of a political disposition which renders professions of good-will unnecessary. There are no questions of difficulty pending with any foreign Government.

THE ISTHMUS CANAL.

The interest of the United States in a practicable transit for ships across the strip of land separating the Atlantic from the Pacific has been repeatedly manifested during the last half century. My immediate predecessors caused to be negotiated with Nicaragua a treaty for the construction, by and at the sole cost of the United States, of a canal through Nicaraguan territory, and laid before the Senate. Pending the action of that body thereon, I withdrew the treaty for re-examination. Attentive consideration of its provisions leads me to withhold it from resubmission to the Senate.

Maintaining as I do the policy of the Presidents from Washington's day, which proscribe enlarging entangling alliances with foreign states, I do not favor a policy of acquisition of new and distant territory, or the incorporation of remote interests with our own. The laws of progress are vital and organic, and we must be conscious of that irresistible tide of commercial expansion which, as the concomitant of our active civilization, day by day, is being urged onward by those increasing facilities of production, transportation, and communication to which steam and electricity have given birth. But our duty in the present instructs us to address ourselves mainly to the development of the vast resources of the great area committed to our charge, and to the cultivation of the arts of peace within our borders, though jealously alert in preventing the American Hemisphere from being involved in the political problems and complications of distant governments. Therefore I am unable to recommend propositions involving paramount privileges of ownership or rights outside of our own territory, when coupled with absolute and unlimited engagements to defend territorial integrity of the state where such interests lie.

SHIP RAILWAY.

While the general project of connecting the two oceans by means of a canal is to be encouraged, I am of opinion that any scheme to that end, to be considered with favor, shall be free from the features alluded to. The Tehuantepec route is declared by engineers of the highest repute and by competent scientists to afford an entirely practical transit for vessels and cargoes by means of a ship railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The obvious advantages of such a route, if feasible, over others more remote from the axial lines of traffic between Europe and the Pacific, and particularly between the valley of the Mississippi and the western coast of North and South America, are deserving of consideration. Whatever highway may be constructed across the barrier dividing the two greatest maritime areas of the world, must be for the world's benefit—a trust for mankind, to be removed from the chance of domination by any single power, nor become a point of invitation of hostilities or a prize for warlike ambition. An engagement combining the construction, ownership, and operation of such a work by this Government, with an offensive and defensive alliance for its protection with the foreign states whose responsibilities and rights we would share, is, in my judgment, inconsistent with such dedication to universal and neutral use, and would, moreover, entail measures for its realization beyond this scope of our national policy or present means. The lapse of years has abundantly confirmed the wisdom and foresight of those earlier administrations, which, long before the conditions of maritime intercourse were changed and enlarged by the progress of the age, proclaimed the vital need of inter-oceanic traffic across the commercial isthmus and consecrated it in advance to the common use of mankind by their positive declaration and through the formal obligation of trade. Toward such realization the efforts of my administration will be applied, ever bearing in mind the principles on which it must rest, and which were declared in no uncertain tones by Mr. Cass, who, while Secretary of State in 1858, announced that "what the United States want in Central America, next to the happiness of the people, is the security and neutrality of the inter-oceanic routes which may be laid through it."

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAYS.

The construction of three transcontinental lines of railway, all in successful operation, wholly within our territory, and uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, has been accomplished by results of a most interesting and impressive nature, and has created new conditions, not in the routes of commerce only, but in political geography, which powerfully affect our relations toward, and necessarily increase our interests in, any transisthmian route which may be opened and employed for the ends of peace and traffic, or in other contingencies, for uses inimical to both.

Transportation is a factor in the cost of commodities scarcely second to that of their production, and weighs as heavily upon the consumer. Our existence already has proven the great importance of having the competition between land carriage and water carriage fully developed, each acting as a protection to the public against the tendencies of monopoly, which is inherent in the consolidation of wealth and power in the hands of vast corporations. These suggestions may serve to emphasize what I have already said on the score of the necessity of a neutralization of any inter-oceanic transit, and this can only be accomplished by making the uses of the route open to all nations and subject to the ambitions and warlike necessities of none.

The drawings and report of a recent survey of the Nicaragua Canal route, made by Chief Engineer Menocal, will be communicated for your information.

CHILI, PERU AND BOLIVIA.

The claims of citizens of the United States for losses by reason of the late military operations of Chili in Peru and Bolivia are the subject of negotiation for a Claims Convention with Chili, providing for their submission to arbitration.

CHINA AND THE CHINESE QUESTION.

The harmony of our relations with China is fully sustained in the application of the acts lately passed to execute the treaty of 1880, restrictive of the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States. Individual cases of hardship have occurred beyond the power of the Executive to remedy, and calling for judicial determination.

The condition of the Chinese question in the Western States and Territories is, despite this restrictive legislation, far from being satisfactory. The recent outbreak in Wyoming Territory, where numbers of unoffending Chinamen, undisputably within the protection of the treaties and the law, were murdered by a mob, and the still more recent threatened outbreak of the same character in Washington Territory, are still fresh in the minds of all, and there is apprehension lest the bitterness of feeling against the Mongolian race on the Pacific slope may find vent to similar lawless demonstration. All the power of this Government should be exerted to maintain the amplest good faith toward China in the treatment of these men and the inflexible sternness of the law in bringing the wrong-doers to justice should be insisted upon. Every effort has been made by this Government to prevent these violent outbreaks and to aid the representatives of China in their investigation of these outrages, and it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States engaged in competition with Chinese laborers.

Race prejudice is the chief factor in originating these disturbances, and it exists in a large part of our domain, jeopardizing our peace and the good relationship we try to maintain with China. The admitted rights of a Government to prevent the influx of elements hostile to its internal peace and security may not be questioned, even where there is no treaty stipulation on the subject. That the exclusion of Chinese labor is demanded in other countries where like conditions prevail, is strongly evidenced in the Dominion of Canada, where Chinese immigration is now regulated by laws more exclusive than our own. If existing laws are inadequate to compass the end in view, I shall be prepared to give earnest consideration to any further remedial measures within the treaty limits which the wisdom of Congress may devise.

THE CONGO STATE.

The Independent state of the Congo has been organized as a government under the sovereignty of his Majesty the King of the Belgians, who assumes its chief magistracy in his personal character only, without making the new state a dependency on Belgium. It is fortunate that a benighted region, owning all it has of quickening civilization to the beneficence of the philanthropic spirit of this monarch, should have the advantages and security of his benevolent supervision.

The action taken by this Government last year in being the first to recognize the flag of the International Association of the Congo has been followed by formal recognition of the new nationality which succeeds to its sovereign powers. A conference of delegates of the principal commercial nations was held at Berlin last winter to discuss methods whereby the Congo basin might be kept open to the world's trade. Delegates attended on behalf of the United States on the understanding that its part should be merely deliberative, or without imparting to the result any binding character, so far as the United State were concerned. This reserve was due to the indisposition of this Government to share in any disposal by the International Congress of jurisdictional questions in remote foreign territories. The results of the conference were embodied in a formal act of the nature of an international convention, which laid down certain obligations purporting to be binding on the signatories, subject to ratification within one year. Notwithstanding the reservation under which the delegates of the United States attended, their signatures were attached to the general act in the same manner as those of the plenipotentiaries of other governments, thus making the United States appear, without reserve or qualification, as signatories to a joint international engagement imposing on the signers the conservation of the territorial integrity of distant regions, where we have no established interests or control. This government does not, however, regard its reservation of liberty of action in the premises as at all impaired, and holding that no engagement to those in the obligation of enforcing neutrality in the remote valley of the Congo would be an alliance whose responsibilities we are not in a position to assume, I abstain from asking the sanction of the Senate to that general act. The correspondence will be laid before you, and the instructive and interesting report of the agent sent by this government to the Congo country, and his recommendations for the establishment of commercial agencies on the African coast, are also submitted for your consideration.

THE COMMERCIAL COMMISSION.

The commission appointed by my predecessor last winter to visit the Central and South American countries and report on the methods of enlarging the commercial relations of the United States therewith, has submitted reports which will be laid before you.

AMERICAN PORK ABROAD.

I regret to say that the restrictions upon the importation of our pork into France continue, notwithstanding the abundant demonstrations of safety from danger in its use; but I entertain strong hopes that, with a better understanding of the matter, this vexatious prohibition will be removed. It would be pleasing to be able to say as much with regard to Germany, Austria and other countries where such food products are absolutely excluded without present prospect of reasonable change.

THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT AND NATUALIZED AMERICANS.

The interpretation of our existing treaties of naturalization by Germany during the past year has attracted attention by reason of an apparent tendency on the part of the Imperial Government to extend the scope of the residential restrictions to which returning naturalized citizens of German origin are asserted to be liable under the laws of the empire. The temperate and just attitude taken by this Government with regard to these questions, will doubtless lead to a satisfactory understanding.

THE CAROLINE ISLANDS DISPUTE.

The dispute of Germany and Spain relative to the domination of the Caroline Islands has attracted the attention of this Government, by reason of extensive interests of American citizens having grown up in those parts during the last thirty-nine years, and because the question of ownership involves jurisdiction of matters affecting the status of our citizens under civil and criminal law. Whilst standing wholly aloof from the proprietary issues raised between powers to both of which the United States are friendly, this Government expects that nothing in the present contention shall unfavorably affect our citizens carrying on a peaceful commerce on their domicile, and has so informed the Governments of Spain and Germany.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The marked good will between the United States and Great Britain has been maintained during the past year.

THE BRITISH-AMERICAN FISHERIES.

The termination of the fishing clauses of the Treaty of Washington, in pursuance of the joint resolution of March 3, 1884, must have resulted in the abrupt cessation on the 1st of July of this year, in the midst of their ventures, of the operations of citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in British-American waters, but for a diplomatic understanding reached with her Majesty's Government in June last, whereby assurance was obtained that no interruption of those operations should take place during the current fishing season.

In the interest of good neighborhood and the commercial intercourse of adjacent communities,

A COMMISSION RECOMMENDED.

The question of the North American fisheries is one of much importance. Following out the intimation given by me when the extensive arrangements above described were negotiated, I recommend that Congress provide for the appointment of a commission, in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coast of the United States and British North America.

The fishing interests being intimately related to other general questions dependent upon contiguity and intercourse, consideration thereof in all their equities might also properly come within the purview of such commission, and the fullest latitude of expression on both sides should be permitted. The correspondence in relation to the fishing rights will be submitted.

THE ALERT.

The Arctic exploring steamer Alert, which was generously given by Her Majesty's Government to aid in the relief of the Greely expedition, was, after the successful attainment of that humane purpose, returned to Great Britain in pursuance of the authority conferred by the act of March 3, 1885.

EXTRADITION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The inadequacy of the existing engagements for extradition between the United States and Great Britain has been long apparent. The fourth article of the treaty of 1842, one of the earliest compacts in this regard entered into by us, stipulated for surrender in respect of a limited number of offenses. Other crimes, no less inimical to the social welfare, should be embraced, and the procedure of extradition brought in harmony with present international practices.

Negotiations with Her Majesty's Government for an enlarged treaty of extradition have been pending since 1870, and I entertain strong hopes that a satisfactory result may be soon attained.

CHOLERA AND EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

An International Conference to consider the means of arresting the spread of cholera and other epidemic diseases, was held at Rome in May last, and adjourned to meet again on further notice. An expert delegate in behalf of the United States has attended, and will submit a report.

FRATERNAL RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

Our relations with Mexico continue to be most cordial as befits those of neighbors between whom the strongest ties of friendship and intimacy exist as the natural and growing consequence of the similarity of our institutions and geographical propinquity. The relocation of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico eastward of the Rio Grande, under the convention of July 29, 1882, has been unavoidably delayed, but I see no difficulty in securing a prolongation of the period for its accomplishment. The lately concluded commercial treaty with Mexico still awaits the stipulated legislation to carry its provisions into effect, for which one year's additional time has been secured by a supplementary article signed in February last, and since ratified on both sides. As this convention, so important to the commercial welfare of the two adjoining countries, has been constitutionally confirmed by the treaty-making branch, I express the hope that legislation to make it effective may not be long delayed. The large influx of capital and enterprise to Mexico from the United States continues to aid in the development of the resources and in augmenting the material well-being of our sister Republic. Lines of railway, penetrating to the heart and capital of the country, are bringing the two people into mutually beneficial intercourse, and enlarged facilities of transit add to profitable commerce, create new markets, and furnish avenues to otherwise isolated communities. I have already adverted to the suggested construction of a ship railway across the narrow formation of the Territory of Mexico at Tehuantepec.

AMERICAN CITIZENS MUST BE RESPECTED.

The United States must hold, in their intercourse with every power, that the status of their citizens is to be respected and equal privileges accorded to them without regard to creed, and affected by no considerations save those growing out of domiciliary return to the land of their original allegiance or of unfulfilled personal obligations which may survive under municipal laws after such voluntary return.

THE VENEZUELAN AWARDS.

The negotiation with Venezuela relative to the rehearing of the awards of the Mixed Commission, constituted under the treaty of 1866, was resumed in view of the recent acquiescence of the Venezuelan Envoy in the principal point advanced by this Government, that the effects of the old treaty could only be set aside by the operation of a new convention. A result in substantial accord with the advisory suggestions contained in the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, has been agreed upon, and will shortly be submitted to the Senate for ratification.

UNITED STATES TRUST FUNDS.

Under section 3653 of the Revised Statutes, all funds held in trust by the United States, and the annual interest accruing thereon, when not otherwise required by treaty, are to be invested in stocks of the United States, bearing a rate of interest not less than 5 per centum per annum. There being now no procurable stocks paying so high a rate of interest, the letter of the statute is at present inapplicable, but its spirit is subserved by continuing to make investments of this nature in current stocks bearing the highest interest now paid.

The statute, however, makes no provision for the disposal of such accretions. It being contrary to the general rule of this Government to allow interest on claims, I recommend the repeal of the provision in question.

CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION.

The inadequacy of existing legislation touching citizenship and naturalization demands your consideration. While recognizing the right of expatriation, no statutory provision exists providing means for renouncing citizenship by an American citizen, native-born or naturalized, nor for terminating and vacating improved acquisition of citizenship. Even a fraudulent decree of naturalization cannot now be canceled.

The privilege and franchise of American citizenship should be granted with care and extended to those only who intend in good faith to assume its duties and responsibilities when attaining its privileges. It should be withheld from those who merely go through the forms of naturalization with intent of escaping duties with their original allegiance, without taking upon themselves those of the new status, or who may acquire the rights of American citizenship for no other than a hostile purpose toward their original government. These evils have had many flagrant illustrations.

I regard with favor the suggestion put forth by one of my predecessors, that provision may be made for a central bureau of record of the decrees of naturalization granted by the various courts throughout the United States, now invested with that power.

The rights which spring from domicile in the United States, especially when coupled with a declaration of intention to become a citizen, are worthy of definition by statute. The stranger coming hither with intent to remain, establishing his residence in our midst, contributing to the general welfare, and by his voluntary act declaring his purpose to assume the responsibility of citizenship, thereby gains an inchoate status which legislation may properly define. The laws of certain States and Territories admit a domiciled alien to the local franchise, conferring on him the rights of citizenship to a degree which places him in the anomalous position of being a citizen of a State and yet not of the United States within the purview of Federal and international laws. It is important within the scope of national legislation to define this right of alien domicile as distinguished from Federal naturalization.

OUR IMMEDIATE NEIGHBORS.

The commercial relations of the United States with their immediate neighbors and with important areas of traffic near our shores, suggest especially liberal intercourse between them and us.

Following the treaty of 1883 with Mexico, which rested on the basis of reciprocal exemption from custom duties, other similar treaties were initiated by my predecessor.

Recognizing the need of less obstructed traffic with Cuba and Port Rico, and met by the desire of Spain to succor languishing interest in the Antilles, steps were taken to attain those ends by a treaty of commerce. A similar treaty was afterward signed by the Dominican Republic. Subsequently overtures were made by her Britannic Majesty's Government for a like mutual extension of commercial intercourse with the British West Indian and South American dependencies, but without result.

SPAIN AND SAN DOMINGO.

On taking office I withdrew for re-examination the treaties signed with Spain and Santo Domingo, then pending before the Senate. The result has been to satisfy me of the inexpediency of entering into engagements of this character not covering the entire traffic. These treaties contemplated the surrender by the United States of large revenues for inadequate considerations. Upon sugar alone duties were surrendered to an amount far exceeding all the advantages offered in exchange. Even were it intended to relieve our consumers, it was evident that so long as the exemption but partially covered our importation, such relief would be illusory. To relinquish a revenue so essential seemed highly improvident at a time when new and large drains upon the treasury were contemplated. Moreover, embarrassing questions would have arisen under the favored nation clauses of treaties with other nations. As a further objection, it is evident that tariff regulation by treaty diminishes that independent control over its own revenues which is essential for the safety and welfare of any Government. An emergency calling for an increase of taxation may at any time arise, and no engagement with a foreign power should exist to hamper the action of the Government.

TONNAGE DUES.

By the fourteenth section of the shipping act, approved June 26, 1884, certain reductions and contingent exemptions from tonnage dues were made as to vessels entering ports of the United States from any foreign port in North and Central America, The West India Islands, the Bahamas and Bermudas, Mexico and the Isthmus as far as Aspinwall and Panama; the Governments of Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Portugal and Sweden and Norway, have asserted under the favored-nation clause in their treaties with the United States, a claim to like treatment in respect to vessels coming to the United States from their home ports. This Government, however, holds that the privilege granted by the act is purely geographical, inuring to any vessel of any foreign power that may choose to engage in traffic between this country and any port within the defined zone, and no warrant exists under the most-favored nation clause for the extension of the privileges in question to vessels sailing to this country from ports outside the limitation of the act. Undoubtedly the relations of commerce with our near neighbors, whose territories form so long a frontier line difficult to be guarded, and who find in our country and equally offer to us natural markets, demand special and considerate treatment. It rests with Congress to consider what legislative action may increase facilities of intercourse which contiguity makes natural and desirable.

THE GOVERNMENT FINANCES.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury fully exhibits the condition of the public finances, and of the several branches of the Government connected with his department. The suggestions of the Secretary relating to practical operations of this important department, and his recommendations in direction of simplification and economy, particularly in the work of collecting customs duties, are especially urged upon the attention of Congress.

REDUCTION OF DEBT.

The amount paid on the public debt during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, was $55,993,215.45, and there has been paid since that date and up to Nov. 1, 1885, the sum of $336,548, leaving the amount of the debt at the last named date $1,514,475,840.47. There was, however, at that time in the Treasury applicable to the general purposes of the Government the sum of $66,818,292.38.

THE REVENUE AND EXPENDITURES FOR THE CURRENT YEAR.

The total receipts for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1886, ascertained to October 1, 1885, and estimated for the remainder of the year, are $315,000,000.

The expenditures, ascertained and estimated for the same time, are $245,000,000, leaving a surplus at the close of the year estimated at $70,000,000.

VALUE OF EXPORTS.

The value of exports from the United States to foreign countries during the last fiscal year was as follows:

Domestic merchandise	$726,682,946
Foreign merchandise	13,556,802
Gold	8,177,892
Silver	33,753,633
Total	$784,121,280

Some of the principal exports, with their values and the percentage they respectively bear to the total exportation, are given as follows:

	Value.	Per centage.
Cotton and cotton manufactures	$213,760,049	29.12
Manufactures	170,370,820	22.97
Breadstuffs—provisions	107,332,456	14.77
Oils—mineral, vegetable, and animal	51,325,202	7.48
Tobacco and its manufactures	24,767,305	3.41
Wood and its manufactures	21,461,322	2.95

OUR IMPORTS.

Our imports during the year are as follows:

Merchandise	$579,584,653.87
Gold	29,391,895.00
Silver	16,550,627.00
Total	$622,822,376.80

The following are given as prominent articles of imports during the year, with their values and with the percentage they bear to the importations:

	Value.	Per-centage.
Sugar and molasses	$76,738,713	13.24
Coffee	46,723,318	8.01
Wool and its manufactures	41,056,382	7.74
Silk and its manufactures	40,333,002	6.93
Chemicals, dyeings and medicines	35,070,816	6.07
Iron and steel, and other manufactures	31,563,689	5.08
Flax, hemp, jute, and their manufacture	32,851,874	5.69
Cotton and its manufactures	28,152,001	4.88
Hides and skins other than fur skins	20,686,141	3.56

THE REDUCTION OF THE TARIFF.

The fact that our revenues are in excess of the actual needs of an economical administration of the Government justifies a reduction in the amount expected from the people for its support. Our Government is but the means established by the will of a free people by which certain principles are applied which they have adopted for their benefit and protection. And it is never better administered and its truer spirit is never better observed than when the people's taxation for its support is scrupulously limited to the actual necessity of expenditures and distributed according to a just and equitable plan. The proposition with which we have to deal is the reduction of the revenue received by the Government and indirectly paid by the people from customs duties.

The question of free trade is not involved nor is there now any occasion for the general discussion of the wisdom or expediency of a protective system. Justice and fairness dictate that in any modification of the present laws relating to revenue, the industries and interest which have been encouraged by such laws, and in which our citizens have large investments, should not be ruthlessly injured or destroyed.

We should deal with the subject in such manner as to protect the interests of American labor, which is the capital of our workingmen. Its stability and proper remuneration furnish the most justifiable pretext for a protective policy. Within these limitations a certain reduction should be made in our customs revenue. The amount of such reduction having been determined, the inquiry follows: Where can it best be remitted, and what articles can best be released from duty in the interest of our citizens?

I think the reduction should be made in the revenue derived from a tax upon the imported necessaries of life. We thus directly lessen the cost of living in every family of the land, and release to the public in every humble home a larger measure of the rewards of frugal industry.

THE NATIONAL BANK CIRCULATION.

During the year ended Nov. 1, 1885, 115 national banks were organized, with an aggregate capital of $10,930,000, and circulating notes have been issued to them amounting to $4,271,910. The whole number of these banks in existence on the day above mentioned was 2,727.

The very limited amount of circulating notes issued by our national banks compared with the amount the law permits them to issue, upon a deposit of bonds for their redemption, indicates that the volume of our circulating medium may be largely increased through this instrumentality.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

Since February, 1878, the Government has, under the compulsory provisions of law, purchased silver bullion and coined the same at the rate of more than 2,000,000 of dollars every month. By this process up to the present date 215,759,431 silver dollars have been coined.

A reasonable appreciation of a delegation of power to the General Government would limit its exercise, without express restrictive words, to the people's needs and the requirements of the public welfare.

Upon this theory the authority "to coin money" given Congress by the Constitution, if it permits the purchase by the Government of bullion for coinage in any event, does not justify such purchase and coinage to an extent beyond the amount needed for sufficient circulating medium. The desire to utilize the silver product of the country should not lead to a misuse or the perversion of this power.

The necessity for such an addition to the silver currency of the nation as is compelled by the silver coinage act is negatived by the fact that up to the present time only about fifty millions of silver dollars so coined have actually found their way into circulation, leaving more than one hundred and sixty-five millions in possession of the Government, the custody of which has entailed a considerable expense for construction of vaults for its deposit. Against this latter amount there are outstanding silver certificates amounting to about 93,000,000 of dollars. Every month $2,000,000 of gold in the public Treasury are paid out for $2,000,000 or more of silver dollars, to be added to the idle mass already accumulated. If continued long enough this operation will result in the substitution of silver for all the gold the Government owns applicable to its general purposes. It will not do to rely upon the receipts of the Government to make good this drain of gold, because the silver thus coined, having been made legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private, at times during the past six months fifty per cent. of the receipts for duties have been in silver or silver certificates, while the average within that period has been twenty per cent. The proportion of silver and its certificates received by the Government will probably increase as time goes on, for the reason that the nearer the period approaches when it will be obliged to offer silver in payment of its obligations, the greater inducement there will be to hoard gold against depreciation in the value of silver, or for the purpose of speculation. This hoarding of gold has already begun. When the time comes that gold has been withdrawn from circulation, then will be apparent the difference between the real value of the silver dollar and a dollar in gold, and the two coins will part company.

Gold, still the standard of value and necessary in our dealings with other countries, will be at a premium over silver. Banks which have substituted gold for the deposits of their customers may pay them with silver bought with such gold, thus making a handsome profit. Rich speculators will sell their hoarded gold to their neighbors who need it to liquidate their foreign debts at a ruinous premium over silver, and the laboring men and women of the land, most defenseless of all, will find that the dollar received for the wages of their toil has sadly shrunk in its purchasing power. It may be said that the latter result will be but temporary, and that ultimately the price of labor will be adjusted to the change, but even if this takes place the wage-worker cannot possibly gain, but must inevitably lose, since the price he is compelled to pay for his living will not only be measured in coin heavily depreciated, and fluctuating, and uncertain in its value, but this uncertainty in the value of the purchasing medium will be made the pretext for an advance in prices beyond that justified by actual depreciation. The words uttered in 1840, by Daniel Webster, in the Senate of the United States, are true today: "The very men of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency, and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil." The most distinguished advocate of bimetalism, discussing our silver coinage, has lately written: "No American citizen's hand has yet felt the sensation of cheapness, either in receiving or expending, the silver-net dollars," and those who live by labor or legitimate trade never will feel that sensation of cheapness. However plenty silver dollars may become, they will not be distributed as gifts among the people, and if the laboring man should receive four silver dollars where he now receives but two, he will pay in the depreciated coin more than double the price he now pays for all the necessaries and comforts of life. Those who do not fear any disastrous consequences arising from the continued compulsory coinage of silver as now directed by law, and who suppose that the addition to the currency of the country, intended as its result, will be a public benefit, are reminded that history demonstrates that the point is easily reached in the attempt to float at the same time two sorts of money of different excellence, when the better will cease to be in circulation. The hoarding of gold which has already taken place indicates that we shall not escape the usual experience in such cases. So, if this silver coinage be continued, we may reasonably expect that gold and its equivalent will abandon the field of circulation to silver alone. This, of course, must produce a severe contraction of our circulating medium instead of adding to it.

It will not be disputed that any attempt on the part of the Government to cause the circulation of silver dollars worth 80 cents side by side with gold dollars worth 100 cents, even with the limit that legislation does not run contrary to laws of trade, to be successful must be seconded by the confidence of the people that both coins will retain the same purchasing power and be interchangeable at will.

Special effort has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount of our silver coin in circulation, but the fact that a large share of the limited amount thus put out has soon returned to the public treasury in payment of duties, leads to the belief that the people do not now desire to keep it on hand, and this, with the evident disposition to hoard gold, gives rise to the suspicion that there already exists a lack of confidence among the people touching our financial processes. There is certainly not enough silver now in circulation to cause uneasiness, and the whole amount coined and now on hand might, after a time, be absorbed by the people without apprehension; but it is the ceaseless stream that threatens to overflow the land which causes fear and uncertainty. What has been thus far submitted upon this subject relates almost entirely to considerations of a home nature, unconnected with the bearing which the policies of other nations have upon the question, but it is perfectly apparent that a line of action in regard to our currency cannot wisely be settled upon or persisted in without considering the attitude on the subject of other countries with whom we maintain intercourse through commerce, trade, and travel. An acknowledgement of this is found in the act by virtue of which our silver is compulsorily coined. It provides that: "The President shall invite the Governments of the countries composing the Latin Union, so called, and of such other European nations as he may deem advisable, to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing internationally the uses of bimetallic money and securing fixety of relative value between these metals.

This conference absolutely failed, and a similar fate has awaited all subsequent efforts in the same direction, and still we continue our coinage of silver at a ratio different from that of any other nation. The most vital part of the Silver Coinage Act remains inoperative and unexecuted, and without an ally or friend we battle upon the silver field in an illogical and losing contest. To give full effect to the design of Congress on this subject, I have made careful and earnest endeavor since the adjournment of the last Congress.

To this end I delegated a gentleman well instructed in fiscal science to proceed to the financial centers of Europe, and in conjunction with our Ministers to England, France, and Germany, to obtain a full knowledge of the attitude and intent of these governments respecting the establishment of such an international ratio as would procure free coinage of both metals at the mints of those countries and our own. By my direction our Consul General at Paris has given close attention to the proceedings of the Congress of the Latin Union in order to indicate our interest in its objects and report its action.

It may be said in brief as the result of these efforts that the attitude of the leading powers remains substantially unchanged since the Monetary Conference of 1881; nor is it to be questioned that the views of these Governments are in each instance supported by the weight of public opinion. The steps thus taken have, therefore, only more fully demonstrated the uselessness of further attempts at present to arrive at any agreement on the subject with other nations. In the meantime we are accumulating silver coin based upon our peculiar ratio to such an extent, and assuming so heavy a burden to be provided for in any international negotiations, as will render us an undesirable party to any future monetary conference of nations.

It is a significant fact that four of the five countries comprising the Latin Union mentioned in our coinage act, embarrassed with their silver currency, have just completed an agreement among themselves that no more silver shall be coined by their respective governments, and that such as has been already coined and in circulation shall be redeemed in gold by the country of its coinage. The resort to this expedient by these countries may well arrest the attention of those who suppose that we can succeed without shock or injury in the attempt to circulate, upon its merits, all the silver we may coin under the provisions of the silver-coinage act. The condition in which our Treasury may be placed by a persistence in our present course is a matter of concern to every patriotic citizen who does not desire his Government to pay in silver such of its obligations as should be paid in gold. Nor should our condition be such as to oblige us, in a prudent management of our affairs, to discontinue the calling in and payment of interest bearing obligations which we have the right now to discharge and thus avoid the payment of further interest thereon.

The so-called debtor class, for whose benefit the continued compulsory coinage of silver is insisted upon, are not dishonest because they are in debt, and they should not be suspected of a desire to jeopardize the financial safety of the country in order that they may cancel their present debts by paying the same in depreciated dollars; nor should it be forgotten that it is not the rich nor the money-lender alone that must submit to such a readjustment, enforced by the Government and their debtors. The pittance of the widow and the orphan, and the incomes of helpless beneficiaries of all kinds, would be disastrously reduced. The depositors in savings banks and in other institutions which hold in trust the savings of the poor, when their little accumulations are scaled down to meet the new order of things, would, in their distress, painfully realize the delusion of the promise made to them that plentiful money would improve their condition. We have now on hand all the silver dollars necessary to supply the present needs of the people, and to satisfy those who from sentiment wish to see them in circulation, and if their coinage is suspended they can be readily obtained by all who desire them. If the need of more is at any time apparent, their coinage may be renewed.

That disaster has not already overtaken us furnishes no proof that danger does not wait upon a continuation of the present silver coinage. We have been saved by the most careful management, and unusual expedients by a combination of fortunate conditions, and by a confident expectation that the commerce of the Government in regard to silver coinage would be speedily changed by an action of Congress. Prosperity hesitates upon our threshold because of dangers and uncertainties surrounding this question.

Capital timidly shrinks from trade, and investors are unwilling to take the chances of the questionable shape in which their money will be returned to them, while enterprise halts at a risk against which care and sagacious management do not protect. As a necessary consequence, labor lacks employment, and suffering and distress are visited upon a portion of our fellow-citizens especially entitled to the careful consideration of those charged with the duties of legislation. No interest appeals to us so strongly for a safe and stable currency as the vast army of the unemployed.

I recommend the suspension of comynlsory coinage of silver dollars directed by the law passed in February, 1878.

THE ARMY.

The report of the Secretary of War is herewith submitted. The attention of Congress is invited to the detailed account which it contains of the administration of his department and his recommendations and suggestions for the improvement of the service.

The army consisted, at the date of the last consolidated returns, of 2,151 officers, and 24,705 enlisted men. The expenses of the departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, including $13,164,331.60 for public works and river and harbor improvements, were $45,850,903.54.

Besides the troops which were dispatched in pursuit of the small band of Indians who left their reservation in Arizona and committed murders and outrages, two regiments of cavalry and one of infantry were sent last July to the Indian Territory to prevent an outbreak which seemed imminent. They remained to aid, if necessary, in the expulsion of intruders upon the reservation who seemed to have caused the discontent among the Indians, but the Executive proclamation warning them to remove was complied with without interference.

Troops were also sent to Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, after the massacre of Chinese there, to prevent further disturbances, and afterward to Seattle, in Washington Territory, to avert a threatened attack upon Chinese laborers and domestic violence there. In both cases, the mere presence of the troops had the desired effect.

SEA-COAST DEFENSES.

The Board on Fortifications or Other Defenses, appointed in pursuance of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, will in a short time present their report, and it is hoped that this may greatly aid the legislation so necessary to remedy the present defenseless condition of our seacoasts.

BRIDGES OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

There should be a general law of Congress prohibiting the construction of bridges over navigable waters in such manner as to obstruct navigation, with provisions for preventing the same. It seems that under existing statutes the Government cannot intervene to prevent such a construction when entered upon without its consent, though when such consent is asked and granted upon condition, the authority to insist upon such condition is clear. Thus it is represented that, while the officers of the Government are, with great care, guarding against the obstruction of navigation by a bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Paul, a large pier for a bridge has been built just below this place, directly in the navigable channel of the river. If such things are to be permitted, a strong argument is presented against the appropriation of large sums of money to improve the navigation of this and other important highways of commerce.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy gives a history of the operations of his department and the present condition of the work committed to his charge. He details in full the course pursued by him to protect the rights of the Government in respect of certain vessels unfinished at the time of his accession to office, and also concerning the dispatch boat Dolphin, claimed to be completed and awaiting the acceptance of the department.

No one can fail to see, from the recital contained in this report, that only the application of business principles has been insisted upon in the treatment of these subjects, and that whatever controversy has arisen was caused by the exaction on the part of the department of the contract obligations as they were legally construed. In the case of the Dolphin, with entire justness to the contractor, an agreement has been entered into providing for the ascertainment by a judicial inquiry of the complete or partial compliance with the contract in her construction, and further providing for the assessment of any damages to which the Government may be entitled on account of a partial failure to perform such contract, or the payment of the sum still remaining unpaid upon her price in case a full performance is adjudged. The contractor by reason of his failure in business, being unable to complete the other three vessels, they were taken possession of by the Government in their unfinished state, under a clause in the contract permitting such a course, and are now in process of completion in the yard of the contractor, but under the supervision of the Navy Department.

Congress in its last session authorized the construction of two additional new cruisers and two gunboats, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $2,295,000. The appropriation for this purpose having become available on the 1st day of July last, steps were at once taken for the procurement of such plans for the construction of these vessels as would be likely to ensure their usefulness when completed. These are of the utmost importance, considering the constant advance in the art of building vessels of this character, and the time is not lost which is spent in their careful consideration and selection. All must admit the importance of an effective navy to a nation like ours, having such an extended sea coast to protect. Yet we have not a single vessel of war that could keep the seas against a first-class vessel of any important power. Such a condition ought not longer to continue. The nation that can not resist aggression is constantly exposed to it. Its foreign policy is of necessity weak, and its negotiations are conducted with disadvantage because it is not in a condition to enforce the terms dictated by its sense of right and justice.

Inspired as I am by the hope, shared by all patriotic citizens, that the day is not far distant when our navy will be such as befits our standing among the nations of the earth, and rejoiced at every step that leads in the direction of such a consummation, I deem it my duty to especially direct the attention of Congress to the close of the report of the Secretary of the Navy in which the humiliating features of the present organization of this department is exhibited, and the startling abuses and the waste of its present methods are exposed. The conviction is forced upon us, with the certainty of mathematical demonstration, that before we proceed further in the restoration of a navy, we need a thoroughly reorganized Navy Department.

The fact that within seventeen years more than $75,000,000 has been spent in construction, repair, equipment, and armament of vessels, and the further fact that, instead of an effective and creditable fleet, we have only the discontent and apprehension of a nation undefended by war vessels, added to the disclosures now made, do not permit us to doubt that every attempt to revive our navy has thus far, for the most part, been misdirected, and all our efforts in that direction have been little better than blind gropings, and expensive, aimless follies.

Unquestionably if we are content with the maintenance of a navy department simply as an ornament to the Government, a constant watchfulness may prevent some of the scandal and abuse which have found their way into our present organization, and its incurable waste may be reduced to the minimum. But if we desire to build ships for present usefulness instead of naval reminders of the days that are past, we must have a department organized for the work, supplied with all the latest and best ingenuity our country affords and prepared to take advantage of the experience of other nations, systematized so that all efforts shall unite and lend in one direction; and fully imbued with the conviction that war vessels now are useless unless they combine all that the ingenuity of man has up to this day brought forth relating to their construction. I earnestly commend the portion of the Secretary's report devoted to this subject to the action of Congress, in the hope that the suggestions touching the reorganization of his department may be adopted as the first step toward the reconstruction of our navy.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

The affairs of the postal service are exhibited by the report of the Postmaster General, which will be laid before you. The postal revenue, whose rates of gain upon the rising prosperity of 1882 and 1883 outstripped the increasing expense of our growing service, was checked by the reduction in the rate of letter postage, which took effect with the beginning of October in the latter year, and it diminished during the two fiscal years $2,740,000, in the proportion of $2,270,000 in 1884 to $520,000 in 1885. Natural growth and development have, in the meantime, increased expenditure, resulting in a deficiency in the revenue to the expenses of the department of $5,250,000 for the year 1884, and $8,533,333.33½ in the last fiscal year. The anticipated and natural revival of the revenue has been oppressed and retarded by the unfavorable business condition of the country, of which the postal service is a faithful indicator. The gratifying fact is shown, however, by the report, that our returning prosperity is marked by a gain of $380,000 in the revenue of the latter half of the last year over the corresponding period of the preceding year. The change in the rate of first-class matter which may be carried for a single rate of postage from a half-ounce to an ounce, and the reduction by one-half of the rate of newspaper postage, which, under recent legislation, begun with the current year, will operate to restrain the augmentation of receipts which otherwise might have been expected to such a degree that the scale of expense may gain upon the revenue and cause an increased deficiency to be shown at its close; yet after no long period of reawakened prosperity, by proper economy, it is confidently anticipated that even the present low rates, now as favorable as any country affords, will be adequate to sustain the cost of the service.

The operation of the Postoffice Department is for the convenience and benefit of the people, and the method by which they pay the charges of this useful arm of the public service, so that it be just and impartial, is of less importance to them than the economical expenditure of the means they provide for its maintenance, and the due improvement of its agencies, so that they may enjoy its highest usefulness. A proper attention has been directed to the prevention of waste or extravagance, and good results appear from the reports to have already been accomplished.

DOMESTIC MONEY ORDERS.

I approve the recommendation of the Postmaster General to reduce the charges on domestic money orders of 5 and less from 8 to 5 cents. This change will materially aid those of our people who, most of all, avail themselves of this instrumentality, but to whom the element of cheapness is of the greatest importance. With this reduction the system would still remain self-supporting.

THE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM

has been extended to nineteen additional cities during the year, and 178 now enjoy its conveniences. Experience has commended it to those who enjoy its benefits, and further enlargement of its facilities is due to other communities to which it is adapted. In the cities where it has been established, taken together, the local postage exceeds its maintenance by nearly $1,300,000. The limit to which this system is now confined by law has been nearly reached, and the reasons given justify the extension which is proposed.

FOREIGN-MAIL SERVICE.

It was decided, with my approbation, after a sufficient examination, to be inexpedient for the Postoffice Department to contract for carrying our foreign mails under the additional authority given by the last Congress. The amount limited was inadequate to pay all within the purview of the law the full rate of 50 cents per mile, and it would have been unjust and unwise to have given it some and denied it to others. Nor could contracts have been let under the law to all at a rate to have brought the aggregate within the appropriation without such practical reductions of terms as would have violated it. The rate of sea and inland postage which was proffered under another statute clearly appears to be a fair compensation for the desired service, being three times the price necessary to secure transportation by other vessels upon any route, and much beyond the charges made to private persons for services not less burdensome.

Some of the steamship companies, upon the refusal of the Postmaster General to attempt, by the means provided, the distribution of the sum appropriated, withdrew the services of their vessels, and thereby occasioned slight inconvenience, though no considerable injury. The mails have been dispatched by other means. Whatever may be thought of the policy of subsidizing any line of public conveyance or travel, I am satisfied that it should not be done under cover of an expenditure incident to the administration of a department, nor should there be any uncertainty as to the recipients of the subsidy or any discretion left to an executive officer as to its distribution. If such gifts of public money are to be made for the purpose of aiding any enterprise in the supposed interest of the public, I cannot but think that the amount to be paid and the beneficiary might better be determined by Congress than in any other way.

THE POSTAL UNION.

The International Congress of delegates from the postal union countries convened at Lisbon, in Portugal, in February last, and after a session of some weeks the delegates signed a convention amendatory of the present Postal Union Convention in some particulars designed to advance its purposes. This additional act has had my approval, and will be laid before you with the departmental reports.

I approve the recommendation of the Postmaster General that another assistant be provided for his department. I invite your consideration to the several other recommendations contained in his report.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The report of the Attorney General contains a history of the conduct of the Department of Justice during the last year, and a number of valuable suggestions as to needed legislation, and I invite your careful attention to the same. The condition of business in the courts of the United States is such that there seems to be an imperative necessity for remedial legislation on the subject. Some of these courts are so overburdened with pending causes that the delays on determining litigation amount often to a denial of justice. Among the plans suggested for relief is one submitted by the Attorney General. Its main features are the transfer of all the original jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts to the District Courts, and an increase of Judges for the latter where necessary; an addition of Judges to the Circuit Courts and constituting the exclusive courts of appeal and reasonably limiting appeals thereto; further restrictions of the right to remove causes from the State to Federal Courts, permitting appeals to the Supreme Court from the courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories only in the same cases as they are allowed from State Courts, and guarding against an unnecessary number of appeals from the Circuit Courts. I approve the plan thus outlined, and recommend the legislation necessary for its application to our judicial system.

The present mode of compensating United States Marshals and District Attorneys should, in my opinion, be changed. They are allowed to charge against the Government certain fees for service, their incomes being measured by the amount of such fees within a fixed limit to their annual aggregate. This is a direct inducement for them to make their fees in criminal cases as large as possible in an effort to reach the maximum sum permitted. As an entirely natural consequence unscrupulous Marshals are found encouraging frivolous prosecutions, arresting people on petty charges of crime and transporting them to distant places for examination and trial, for the purpose of earning mileage and other fees, and District Attorneys uselessly attend criminal examinations far from their places of residence for the express purpose of swelling their accounts against the Government. The actual expenses incurred in these transactions are always charged against the Government. Thus the rights and freedom of our citizens are outraged, and public expenditures increased for the purpose of furnishing public officers pretexts for increasing the measure of their compensation. I think Marshals and District Attorneys should be paid salaries adjusted by a rule which will make them commensurate with services fairly rendered.

PUNISHING MISDEMEANORS.

In connection with the subject, I desire to suggest the advisability, if it be found not obnoxious to constitutional objection, of investing United States Commissioners with the power to try and determine certain violations of law within the grade of misdemeanors. Such trials might be made to depend upon the option of the accused. The multiplication of small and technical offenses, especially under the provisions of our Internal Revenue law, renders some change in our present system very desirable, in the interests of humanity as well as economy. The District Courts are now crowded with petty prosecutions, involving a punishment, in case of conviction, of only a slight fine, while the parties accused are harassed by an enforced attendance upon the courts held hundreds of miles from their homes. If poor and friendless, they are obliged to remain in jail, and months, perhaps, elapse before a session of the court is held, and are finally brought to trial surrounded by strangers, and with but little opportunity for defense. In the meantime frequently the Marshal has charged against the Government his fees for an arrest, the transportation of the accused and the expense of the same; and for summoning witnesses before a Commissioner, a Grand Jury and in court, the witnesses have been paid from the public funds large fees and traveling expenses, and the Commissioner and District Attorney have also made their charges against the Government. This abuse in the administration of our criminal law should be remedied, and if the plan above suggested is not practicable, some other should be devised.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior, containing an account of the operation of this important department and much interesting information, will be submitted for your consideration. The most intricate and difficult subject in charge of this department is the treatment and management of

THE INDIANS.

I am satisfied that some progress may be noted in their condition as a result of a prudent administration of the present laws and regulations for their control; but it is submitted that there is lack of a fixed purpose of policy on this subject which should be supplied. It is useless to dilate upon the wrongs of the Indians, and as useless to indulge in the heartless belief that because their wrongs are revenged in their own atrocious manner, therefore they should be exterminated.

They are within the care of our Government, and their rights are, or should be protected from invasion by the most solemn obligations. They are properly enough called the wards of the Government, and it should be borne in mind that this guardianship involves on our part efforts for the improvement of their condition and the enforcement of their rights.

There seems to be general concurrence in the proposition that the ultimate object of their treatment should be their civilization and citizenship. Fitted by these to keep pace in the march of progress with the advanced civilization about them, they will readily assimilate with the mass of our population, assuming the responsibilities and receiving the protection incident to this condition. The difficulty appears to be in the selection of the means to be at present employed toward the attainment of this result.

Our Indian population, exclusive of those in Alaska, is reported as numbering 260,000, nearly all being located on lands set apart for their use and occupation, aggregating over 134,000,000 of acres. These lands are included in boundaries of seventeen reservations of different dimensions, scattered in twenty-one States and Territories, presenting great variations in climate and in the kind and quality of their soils. Among Indians upon these several reservations there exists the most marked differences in natural traits and disposition, and in their progress toward civilization. While some are lazy, vicious, and stupid, others are industrious, peaceful and intelligent. While a portion of them are self-supporting and independent and have so far advanced in civilization that they make their own laws, administered though officers of their own choice, and educate their children in schools of their own establishment and maintenance, others still remain in squalor and dependance almost in the savagery of their natural state. In dealing with this question the desires manifested by the Indians should not be ignored. Here again we find a great diversity. With some the tribal relation is cherished with the utmost tenacity, while its hold upon others is considerably relaxed. The love of home is strong with all, and yet there are those whose attachment to a particular locality is by no means unerring. The ownership of these lands in severalty is much desired by some, while by others land sometimes again the most civilized, such a distribution would be bitterly opposed.

The variation of their wants growing out of and connected with the character of their several locations should be regarded. Some are upon reservations most fit for grazing, but without flocks or herds, and some on arable land have no agricultural implements, while some of the reservations are double the size necessary to maintain the number of Indians now upon them. In a few cases, perhaps, they should be enlarged. Add to all this the difference in the administration of the agencies, while the same duties are devolved upon all, the disposition of the agents and the manner of their contact with the Indians have much to do with their condition and welfare.

The agent who perfunctionarily performs his duty and slothfully neglects all opportunity to advance their moral and physical improvement, and fails to inspire them with a desire for better things, will accomplish nothing in the direction of their civilization, while he who feels the burden of an important trust and has an interest in his work will, by consistent examples, firm, yet considerate treatment, and well-directed aid and encouragement, constantly lead those under his charge toward the light of their enfranchisement. The history of all the progress which has been made in civilization of the Indian, I think, will disclose the fact that the beginning has been religious teaching, followed by or accompanying secular education, while the self-sacrificing and pious men and women who have aided in this good work by their independent endeavors have for their reward the beneficent result of their labor and consciousness of Christian duty well performed. Their valuable services should be fully acknowledged by all who, under the law, are charged with the control and management of our Indian wards.

What has been said indicates that in the present condition of the Indians, no attempt should be made to apply a fixed and unyielding law of action to their varied and varying needs and circumstances. The Indian Bureau, burdened as it is with this general oversight, and with the details of the establishment, can hardly possess itself of the minute particulars of cases needing treatment, and thus the propriety of creating an instrumentality auxiliary to those already established for the care of the Indians, suggests itself. I recommend the passage of a law authorizing the appointment of six commissioners, three of whom shall be detailed from the army, to be charged with the duty of a careful inspection from time to time of all the Indians upon our reservations or subject to the care and control of the Government, with a view of discovering their exact condition and needs, and determining what steps shall be taken on behalf of the Government to improve their situation in the direction of their self-support and complete civilization. That they ascertain from such inspection what, if any, of the reservations may be reduced in area, and in such cases what part, not needed for Indian occupation, may be purchased by the Government from the Indians and disposed of for their benefit; what, if any, Indians may, with their consent, be removed to other reservations, with a view of their concentration, and the sale on their behalf of their abandoned reservations; what Indian lands now held in common should be allotted in severalty; in what manner and to what extent the Indians upon the reservations can be placed under the protection of our laws and subjected to their penalties, and which, if any, Indians should be invested with the right of citizenship. The powers and functions of the Commissioners in regard to these subjects should be clearly defined, though they should, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior, be given all the authority to deal definitely with the questions presented, if deemed safe and consistent.

SURVEYING INDIAN LANDS.

The expense of the Indian Bureau during the last fiscal year was more than $6,500,000. I believe much of this expenditure may be saved under the plan proposed; that its economical effects would be increased with its continuance; that the safety of our frontier settlers would be subserved under its operation, and that the nation would be saved through its results from the imputation of inhumanity, injustice, and mismanagement. In order to carry out the policy of allotment of Indian lands in severalty, when deemed expedient, it will be necessary to have surveys completed of the reservations, and I hope that provision will be made for the prosecution of this work.

They should also be charged with the duty of ascertaining the number of Indians who might properly be furnished with implements of agriculture, and of what kind; in what cases the support of the Government should be withdrawn; where the present plan of distributing Indian supplies should be changed; where schools may be established, and where discontinued; the conduct, method and fitness of agents in charge of reservations; the extent to which such reservations are occupied or intruded upon by unauthorized persons, and generally all matters relating to the welfare and improvement of the Indian. They should advise with the Secretary of the Interior concerning these matters of detail in management, and he should be given power to deal with them fully, if he is not now invested with such power. This plan contemplates the selection of such persons for commissioners who are interested in the Indian question, and who have practical ideas on the subject of their treatment.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

In May of the present year a small portion of the Chiricahua Apaches on the White Mountain Reservation in Arizona left the reservation and committed a number of murders upon settlers in that neighborhood. Though prompt and energetic action was taken by the military, the renegades eluded capture and escaped into Mexico. The formation of the country through which these Indians passed, their thorough acquaintance with the same, the speed of their escape and the manner in which they scattered and concealed themselves in the mountains near the scene of their outrages, put our soldiers at a great disadvantage in their efforts to capture them, although the expectation is still entertained that they will ultimately be taken and punished for their crimes.

PAPAGO RESERVATIONS PROTECTED.

The threatening and disorderly conduct of the Cheyennes, of the Indian Territory, early last summer, caused considerable alarm and uneasiness. Investigation proved that their threatening attitude was due, in a great measure, to the occupation of the land of their reservation by immense herds of cattle, which their owners claimed were rightfully there under certain leases made by the Indians. Such occupation appearing, upon examination, to be unlawful, notwithstanding these leases, the intruders were ordered to remove with their cattle from the land of the Indians by the Executive proclamation. The enforcement of this proclamation had the effect of peace and order among the Indians, and they are now quiet and well behaved.

By an Executive order issued on February 27, 1885, by my predecessor, a portion of the tract of country in the territory known as the Old Winnebago and Crow Creek Reservations was directed to be restored to the public domain and opened to settlement, under the land laws of the United States, and a large number of persons entered upon those lands.

This action alarmed the Sioux Indians, who claimed the territory as belonging to their reservation under the treaty of 1868. This claim was determined, after careful investigation, to be well founded, and consequently the Executive order referred to was, by proclamation of April 17, 1885, declared to be inoperative and of no effect, and all persons upon the land were warned to leave. This warning has been substantially complied with.

OUR PUBLIC LANDS.

The public domain had its origin in cessions of land by the States to the General Government. The first cession was made by the State of New York, and the largest, which in area exceeded all the others, by the State of Virginia. The territory, the proprietorship of which became thus vested in the General Government, extended from the western line of Pennsylvania to the Mississippi River. These patriotic donations of the States were incumbered by no condition, except that they should be held and used "for the common benefit of the United States." By purchase with the common fund of all the people additions were made to this domain until it extended to the northern line of Mexico, the Pacific Ocean, and the Polar Sea. The original trust "for the common benefit of the United States" attached to all. In the execution of that trust the policy of "many homes rather than large estates" was adopted by the Government. That those might be easily obtained and be the abode of security and contentment, the laws for their acquisition were few, easily understood, and general in their character.

But the pressure of local interests, combined with a speculative spirit, has in many instances procured the passage of laws which marred the harmony of the general plan and encumbered the system with a multitude of general and special enactments which render the land laws complicated, subject the titles to uncertainty and the purchasers often to oppression and wrong. Laws which were intended for the "common benefit" have been perverted so that large quantities of land are vested in single ownership. From the multitude and character of the laws this consequence seems incapable of correction by mere administration.

It is not for the common benefit of the United States that a large area of the public lands should be vested, directly or through fraud, in the hands of a single individual. The nation's strength is in the people. The nation's prosperity is in their prosperity. The nation's glory is in the equality of her justice. The nation's perpetuity is in the patriotism of all her people. Hence, as far as practicable, the plan adopted in the disposal of the public lands should have in view the original policy, which encouraged many purchases of these lands for homes and discouraged the massing of large areas. Exclusive of Alaska, about three-fifths of the national domain has been sold or subjected to contract or grant. Of the remaining two-fifths a considerable portion is either mountain or desert. A rapidly increasing population creates a growing demand for homes, and accumulation of wealth inspires an eager competition to obtain the public land for speculative purposes. In the future this collision of interests will be more marked than in the past, and the execution of the nation's trust in behalf of our settlers will be more difficult. I therefore commend to your attention the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the repeal and modification of certain of our land laws.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

The operations of the patent office demonstrate the activity of the inventive genius of the country. For the year ended June 30, 1885, the applications for patents, including reissues, and for the registration of trade-marks and labels numbered 35,088. During the same period there were 22,926 patents granted and reissued, and 1,421 trade-marks and labels registered. The number of patents issued in the year 1875 was 14,337. The receipts during the last fiscal year were $1,074,974.35, and the total expenditures, not including contingent expenses, $934,123.11.

There was 9,788 applications for patents pending on the first day of July, 1881, and 5,786 on the same date in the year 1885. There has been considerable improvement made in the prompt determination of applications and a consequent relief to expectant inventors. A number of suggestions and recommendations are contained in the report of the Commissioner of Patents which are well entitled to the consideration of Congress.

POLYGAMY.

In the Territory of Utah the law of the United States passed for the suppression of polygamy has been energetically and faithfully executed during the past year with measurably good results. A number of convictions have been secured for unlawful cohabitation, and in some cases pleas of guilty have been entered and slight punishment imposed upon promise by the accused that they would not again offend against the law, nor advise, counsel, aid, or abet in any way its violation by others. The Utah Commissioners express the opinion based upon such information as they are able to obtain, that but few polygamous marriages have taken place in the Territory during the last year. They further report that, while there cannot be found upon the registration lists of voters the name of a man actually guilty of polygamy, and while none of that class are holding office, yet, at the last election in the Territory, all the officers elected except in one county were men who, though not actually living in the practice of polygamy, subscribed to the doctrine of polygamous marriages as a divine revelation and a law unto all, higher and more binding upon the conscience than any human law, local or national. This is the strong spectacle presented by a community protected by a republican form of government to which they owe allegiance, sustaining by their suffrages a principle and a belief which sets at naught that obligation of absolute obedience to the law which lies at the foundation of republican institutions. The strength, the perpetuity, and the destiny of the nation rest upon our homes established by the law of God, guarded by parental care, regulated by parental authority, and sanctified by parental love. These are not the homes of polygamy. The mothers of our land who rule the nation as they would the characters, and guide the actions of their sons, live according to God's holy ordinance, and each, pure and happy in the exclusive love of the father of her children, sheds the warm light of true womanhood, unperverted and unpolluted, upon all within her pure and wholesome family circle. These are not the cheerless, crushed, and unwomanly mothers of polygamy.

The fathers of our families are the best citizens of the Republic; wife and children are the sources of patriotism, and conjugal and parental affection beget devotion to country. The man who, indelibly with plural marriage, is surrounded in his single home with his wife and children, has a stake in the country which inspires him with respect for its laws and courage for their defense. These are not the fathers of polygamous families. There is no feature of this practice or the system which sanctions it which is not opposed to all that is of value in our institutions.

There should be no relaxation in the firm but just execution of the law now in operation, and I should be glad to approve such further discreet legislation as will rid this country of this blot upon its fair fame. Since the people upholding polygamy in our Territories are reenforced by immigration from other lands, I recommend that a law be passed to prevent the importation of Mormons into the country.

ANIMAL DISEASES.

The prohibition of the importation into several countries of certain of our animals and their products, based upon the suspicion that health is endangered in their use and consumption, suggests the importance of such precautions for the protection of our stock of all kinds against disease as will disarm suspicion of danger and cause the removal of such an injurious prohibition. If the laws now in operation are insufficient to accomplish this protection, I recommend their amendment to meet the necessities of the situation, and I commend to the consideration of Congress the suggestions contained in the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture calculated to increase the value and efficiency of this department.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

The report of the Civil-Service Commission, which will be submitted, contains an account of the manner in which the Civil-Service law has been executed during the last year and much valuable information on this important subject. I am inclined to think that there is no sentiment more general in the minds of the people of our country than a conviction of the correctness of the principles upon which the law enforcing civil service reform is based. In its present condition the law regulates only part of the subordinate public positions throughout the country. It applies tests of fitness to applicants for these places by means of a competitive examination and gives large discretion to the commissioners as to the character of the examination and many other matters connected with its execution. Thus the rules and regulations adopted by the commission have much to do with the practical usefulness of the statute and with the results of its application. The people may well trust the commission to execute the law with perfect fairness and with as little irritation as is possible. But of course no relaxation of the principle which underlies it and no weakening of the safeguards which surround it can be expected. Experience in its administration will probably suggest an amendment of the methods of its execution, but I venture to hope that we never shall again be remitted to the system which distributes public positions purely as rewards for partisan service.

Doubts may well be entertained whether our Government could survive the strain of a continuance of this system, which, upon every change of administration, inspires an immense army of claimants for office to lay siege to the patronage of the Government, engrossing the time of public officers with their importunities, spreading abroad the contagion of their disappointment, and filling the air with the tumult of their discontent. The allurements of an immense number of offices and places exhibited to the voters of the land, and the promise of their bestowal in recognition of partisan activity, debauch the suffrage and rob political action of its thoughtful and deliberative character. The evil would increase with the multiplication of offices consequent upon our extension, and the canon for office-holding, growing from its indulgence, would pervade our population so generally that patriotic purpose, the desire for the public good and solicitude for the nation's welfare, would be nearly banished from the activity of our party contests and cause them to degenerate into ignoble, selfish and disgraceful struggles for the possession of office and public place.

Civil-service reform, enforced by law, cannot too soon to check the progress of demoralization. One of its effects, not enough regarded, is the freedom it brings to the political action of those conservative and sober men who, in fear of the confusion and risk attending an arbitrary and sudden change in all the public offices with change of party rule, cast their ballots against such a change.

Parties seem to be necessary, and will continue to exist. Nor can it be now denied that there are legitimate advantages not disconnected with office holding which follow party supremacy. While partisanship continues bitter and pronounced, and supplies so much of motive to sentiment and action, it is not fair to hold public officials, in charge of important trusts, responsible for the best results in the performance of their duties and yet insist that they shall rely, in confidential and important places, upon the work of those not only opposed to them in political affiliation, but so steeped in partisan prejudice and rancor that they have no loyalty to their chiefs and no desire for their success. Civil service reform does not exact this, nor does it require that those in subordinate position who fail in yielding their best service, or who are incompetent, should be restrained simply because they are in place. The whining of a clerk discharged for indolence or incompetency, who, though he gained his place by the worst possible operation of the spoils system, suddenly discovers that he is entitled to protection under the sanction of civil service reform, represents an idea no less absurd than the clamor of the applicant who claims the vacant position as his compensation for the most questionable party work.

The civil-service law does not prevent the discharge of the indolent or incompetent clerk, but it does prevent supplying his place with the unfit party worker. Thus in both the phases is seen benefit to the public service. And the people, who desire good government, having secured this statute, will not relinquish its benefits without protest, nor are they unmindful of the fact that its full advantages can only be gained through the complete good faith of those having its execution in charge, and this they will insist upon.

I recommend that the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners be increased to a sum more nearly commensurate with their important duties.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The present condition of the law relating to the succession to the Presidency in the event of the death, disability, or removal of both the President and Vice President, is such as to require immediate amendment. This subject has repeatedly been considered by Congress, but no remedy has been reached. The recent lamentable death of the Vice President and the vacancy at the same time in all other offices, the incumbent of which might immediately exercise the functions of the Presidential office, has caused public anxiety and a just demand that a recurrence of such a condition of affairs should not be permitted.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, I commend to the wise care and thoughtful attention of Congress the needs and the welfare of the American Nation. To subordinate these to the narrow advantages of partisanship or the accomplishment of selfish aims is to violate the people's trust and betray the people's interest. But an individual sense of responsibility on the part of each of us, and a stern determination to perform our duty well, must give us a place among those who have added, in their day and generation, to the glory and prosperity of our beloved land.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

SANTA CLAUS.

Where his Headquarters May be Found This Year.

The best indication to us of a stock of holiday goods is its representation in our advertising columns, and our readers will do well to read them thoroughly before making purchases.

G. W. CROUTER

Will fit you out this year with everything you want in the way of toys, cards, albums, books, toilet and perfume cases, etc. Through the center at the entire length of his store are extra tables with shelves to show his large stock of toys and books, which range in price from one cent up. There is no need of any child, no matter how poor the parents, going over the holiday season without something for a present. In the show cases on either side may be found articles of beauty and value to meet the requirements of those with well filled purses. And the attention of this class must be directed to the elegant line of albums, toilet cases, mirrors, etc.

UPRIGHT & EMREY

Seek to gratify the demand for something nice by combining utility and beauty in glass and china ware as well as in various articles of wearing apparel. To a young couple just beginning housekeeping no finer present could be made than an outfit of decorated china, or one of those handsome lamps. The little folks, too, are not forgotten, as will be seen by the generous piles of candy to be found there.

GEO. W. MILLER.

Cannot supply everybody with toys or pictures, but he can sell you some of the finest silk handkerchiefs you ever saw. There is not a boy or man in town who would not be pleased with some of the many articles of clothing to be found in George's large stock.

J. L. HURD & CO.

Enumerate a large list of goods desirable for holiday presents which they are offering at prices greatly reduced from former quotations. Ladies, especially, will find something that will not only please some friend, but be of practical value as well. They announce a special holiday sale of dry goods, and a reference to the list of articles will inform our readers where their money will do the most good.

E. M. CLARK

Does not make a special announcement of holiday goods' but in his stock of dry goods, clothing, etc., will be found many articles that will make most excellent presents.

L. D. BARTHOLOMEW & OO.

In addition to a complete stock of hardware, standard goods, these gentlemen carry a line of rubber and tin toys, and a class of goods which go far toward making a complete assortment of presents.

PERRY WEED

Devotes a portion of his space to an exhibit of dolls, christmas cards, toilet and perfume cases, albums, etc., which will not fail to attract the attention of buyers. His prices will will meet the requirements of people of moderate means, for everything is marked to close margins.

F. G. HINES & CO.

Show up a large stock of most desirable new goods, rich as well as cheap. In the line of toys and dolls none can fail to find something to suit, and his albums in leather and plush cannot be beaten anywhere. In Christmas cards and goods of that class, the buyer has a large and unusually fine assortment to select from.

If you have not already visited the the photo studio of

A. D. BRADBEER

You should do so at once and secure one of the best pictures to be made in northern Michigan. No album is complete without one of Dave's photos.

H. C. COOPER

Would be pleased to sell you anything in his line from an entire outfit of furniture down to a bundle of toys. Your wife will be glad to receive one of those elegant bureaus, or a well made couch.

C. R. BELLINGER

Has a good assortment of silverware, jewelry, clocks, etc., which will help out in making selections. These articles are durable, and if you want to make a present that will "keep" and give pleasure through all the coming years, a piece of silverware from Bellinger's will be the proper article.

FOX & MILLER.

Do not make a specialty of socalled christmas goods, but they will sell a pair of boots or shoes, which will be a most acceptable present to hundreds of boys and girls throughout the country.

And after you get the children well fitted for shoes, go and see

MISS L. SPAULDING,

And buy the girls a new winter hat, or, if you can't afford that, get the old one made over, with a bright new flower or a feather, or a bright bit of ribbon,—all of which will be duly appreciated. And then, too, there is an assortment of lace tidies, collars, and handkerchiefs, and linen splashes and tray covers which will suit the mind of some of your young lady friends. As Miss Spaulding is selling everything at one-quarter off for the holidays you will find a bargain in her goods.

MRS. LITNEY & CARR

Exhibit in their windows a fine line of hats, feathers, laces, silks, etc., which attract purchasers of those goods, and will no doubt find their way into many Charlevoix homes.

I really think it would be better if a change in the party at the head of government could be followed by an entire change of office holders, so that the dominant party could be made to to assume all the responsibility of government and be amenable to the people for the proper discharge of public duty.—Andrew Jackson.

A press dispatch on the 12th says that fees on international money orders, on and after January 1, 1886, will be as follows: For sums not exceeding $10, 10c; over $10 and not exceeding $20, 20c; over $20 and not exceeding $30, 30c; over $30 and not exceeding $40, 40c; over $40 and not exceeding $50. 50c. This is a reduction of one-third of the present rates paid by remitters for such orders.

Traverse City Journal: The Journal is happy to announce that there is but little doubt but the Traverse City branch of the G. R. I. railroad will be extended from Traverse City through Elk Rapids to Charlevoix, returning to Ironton, striking Boyne City and connecting again with the main line at Boyne Falls. If this plan is carried out it will give this northern country the help it has so long needed.

Elk Rapids Progress: The clipping from the Charlevoix Journal last week had the most genuine railroad ring in it of any railroad news we have read in our local exchanges in the past ten years. If our hopes in regard to a railroad are cut down and blasted again, our office and wood will are for sale. We cannot stand these blasted hopes much longer.

Ben Davis, we are sorry for you. The Sentinel has blasted your hopes once more. We thought we were "dead sure" of that road this time. 'Twas a crushing blow, the Sentinel dealt, and we are now forever squelched. Won't East Jordan jump and kick her heels together when she hears of it? But what will poor Boyne City do, who has believed in us so far as to hold enthusiastic railroad meetings to help the thing along?

President Cleveland reminds the railroads which have received "princely grants and subsidies" that public indignation has been aroused and suspicion engendered only because it has been charged that these donations from people have been diverted to private gain and corrupt uses. He reminds the corporations that the nation "does not begrudge its generosity, but abhors peculation and fraud," and that the only way to revive the favorable regard of the people for these great corporations is by honest, upright and liberal action on the latter. This is true. It is a popular fallacy to suppose that the people are opposed to railroads. They are the most useful and necessary enterprises in existence. Without them the country could not exist as a great and powerful nation. The people are eager to encourage their growth and prosperity. But abuse, mismanagement and fraud strip the people of the greater part of the benefits the railroad ought to confer on the country, and against these public indigation is aroused.—World.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, default has been made in the payment of the interest on the money secured by a mortgage, dated the second day of August, 1881, executed by Lucius H. Meade and Sarah Meade his wife, of Charlevoix County, Mich., to George W. Egleston, of New York City, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Charlevoix, in Liber 5, of Mortgages, on page 305, on the sixth day of August, 1881, and the said mortgagee has elected to consider the whole amount of principal and interest due.

AND WHEREAS, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, at the date of this notice, is the sum of One Hundred Eighty (180) Dollars, of principal and interest, and the further sum of Twenty-five Dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding in law or equity having been instituted to recover the debt so secured, or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described, at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door, or outer entrance to Loveday's Hall (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in Charlevoix County), in the village of East Jordan, Charlevoix County, Mich., on the twenty-second day of December, 1885, at twelve o'clock noon of that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, viz: All that parcel of land lieing in the township of Melrose, County of Charlevoix, Michigan, and described as all of the north-west quarter (¼) of section number thirty-six (36), in township thirty-three (33) north of range five (5) west, containing 160 acres more or less.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, made and executed on the twenty-sixth day of August, A. D. 1881, by Eliza Petequom, of Charlevoix county, Michigan, of the first part, to William B. Sargent, of Rock Island, Illinois, of the second part, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for said county of Charlevoix, on the twelfth day of September, A. D. 1881, in liber "4" of Mortgages, on page 336, which mortgage was on the second day of March, A. D. 1885, assigned by said William B. Sargent to Margaret K. Blackmer, of Berrien county, Michigan, said assignment being recorded on the fourth day of March, A. D. 1885, in liber "10" of mortgages, in the registry of said county, on page 630; by virtue of which default the power of sale in said mortgage contained has become operative; and whereas, at the date of this notice, there is claimed to be due upon said mortgage for principal and interest the sum of forty-five and 58-100 dollars [$45.58]; and whereas, no suit or proceedings have been instituted at law to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the state of Michigan in such cases made and provided, the undersigned will sell at public auction or vendue, to the highest bidder, on Tuesday, the Nineteenth day of January, A. D. 1886, at 12 o'clock noon of that day, at the front door of Loveday's Hall, in the village of East Jordan, in said county of Charlevoix (that being the place for holding the Circuit Court for said county), the premises described in said mortgage, or sufficient thereof to satisfy said indebtedness, interest thereon, and costs, solicitor's or attorney's fee, and expenses of sale; said premises being described in said mortgage as follows; The east half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-five (25), in township thirty-four [34] north of range seven [7] west, containing twenty acres more or less, according to the United States survey thereof, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining.

Dated Charlevoix, Mich. October 14th, 1885.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the condition of a certain mortgage, made by Mary Blackbird to John A. Bacot, dated October 3d, A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, for the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, on the 31day of October, A. D. 1884, in liber 8 of mortgages, on page 522, which said mortgage was on the 22d day of December, 1884, assigned by said John A. Bacot to Frederick W. Mayne, said assignment being on record in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 10 of mortgages on page 610, and on the 14th day of December 1885, was assigned by said Frederick W. Mayne to Hugh Miller, said assignment being recorded in the Registers office for Charlevoix county, in liber 13 of mortgages, on page 146, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of One hundred and ninety six and 15-100 dollars, as principal and interest, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof. Now, therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 13th day of March, A. D. 1886, at one o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the town hall in the village of East Jordan, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is holden,) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with ten per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars, covenanted for therein, the premises being described in said mortgage as all that parcel of land, situate in the township of Hayes, in the county of Charlevoix, and state of Michigan, and known and described as follows: The south west quarter (¼) of the south west quarter (¼) of section thirty-six (36) township thirty four (34) north of range seven (7) west, containing forty acres according to the United States survey.

Mrs. John Shrier and children, and Mr. Daniel Durance, have gone to Middlesex, Ont., to spend the winter with relatives and friends.

The East Jordan Enterprise was enlarged last week to seven columns to the page. It is well filled with advertising, and seems to be prospering.

Mrs. M. DePue starts to day for Ionia, where she will spend the winter. She will be accompanied by Mrs. J. A. Hawkins, who goes to Hastings to visit friends.

The Fleetwing arrived last night with a cargo of 1,700 bushels of grain for the Rifenburg mill, and a quantity of hay, pork, oil, coal, etc., for various parties about town.

We learn that the house of Thomas Sheppard, living between Boyne Falls and East Jordan, was entered by burglars recently and $90 with some other valuable articles taken.

No. 5 of the Michigan Manufacturer is at hand, and shows a most gratifying increase of advertising patronage. It is evidently appreciated by those for whom it is published.

From the opening of navigation up to Saturday, Dec. 5th, the steamer Gazelle did not miss a single trip from accident to her machinery or otherwise, and several different times made three trips from here to East Jordan and return the same day.

Upright & Emrey's camp starts up this week. We understand that more than ten times the amount of posts, ties, telegraph poles, and shingle timber, will be gotten out this winter than in any previous one.—East Jordan Enterprise.

We understand that Sheriff Berdan has issued orders that Miss Hostler, the victim of the Trimble assault, must be found and produced. We shall look to Sheriff Berdan and his deputies for her production, an event which will cause general relief.—East Jordan Enterprise.

The Mockingbird came in Sunday morning from her sixteenth trip. Her last trip preceding this was with the fleet of which the three which cleared Sunday were a part, and she loaded and made a trip while they were waiting for fair winds. She will now be stripped and laid up.

On Sunday morning, the tug D. P. Hall, started from here with the schooners Dan Mabee, Eagle Wing, and Melvina in tow. The first named was to be taken to Frankfort, where a steam barge is loading for the same firm in Milwaukee, and she will take her from there. The two last named vessels were to be dropped off the Manitous if the wind was fair.

If a newspaper could be printed to be circulated and read only in the vile and corrupt places, perhaps language could be used that would satisfy the chief manipulator of the sheet across the street, but it can never be done in a paper that tries to be respectable and gain a circulation in homes and families where children and young people have daily access to its pages.

The Sentinel having gone to the railroad company and produced a contradiction of our item of Nov. 26th we shall only say that our source of information we then considered reliable, and the item was given as a matter of news without any desire for sensation, and without the appearance that we might have given it by putting over it a double head, as the Sentinel does over its contradiction. We are not at liberty to use the name of our informant without his consent, and he is at present out of town. He was told by a gentleman claiming to be just coming from the meeting, and who said that a contract had been drawn and signed by the officers of the railroad company and the representatives of three of the leading manufacturing establishments in the Traverse region, guaranteeing that in consideration of certain freights the company would build and operate the line of road mentioned; and that it was definitely agreed to complete the line before the close of navigation next year. The Journal has no desire to circulate falsehoods, or raise false hopes, and gave the news on information that we then thought (and still believe) to be reliable, just as every other live newspaper does every week. The denial of president Hughart raises a question of veracity between himself and the gentleman who first gave the information, but does not, as the Sentinel would have us believe, convict the Journal of publishing a falsehood simply for the sake of a sensation. We shall continue to give all the news obtainable at the earliest possible moment, and while doing it strive to keep our columns free from all disgusting blackguardism.

The School Entertainment.

The most successful and satisfactory entertainment of the year was given by the pupils of the Charlevoix schools at the opera house last night, under the general supervision of Prof. Enos, assisted by his able corps of teachers. The preparation for this entertainment has been done so quietly that few fully realized what was going on until posters announcing the program were circulated, and yet the work was done so thoroughly that not one of the little folks made a mistake visible to the audience. The program consisted of class reading, recitations, songs, etc., and every part was well performed.

Between the 2d and 3d parts of the program, Mr. Geo. Sherwood, of the high school, appeared and announced an act not down on the bills, and requested the teachers to step upon the stage. This request being complied with, a deputation from each department presented its teacher with a handsome present. Mr. Geo. Sherwood handed Prof. Enos a superb silk plush album containing the names of about thirty of his pupils as donors, and also a pretty souvenir picture. Miss Cooper's pupils presented a handsome velvet stationery case and stationery. Miss Nelson's gave a beautiful bible, and Miss Cochran's, not to be outdone for their age, gave to her a fine glass pyramid paper holder. Prof. Enos expressed himself surprised at the mischief which his pupils had been concocting, but thought best to forgive them since there seemed to be nothing vicious in their motives and returned thanks in behalf of his assistants who were too much embarrassed to speak.

We should like to print the entire program, but time and space will not permit, and to undertake to make special mention where all did so well, would be very unsatisfactory. Altogether some 80 or 90 children, little and big, took part, and in almost every exercise there was visible a good moral lesson, which could not help but have a good effect on the school.

The price of admision was put down to 20 cents, and the house was packed. The proceeds will be applied toward the purchase of an organ for the schools, and we may confidently expect other entertainments in the future.

Concise Record of the Week.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

Caucusing.

Senate Republicans.—Upon the meeting of the Republican Senatorial caucus on Saturday, Dec. 5, a motion was made that the caucus proceed to ballot for President of the Senate. Upon the ballot being taken Mr. Sherman received all the votes but four, and upon a motion of Mr. Edmunds the nomination was made unanimous. Mr. Sherman, rising, said:

"SENATORS: I return my hearty thanks for the high honor you propose to confer upon me. Your choice, no doubt has been influenced by the fact that I have long been a member of the Senate. Still my duties hitherto have not given me the practical experience necessary to make a good presiding officer. I can only say that I will do all I can fairly and impartially to observe and enforce the rules of the Senate, and shall rely greatly upon your forbearance and courtesy."

The Republican Senators also resolved to pass at the earliest practicable moment what is known as the Hoar Presidential Succession bill, which was passed by the last Senate, and a bill also reported in the last Congress by Mr. Hoar, best known in former Congresses as the Edmunds bill, to regulate the counting of the electoral vote. The Senate Republicans continued the Caucus Committee which was appointed during the last executive session to determine upon the party policy with respect to Cleveland's nominations. The committee includes Edmunds, Chairman; Allison, Hale, and Spooner. Edmunds is said to be the most determined of this committee to make general opposition to Cleveland's appointments.

House Republicans.—The House Republicans made Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, their candidate for the honorary nomination for Speaker against Mr. Hiscock, of New York, by a vote of 63 to 17. Ryan, of Kansas, was given 3 votes. Mr. Hiscock moved to make Mr. Reed's nomination unanimous. This was done. The following were nominated for the minor offices of the House: For Clerk, Colonel W. O. Crosby, of Iowa; for Sergeant-at-Arms, Captain Albert G. Marsh, Indiana; for Doorkeeper, Colonel Joseph R. Selden, of Connecticut; for Postmaster, A. W. Adams, of Maryland; for Chaplain, the Rev. Dr. F. T. Britt, of Nebraska. Mr. Price, of Wisconsin, offered a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, declaring it to be the sense of the caucus that immediate action be taken by the Forty-ninth Congress for the passage of the Presidential-Succession bill. Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, offered a resolution, which was also adopted, declaring the caucus favorable to the passage of a properly guarded Mexican Pension Bill, with provision for pensioning Union soldiers of the late war, their widows and orphans, similar to the bill passed by the Senate during the Forty-eighth Congress, and declared itself in favor of the unconditional repeal of all limitations on the Arrears-of-Pensions Act.

Senate Democrats.—All the Democratic Senators except four met in conference Saturday, Dec. 5. Senator Voorhees was instructed to put in nomination for President pro tempore Senator Harris of Tennessee. Senator Harris accepted the nomination, and in a short speech thanked the conference for the honor conferred upon him.

House Democrats.—The Democratic members of the House of Representatives met in caucus, and nominated Mr. Carlisle of Kentucky for Speaker. A committee, consisting of Messrs. Randall of Pennsylvania, Hewitt of New York, and Wilkins of Kentucky, was appointed to notify Mr. Carlisle of his nomination. When this gentleman appeared on the floor he was greeted with applause, in response to which he delivered a neat little speech thanking his fellow-members for the honor conferred upon him. The old officers were renominated, with the exception of the Chaplain. The vacancy in the Doorkeeper's office caused by the death of Mr. Winterstaith was filled by the election of Gen. Donelson of Tennessee. Mr. Milburn, the blind preacher, was nominated for Chaplain.

Regular Proceedings.

Both houses of the Forty-ninth Congress met at noon on Monday, the 7th day of December, and promptly organized for business. When the Senate was called to order, John Sherman was elected President pro tem. by a vote of 34 to 29—the latter number being cast for Isham G. Harris. On being escorted to the chair, Senator Sherman made a short speech of thanks. Messrs. Logan, of Illinois, and Blair, of New Hampshire, were sworn in. Mr. Voorhees announced the death of Vice President Hendricks, and offered resolutions of respect to his memory, when an adjournment was ordered. In the House of Representatives 320 members answered the roll-call. Mr. Murphy, of Iowa, was presented with a floral design representing a boat on the Hennepin Canal bearing bags of grain. Representative Frank Lawler, of the Second Illinois District, was also the recipient of several handsome floral tributes, the largest being a rocking chair made of roses. The ballot for Speaker resulted in 177 votes for John G. Carlisle and 138 for Thomas B. Reed. After Mr. Carlisle had voiced his thanks, John B. Clark, of Missouri, was chosen Clerk; John R. Lynch, of Ohio, Sergeant-at-arms; Samuel Donham, of Tennessee, Doorkeeper; and Lycurgus Dalton, Postmaster. Before drawing for seats, Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, was allowed his choice. The death of the Vice President having been announced by Mr. Holman, the House adjourned.

After the reading of the President's Message, Mr. Hoar introduced a bill in the Senate, on the 8th inst., to provide for the discharge of Presidential duties in case of the removal or inability of the President and Vice President; also to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy. Mr. Edmunds presented a measure to fix the day for the meeting of Presidential Electors. Bills were also introduced for the admission of Idaho and Washington Territories as States, to authorize the payment of certain duties in greenbacks, to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears pensions, to allot lands in severalty to the Indian tribes, for construction of the Michigan and Mississippi Canal, for two military posts on the southwestern frontier of Kansas, for two railway rights of way through Indian Territory, to pension veterans of the Mexican war, for the repeal of the timber culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts, to prevent the acquisition of real estate by aliens, to aid in the establishment of common schools, for the encouragement of American merchant marine, to retire the trade dollar, for four bridges over the Mississippi and one across the Missouri, for a navy-yard at Algiers, La., for the erection of thirteen public buildings, and for the cancellation of one and two dollar greenbacks. Mr. Cameron offered a resolution that it is inexpedient to pass any legislation for the reduction of tariff duties. The House of Representatives listened to reading of the message, and immediately adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late Reuben Ellwood, of Illinois.

EASTERN.

Seven men robbed Bentel & Co.'s bank at Freedom, Pennsylvania, blowing open the safe, and securing $12,000 in cash and securities. The fire following the explosion destroyed several thousand dollars. The burglars kept the citizens at bay with revolvers, which they fired several times.

Through the failure of a grip on a cable train at the East river bride two cars slipped back down the curve at the Brooklyn end, crashing into another train. Five persons received serious injuries, among them being Conductor F. E. Meyers. The bridge officials report that the cable road has carried 38,500,000 passengers without losing a life.

The crossbar of a shaft in the new Croton aqueduct, near Merritt's Corners, N. Y., fell on a descending bucket containing five men, four of whom were instantly killed, the fifth receiving mortal injuries.

WESTERN.

Frank Mulkowski, of Chicago, convicted of having murdered Agnes Kledzick, has been sentenced to be hanged January 15, 1886.

Battery D, Fifth Artillery—four guns and seventy men—reached Salt Lake City on the 7th inst. and was escorted to Fort Douglas by five companies from that fort, General McCook riding at the head of the column. Great crowds of Mormons sullenly watched the soldiers march past.

Fire broke out in the Daisy flouring mill at Milwaukee, and when the fire department turned on a stream an explosion followed that blew the roof from the structure and sent the flames high in the air. The Empire Mill, adjoining, then caught fire, both structures being entirely destroyed, with a loss in excess of $200,000. One fireman was fatally, and several others seriously, injured. The insurance amounts to $80,000.

SOUTHERN.

At Gatesville, N. C., Edward Saunders, Isaiah Richardson, and John Swanner, all colored men, were executed for the crime of burglary.

POLITICAL.

Samuel J. Tilden has forwarded to Speaker Carlisle a letter suggesting the necessity of providing for the defense of twelve seaport cities before any reduction in the revenues takes place.

In the Virginia Democratic caucus, at Richmond, Hon. John W. Daniel was nominated for United States Senator by a vote of 65 to 34 for Hon. John S. Barbour.

The President has made the following appointments:

John A. Sullivan to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second District of New York; Lafayette Dawson, of Missouri, to be United States Judge for the District of Alaska; William G. Langford, of Walla Walla, W. T., to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Washington; Charles R. Pollard, of Delphi, Ind., to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Montana; J. Homar Harris, of Mississippi, to be Attorney of the United States for the Southern District of Mississippi; William W. Anderson, of Kentucky, to be agent for the Indians of the Crow Creek and Lower Brule Agency in Dakota; Nathaniel Newburgh to be Appraiser of Merchandise for the port of Cincinnati; Thomas J. Hamilton, of Washington Territory, to be United States Marshal for the Territory of Washington; James W. Porch, of Missouri, to be United States Consul General at the City of Mexico; William J. Timin, to be Surveyor of Customs at San Francisco; James E. Tucker, to be Assistant Appraiser of Merchandise at San Francisco; Van V. Richardson, to be United States Marshal for the Eastern District of North Carolina; John E. McComb as United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Texas. Receivers of Public Moneys—John Montgomery, of Idaho, at Oxford, Idaho; Tyree H. Bell, of Idaho, at Visalia, Cal. Registers of Land Office—Frank W. Benne, of Utah, at Salt Lake City, Utah; Henry Lockhart, of New Mexico, at Santa Fe, N. M. Timothy P. Murphy, to be United States Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa; William L. Daly, to be Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels for the Eighth District, with headquarters at Detroit, Mich. Postmasters—John Fotherigill, at Perth Amboy, N. J., vice J. F. Ten Broeck, commission expired; Byron Bradley, at Reed City, Mich., vice James N. Crocker, commission expired; Samuel D. Garth, at Clinton, Mo., vice I. N. Jones, resigned; Thomas Chalfant, at Danville, Penn., vice C. W. Eckman resigned; Henry N. Wales, at Willimantic, Conn., vice James Walden, resigned; W. H. Brister, at Water Valley, Miss., vice B. G. Boothe, suspended; M. M. Gauze, at Xenia, O., vice P. G. Brown suspended; A. Everhart, at Ripon, Wis., vice C. H. Upham, suspended; William Huber, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., vice Thomas J. Lucas, suspended; Edward M. Kingman, at Jacksonville, Ill., vice John Gordon, suspended; Jacob H. Slade, at McKeesport, Pa., vice S. E. Carothers, commission expired; Harry C. Evans, at Bloomfield, Iowa, vice A. H. Fortune, resigned; N. A. Wade, at Butler, Mo., vice O. D. Austin, commission expired.

WASHINGTON.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury, in his annual report, says there are now in course of construction eighty buildings, calling for a total expenditure of $8,511,400. The expenditures for the year on this account aggregated nearly $2,500,000.

Land Commissioner Sparks issued an order informing those interested that all conveyances and agreements to sell or transfer pre-emption, commuted homestead, or other conditional claims before patents are issued for the same, are in fraud. If enforced, this order will create a panic among Northwestern banks and wherever lands are being pre-empted.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Mexican Government has undertaken the suppression of the rebellion against the local authorities in the State of Nuevo Leon.

The exportation of corn during the present year will be double that of the preceding twelve months. Wheat exportation, however, has decreased considerably.

Miss Susan Morse, daughter of Samuel F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph, recently threw herself from a steamer en route for Havana and was drowned.

The loss by fire in the United States and Canada during November is placed at $7,500,000, and for the eleven months, to Dec. 1, the loss foots up $85,000,000.

FOREIGN.

The situation in the East is again considered grave. Bulgaria proposed new terms for peace, the principal condition of which is a Servia-Bulgarian alliance against Turkey. The Bulgarian Government rejected the terms. The Servians will overthrow King Milan if he accepts dishonorable peace, and Alexander will offer no other.

A cable dispatch says: "The Bulgarians have attacked a Servian division near Knjevatz. The Emperor of Austria has forwarded his decision on the peace proposals submitted to him by the combatants. He is said to favor the union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia, and to oppose the payment of war indemnity by Servia. Turkey has recalled her commissioners and countermanded her orders for the occupation of the Balkans."

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Forepaugh's large Nubian lion, Prince, attacked and lacerated his keeper and escaped from his cage, at the winter quarters in Philadelphia. The lion then pursued its way through the ring barn and entered the open door of the elephant house. What followed is thus narrated by a special from Philadelphia:

Right in his path was Bolivar, the gigantic elephant. Prince hesitated here a moment, and then laid back on his haunches. He crept slowly forward until he was in reach of the elephant. Then he raised his paw and struck at the supine trunk. The tough skin was somewhat torn and the elephant instantly became fully awake. Raising his trunk he made a blow at the lion, but the latter escaped by springing backward. Vainly did Bolivar endeavor to break away from his fastenings. All his strength was insufficient to tear up the stake, and it was too short to break. He bellowed with rage, and his shrill shrieks were taken up by twenty of his fellows. Prince again crouched and sprang, and landed on the elephant's head, but Bolivar easily shook him off and tossed him away. Both elephant and lion were now very much enraged, Bolivar trumpeted and Prince roared, while every animal in the great collection added to the pandemonium. The contest was quickly decided. The lion prepared for another spring. He laid back on his haunches, and, with ears flattened on his head, eyes gleaming like balls of fire, crept forward steadily, cautiously measuring the distance. With a roar the lithe form shot through the air. The elephant's trunk was then turned over his back and his little black eyes were snapping viciously. With a motion so quick as to be almost imperceptible the proboscis was lowered and elevated twice and then came down with terrible force, striking the lion as he was in mid-air, and he fell to the ground somewhat stunned. Before he could recover the elephant dealt him a terrible blow on the side and, reaching forward the full length of his chain, drew the lion toward him, and lifting his free foot placed his whole weight on his fallen foe. The effect was to crush in the ribs of the conquered monarch of the forest. In this manner he trampled all over the lion until life was gone. Even then he did not cease, but continued to trample the body until it was crushed almost to a jelly. Then he raised it with his trunk and tossed it to the other end of the stable. In half an hour all the elephants had become pacific. Bolivar sustained no serious injury, except a slight contusion on the head and on the trunk.

A Chicago company has closed a contract to supply the French army with 2,200,000 pounds of canned beef. It involves the slaughter of 25,000 cattle.

Seven men were buried by the caving of a sewer at Akron, Ohio. Four of them were dead when taken out, and two others can hardly survive.

General Logan will be given his old place as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, Senator Sewell, the present Chairman, taking charge of the Joint Library Committee.

The war preparations of Bulgaria continue unabated. Over one hundred thousand Servians are encamped at Nissa. Turkey sent a note to Italy protesting against the seizure of Massowah, and in return received assurance that the occupation does not affect the sovereignty of the Sultan. Many citizens of Crete have petitioned the powers to be linked to Greece, should Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia be united.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill in the Senate, on the 7th inst., to secure cheaper telegraphic correspondence. It is the same as the postal telegraph bill of the last Congress. A bill was introduced by Senator Van Wyck, providing for the taxation of unpatented lands owned by railroad companies. It requires such companies to pay the cost of surveying and locating land within sixty days after the passage of the act, or that in default thereof the lands shall be subject to entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws and liable to taxation. Bills were also introduced to prevent the diffusion of contagious diseases, to cede the abandoned marine hospital grounds at New Orleans to Tulane University, and for the relief of sufferers by the destruction of the works in Kanawha by Gen. Buell. A resolution was adopted calling upon the Postmaster General for the names of all postmasters in Maine appointed on the recommendation of S. S. Brown, Chairman of the Maine Democratic State Committee, who is charged with extorting money from such appointees. Mr. Blair introduced resolutions for temperance and woman-suffrage amendments to the Constitution. Mr. Brown presented the petition of Alexander B. Lawton, of Georgia, for relief from political disabilities. Resolutions were adopted calling on the President to furnish details regarding international coinage and the rejection of Minister Keiley by the Austrian Government. In the House of Representatives Messrs. OUR POSTAL SERVICE.

The Annual Report of Mr. Vilas on the Condition of His Department.

The Effect of the Reduction of Postage on the Annual Revenues, Etc., Etc.

The annual report of the Postmaster General shows that the total revenue of the Postoffice Department during the last fiscal year was $42,560,813, and the total expenditures $49,602,188, leaving a cash deficiency of $7,041,345, or, with the amount credited Pacific Railroads, a total deficiency of $8,381,571. This difference is due, first, to the decrease of the revenues, which amounts in total only to $2,947,848; and, secondly, to an increase of the expenditures to the extent of $5,466,955, of which $6,042,439 have been in the cash disbursements and $424,516 in the cost of transportation upon the Pacific Railroads. Chiefly the decrease of revenue has resulted from the diminishment in the rate of letter postage from 3 to 2 cents upon the half-ounce, which was the unit of weight during the period, while the increase of expenditures has arisen principally from the natural increase of mails to be carried and the natural extension of the service, although other cases have contributed something to both effects. It is thought that a return of business prosperity will secure a surplus during the ensuing year.

The principal results of the increase of the unit of weight of first-class matter, from a half-ounce to an ounce, are a general increase in the use of the mails, some decrease of the proportion of letters weighing less than a half-ounce, a striking increase of those weighing more than a half-ounce, and some tendency to mail more than formerly, sealed parcels instead of unsealed. The loss of revenue for the year from this cause is estimated at $800,000. The reduction of the rate from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound on second-class matter strikes off one-half the revenue from this source, and, so far, there is no indication of any marked increase in the quantity of such matter to compensate the loss.

The special delivery system has met with public favor, and the Postmaster General says, probably should be extended to all offices and to all kinds of mail matter. It is suggested that postmasters and their clerks at small offices be authorized to deliver such letters.

The breach between the department and the American steamship lines is taken up. After citing the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885, which authorize the Postmaster General to enter into contracts for the transportation of foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points, provided that the mails so contracted should be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts should not exceed one-half the sum of $800,000 appropriated, the report shows that only the routes between New York and Havana and between San Francisco and Japan and China are navigated by more than one American company; and, therefore, it was idle to advertise for a competition which could not be had. The report shows the difficulty of adopting the many plans suggested for securing legitimate competition for the carrying of the mails. The Postmaster General did not consider the adoption of the mileage contract plan compulsory, and declined to make such contracts during the recess of Congress. It was thought best to send the mails by the swiftest ships covering the desired routes—using sometimes the vessels of one line and sometimes of another, as they were available. It was held by the department, after thorough investigation, that the rate of sea postage, 4½ cents per pound for papers and 4½ cents per pound for letters, was a proper remuneration for the service of carrying the mails, but the desirability of showing the friendliness of the Government to American lines was deemed sufficient warrant for extending to them the full inland and sea rate. The Postmaster General says that, in declining to make yearly contracts, he does not render a decision as to the policy of subsidizing American steamship companies. He says:

Much has been said about employing the postal appropriation to aid American commerce. When Congress shall desire to invest the Postoffice Department with care for that object it can not be doubted it will easily choose language which will plainly convey the purpose and impose the duty. Until then, that department can not rightfully employ the moneys appropriated for the postal service to secure objects not intrusted to its care, however meritorious in themselves.

It may be properly further observed of this that during many years the practice of granting pecuniary aid to American lines was pursued at so great a cost and to so little advantage that it was long since wholly abandoned; that, when followed, Congress had directed it, and if that body desired its renewal, presumably it would again have declared the purpose.

The steamship companies running to the south and to Asia rejected the offer of sea and inland postage, and after Aug. 1 refused to carry mails except to foreign countries with which they had contracts. This caused much annoyance to the department, but very little inconvenience to the public.

Between New York and Havana the service is stated now to be three times a week instead of two, as formerly, and within a short time it is expected to be lessened in time to about seventy-four hours, a gain of a day and a half over the time of steamers.

The Australian mail has not been specially interrupted, and a new company has undertaken the service under contract with New Zealand for three years.

Some delays and inconveniences have arisen between New York and Colon, San Francisco and Japan and China, and to the west coast of Mexico, by the refusal of the Pacific Mail Company, and some between New York and Venezuela by the like action of the Red D Company. Except these, all the foreign mails are transported either in the same manner or a better than during the last year.

Early action by Congress is very desirable to grant such means as it shall deem appropriate to relieve the inconvenience sustained on the routes indicated. The department recognizes its obligation to the business men of the country, who have forborne complaint, with but few exceptions, rather than manifest a willingness to see the Government compelled to a course which, upon careful consideration, had been decided inexpedient and unwise to be pursued. They are entitled to the earliest practicable relief which can be given.

The revenue for the next fiscal year is estimated at $47,500,000, and the expenditures are estimated at $55,000,000.

Of the 178 cities where the carrier system is in operation, only seventeen realized more local postage than the expense of the service. The surplus at New York was $1,131,500, at Chicago $154,000, at Philadelphia $292,000.

MECHANICAL.

To REMOVE ruling ink stains from fingers, wash the chloride of lime and then rinse hands in a spoonful of alcohol. The operation should be done quickly, as the lime, of course, eats into the flesh. The alcohol renders the hands smooth again and takes away the disagreeable odor.

THE standard of lubricating oil perfectly safe from spontaneous combustion is as follows: A mineral or so-called "paraffin oil," bearing fire test 300 degrees or more; an evaporation of 5 per cent. or less in twelve hours, and a constant heat of 140 degrees; the greatest degree of fluidity consistent with keeping the oil upon the bearing.

DR. F. H. BOWMAN calls attention to the neglected fact that the prolonged action of boiling water upon wool is injurious. He mentions that wool which looked quite bright after washing in lukewarm water was decidedly duller when kept for some time in water at 160 degrees F., and after treatment in boiling water it became quite dull and lusterless.

THE French tight-closing corks are obtained by soaking good corks for several hours in a warm solution of glue or gelatine, in a mixture of twenty-four parts of glycerine and 500 parts of water. These corks may be still more proof against acids by dipping them, after being completely dried for about ten or fifteen minutes, in a warm mixture of four parts of paraffine and one of petrolatum.

SOME of the best bolt fitting is being done with tapering holes instead of straight holes. The holes are drilled straight, but are reamed with a reamer that is slightly tapering. The bolts are turned by fixed gauge to fit. The taper is really more than .01 of an inch—or on three inches .03 of an inch—but it is just sufficient to make a perfect fit when the bolt is home, and is enough to allow a slight tap of a hammer to start it back. Better fits can be made in this way than by straight holes, and work can be put together and taken apart much more rapidly.

SINCE steel rails were introduced the railroad companies have continued increasing the size and weight of their rolling stock, and the speed of trains has also been materially accelerated, till the rails which carried trains safely ten years ago are not sufficient to endure without danger the blows from the cars and locomotives now in use at the speed the blow is struck. Although trains in Britain maintain a higher average speed than those run on American roads, accidents from broken rails are almost unknown there, the cause of this exemption from breakage being due to the great weight of rail employed. While our leading railroads are using rails weighing from fifty to sixty pounds to the yard, British roads doing similar work have rails weighing from sixty-five to eighty-five pounds to the yard. American engineers assumed that steel rails could not be overloaded by ordinary railroad locomotives or cars; and they introduced rails that were too light in the first place, and the breakages due to inherent weakness are now manifesting the mistakes made. There are many thousands of miles of railroad track laid with steel under sixty pounds weight to the yard. Every train that rolls over this track takes part of the steel away, so that the rails are getting smaller and weaker every year. As this weakness grows, the increase of accidents from breakage will go on. The interests of safety already demand that steel rails on many roads should be renewed with heavier patterns, or that the weight on locomotive drivers and cars should be reduced.

Ventilation and Appetite.

Some curious experiments have been recently made in England in the matter of ventilation and its influence upon appetite.

In a weaving mill near Manchester (according to an English exchange) where the ventilation was bad, the proprietor caused a fan to be mounted. The consequence soon became apparent in a curious manner. The operatives, little remarkable for olfactory refinement, instead of thanking their employer for his kind attention to their comfort and health, made a formal complaint that the ventilator had increased their appetites, and therefore entitled them to a corresponding increase of wages. By stopping the fan a part of the day, the ventilation and vorneity of the establishment were brought to a medium standard, and the complaint ceased.

The operatives' wages would but just support them; any additional demands by their stomachs could only be answered by drafts upon their banks, which were by no means in a condition to answer them. The same paper says that in Edinburgh a club was provided with a dinner in a well-ventilated apartment, the air being perfumed as it entered, imitating in succession the fragrance of the lavender and the orange flower. During the dinner the members enjoyed themselves as usual, but were not a little surprised at the announcement of the provider that they had drunk three times as much wine as he had usually provided. Elderly gentlemen of sober, quiet habits, who usually confined themselves to a couple of glasses, were not satisfied with less than half a bottle; others who took half a bottle now extended their potations to a bottle and a half. In fact, the hotel keeper's supply was drank dry. That gentlemen who indulged in this manner were not aware of it at the time is not wonderful; but that they felt no unpleasant sensations the following morning—which they did not—is certainly curious.

Is Everybody Drunk?

Among the many stories Lincoln used to relate was the following: Trudging along a lonely road one morning on my way to the county seat, Judge —— overtook me with his wagon, and invited me to a seat.

We had not gone far before the wagon began to wobble. Said I, "Judge, I think your coachman has taken a drop too much."

Putting his head out of the window, the Judge shouted: "Why, you infernal scoundrel, you are drunk!"

Turning round with great gravity, the coachman said: "Be dad! but that's the firs' rightful s'cision your Honor's giv'n 'n twel'-mont!"

If people knew the facts they would be surprised to learn how many people reel in the street who never "drink a drop." They are the victims of sleeplessness, of drowsy days, of apoplectic tendencies, whose blood is set on fire by uric acid. Some day they will reel no more—they will drop dead just because they haven't the moral courage to defy useless professional attendance, and by use of the wonderful Warner's safe cure neutralize the uric acid in the system and thus get rid of the "drunkenness in the blood."—The American Rural Home.

Wedded Happiness.

It is undoubtedly a fact that many of the young people who get married nowadays want to begin wedded life where their parents leave off, that is, they desire to put on the same style, so to speak, that their fathers and mothers do, who have been perhaps years in obtaining a certain financial and social position. The consequence is that they almost invariably begin with a grand flourish of trumpets, furnish a house extravagantly, give expensive entertainments, and in the end come to grief. They have not, of course, the money to pay for these luxuries, and they rely on their parents in a great measure for assistance. When this fails their household goods are probably sold under the hammer, or the firm from whom they have obtained them on the installment plan steps in and takes them for non-payment. Then there is likely a separation; the young man goes one way and the young woman another, and if they are ever reunited it is because they have come to the conclusion that this is a practical world, and that people cannot live beyond their incomes without being overtaken with monetary disaster. In a word, if they dance they must pay the piper.

Would it not, then, be better for young couples to begin in a moderate manner, and live strictly within their means? A well-matched couple can be very happy even in one room, if they choose. The old song says very truly, "Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home," and fine furniture and a large house do not always bring happiness. That must be in the heart, and if it is there it will glorify even the most unpretentious abode.

The thought that a young couple are earning everything they have will give a zest to existence that can never be obtained even in a state of partial dependence, and our advice to all young married people is to preserve their self-respect by never spending a dollar that has not been obtained by them through hard work and self-denial. Let them not be under obligations to their own parents, and they will find, if they are frugal and temperate that the years will bring them all the wealth and enjoyment that are worth having.—Exchange.

A Chance for an Argument.

"Tobacco as well as whisky, my dear friend, is an evil," remarked a temperance advocate to a lover of the weed. "Do you imagine that providence, in its bountiful goodness, supplies the warm earth, the gentle rain, and the bright sun to propagate this pernicious and wicked plant?"

"I imagine it does," replied the tobacco adherent, "or we wouldn't have such enormous crops of it."—New York Sun.

Inaction Fraught with Danger.

Inaction of the kidneys and bladder is fraught with danger. Renal diseases of the most stubborn and fatal character have this initial symptom. To disregard it is to invite them. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has the special quality of stimulating urinary secretions and discharge to a degree consonant with health, and no further. It is not an excitant of the organs, like the unmedicated stimuli of commerce. It simply arouses them when their activity and vitality are impaired. This stimulating and tonic action the Bitters likewise exerts upon the bowels, the liver, and the stomach. It averts renal disease, cures dyspepsia, prevents and remedies fever and ague, and removes biliousness and constipation. No finer tonic exists, and to persons with a tendency to gout it strongly recommends itself, as it is a fine depurent of the blood.

A SLIDE DOWN THE BANISTERS.

Sliding down the banisters, though a swift and delightful way of getting down stairs, is not a popular method of descent except among boys of the hobbledehoy age. When, therefore, Mr. Dolph Hotchkiss, a solid citizen of Peoria, Ill., adopted that style of coming down from his room recently it augured that something out of the usual line had happened to him. Such was indeed the case. Mr. Hotchkiss explains as follows why he preferred the railing to the stairs:

"It was last winter, during the month of December. One evening after getting home from the store I was taken with a severe pain in my ankle. It felt at first as if I had sprained it. I was up stairs when the trouble first came on and I wanted to go down. The pain, however, had increased so that I found that it was impossible to walk down the steps, and so I slid down the railing. From that night I began to grow worse, the pain became more severe, and my ankle gradually swelled up until it seemed as if the flesh would burst. It was almost impossible for me to lie in bed, and the least noise or attempt to move me would cause me the greatest agony.

"After being in bed a month I could not stay there any longer. I felt that I must have some kind of a change, and so I was moved into an easy chair, where I lay for two months, suffering more than words can express. My trouble was rheumatism. The doctors could do nothing for me. I used about every medicine I had ever heard of for rheumatism, and many different remedies recommended by my friends and neighbors, but nothing afforded me any relief. A lady friend living in Chicago, hearing of my affliction, wrote me, saying: 'Try Athlophoros. It cured me.'

"I was very glad to try anything. I had tried many different sorts of medicines, but this was new to me. I sent at once and bought a bottle and began using it. I had a terrible buzzing in my head at first, but as it was said in the directions I would have this if the medicine took hold of the disease, I stuck to it. The buzzing was nothing with my sufferings. I think it was on a Monday evening I first began with the Athlophoros. By the following Saturday the pain was nearly all gone, the swelling was very much reduced, and with the aid of a pair of crutches I went out for the first time in three months.

"I continued taking the Athlophoros until I had used four bottles. My pain and swelling had then all gone, and I had no further use for crutches. I have not felt any rheumatism since. Athlophoros is a very valuable medicine. I recommend it whenever I have a chance, and never want to be without some Athlophoros in the house in case I should ever again be so afflicted."

Mr. Hotchkiss' residence in Peoria is at No. 610 Hancock street. Greatly as he regrets the loss of three months' valuable time, not to speak of all the suffering and mental anguish he endured, he feels that there is some slight compensation in the fact that he was made acquainted with a medicine which can cure rheumatism and rob that disease of all its terrors. Mr. Hotchkiss, it is almost needless to state, has never had occasion to repeat his ride on the railing.

Why Brick Walls Grow White.

"I will give any man $100,000 who will produce anything that will prevent a wall of pressed brick from turning white," said a prominent Chicago architect. The remark was called forth by the appearance of the walls of one of the finest office buildings in the city, recently completed at a cost of $500,000. A glance at the huge pile of pressed brick discovered numerous streaks and blotches of white covering the greater portion of the surface of the four upper stories of the grand structure. "That white appearance," said he, "which is unpleasant to the eye, is not injurious to the wall, but it is decidedly objectionable. It is sulphate of magnesia—although generally called saltpeter, and is brought out of the bricks by the moisture in the atmosphere. In a very dry season it does not show itself so much, but in a wet season, it forms an incrustation that makes a brick wall appear at a disadvantage. Many experiments have been tried to prevent its appearance, but without effect. Many walls of pressed brick are oiled as soon as they are completed. This prevents the appearance of the magnesia for awhile, but it comes out in time. The painting of walls is resorted to as a preventive, but it will even come through heavy coats of paint."

C The OLDEST MEDICINE in the WORLD is probably Dr. Isaac Thompson's Celebrated Eye Water
This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. John I. Thompson, Sons & Co., TROY, N. Y

Consumption Can Be Cured!
DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS.
Cures Consumption, Colds, Pneumonia, Influenza, Bronchial Difficulties, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Diseases of the Breathing Organs. It soothes and heals the Membrane of the Lungs, inflamed and poisoned by the disease, and prevents the night sweats and tightness across the chest which accompany it. Consumption is not an incurable malady. HALL'S BALSAM will cure you, even though pronounced incurable.

I CURE FITS!
When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

Around the County.

Burgess.

A good time to skid logs.

Mr. Wilkes of Charlevoix, was visiting at Frank Kane's over Sunday.

Mr. Wm. Baker is going to Norwood with his team to haul logs this winter.

Mr. Austin lost a valuable horse lately, and a subscription to replace it would be in order.

Another alien in town. George Banks is the happy man, weight—yes, waiting for a smoke.

Mrs. Samuel Long and Mrs. Rell Long of Evangeline were visiting at Moses Cooper's on Monday.

Mr. Hale and family are going across Pine Lake to work for Mr. Stripp this winter, to the regret of their neighbors.

When Dr. Lewis is called to visit a patient in this town especially in the evening, it would be well for him to carry a lantern.

Mr. Brown who has been expecting a visit from a brother was made happy by the visit of a little stranger who came to stay until he is 21.

The Hop Yard school house and the one near the state road at Burgess are nearly completed, and the schools will commence about Jan. 1st 1886.

Marion.

Nice sleighing.

Farmers are getting out logs or drawing wood to town making busy times for themselves.

At a special meeting of the voters a few days ago, it was decided to insure the Black school house.

A road has been opened from the county road, near Mr. Smith's house, to the Johnson school house. This will prove a big accommodation to many.

Married, on Wednesday Dec. 9, Mr. Will Withers to Miss Bell Black. The happy couple settle down to housekeeping immediately. The JOURNAL extends congratulations.

THE GREATEST PAIN KILLER

Yet found for cramps, colic, stitch in side or back, neuralgia, rheumatism, sprains, bruises, &c., is HAMILTON'S JAMACIA GINGER TONIC AND PAIN CURE. Bound on with hot wet cloths it never fials to cure. For dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, flatulence, diarrhœa, dysentery, heartburn, sour stomach, &c., it is unequalled. Warranted to cure. Try it. Price 25 and 50 cents.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

MILLIONS OF PERSONS

Die annually, who might be saved if attention was given to the little ills of life. Coughs, colds, sore throat, &c., are easily cured by using HAMILTON'S COUGH BALSAM which removes the tickling in the throat and tightness across the chest, helps to throw off the poisonous matter and heals the inflamed membranes. Immediate relief will be found in croup bronchitis, whooping cough, &c., and even in chronic cases and last stage of consumption great relief is received. For incipient consumption it works like a charm. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

ENRICH THE BLOOD.

HAMILTON'S GERMAN BITTERS are highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic. Especially indigestion, dyspepsia, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, &c. They enrich the blood, strengthen the muscles, and give new life to the nerves. They act like a charm in the digestive organs, remove all dyspeptic symptoms, and whenever the stomach is weak or there is a general loss of physical vigor, these Bitters are just what you need. Only 50 cents per bottle.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

ARE YOUR CHILDREN PEEVISH

And sad eyed? Do they have abnormal appetites and crave food constantly? Beware of worms. Very few children escape their ravages. No child can be happy or well while suffering with worms. They sap the very life by preventing the digestion and assimilation of food. There is a sure remedy. It is called PARMELEE'S SANTONINE WORM CANDIES. They are perfectly harmless but will quickly dissolve the worms pass them off through the bowels. Buy no other. Price 25 cents per box.

Sold by Dr. G. W. Crouter, Charlevoix, and Crouter & Harris, Ironton.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm is a common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Sold by Geo. W. Crouter. 152

City and Country.

When the manufacturing industry took its wonderful start in this country, the work people in the factories were taken from the farm-houses. The farmer's daughters of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, in the neighborhood, flocked to Lowell, and then worked in the mills long enough to earn a good outfit as matrons of families, but they did not expect to make factory work the business of their lives. Manufactures caused a hegira from the country to the cities and villages of young men as well as of young women, and the agricultural newspapers and Farmers' Almanac groaned over the change, and the perverted tastes and instincts of the children of the farm; nor have they recovered from the habit yet, although the labor troubles affect the manufacturing, and not the rural populations. It showed that people could change their employment when greater profit is offered by the new than by the old. The manufacturing interest has grown, and the work people have become a class which forms unions and denounces all class distinctions but their own; and when it is pointed out to them that there is a remedy for the evils under which they suffer, and of which they complain, in the abundance of land, and the certainty of at least a living in farming, the reply is made that they have not been brought up to that pursuit, and to lose their work in the factory is to lose all. But the change is no greater than that for the farm boys and girls when the factories first opened, and many of the operatives have had some experience in agricultural labor. There are at least enough of such to relieve the pressure in all manufacturing industries. There is one peculiarity about farming as a business which distinguishes it from all others. That is, that it gives one a living even if he is unskilled and improvident and incompetent. The shiftless farmer does not starve to death, since the product of a very small plot of land ill tilled saves him from that extremity. The knowledge and skill and energy which would make a business successful in the city or village would make a most prosperous farmer, while a majority of the farmers pursue their calling as their fathers did before them, and put no more brains into it than is convenient, and yet they live in comfort, and have some luxuries which only the rich can enjoy in town. There is no need even of going out West for the country life. The farms have been abandoned for the manufacturing villages, and the pressure of population, and that upon the means of subsistence, will insure that these will be reoccupied again and made more profitable than they were formerly. To a majority of people, however, the town life is so attractive that they prefer want and the prospect of pauperism with plentiful society, and the excitements and variety of collected humanity, to the monotony of the country, with its freer air, greater abundance of all the real necessaries of life, and the nearness to the soil which is the natural refuge of mankind.

Queer things happen at masquerade balls sometimes. One of them happened at Wutch Hill the other night. Says a correspondent: "One young lady and her father were horrified to find that they had been making violent love to each other for half an hour, and mutually agreed to keep the little episode a secret."—Boston Globe.

MANSLAUGHTER.

Barry Convicted and Sentenced to Three Years at Ionia.

We failed to get a complete abstract of the evidence in the murder trial, as we hoped last week. The prosecution examined D. M. Colby, Thomas An-na wis-ky, Dr. J. A. Carlstein, A. J. McLeod, Geo. Burns, Sam Thatcher, Arthur Wilson, Willis Colby, Mathias Sin-ne-wa, John Ba-shaw-ba, Wm. Ba-shaw-ba, Harrison Berdan, and Jane Optegezic. The circumstances proven were substantially as published at the time of the affray, and to the minds of the jury the case was complete. Prosecutor Corbett was assisted by Norton & Keat.

The witnesses examined for the defense were J. R. Dixon, Dr. L. Lewis, Geo. W. Cook, Geo. Pappin, Angeline McSaba, Mrs. Henry Cunningham, Curtis Colby, Wm. Naugezic, Frank Durga, Jas. Graham and Cornelius Barry. Colby and Naugezic testified that Optegezic and two other Indians were seen by them on the hillside in a drunken sleep, after the boys had returned to town; that they had been fighting among themselves more or less all the afternoon and evening, and that when they saw Optegezic they had good reason to believe he was not dead. This occurred some forty rods from where Optegezic was afterwards found dead. It was shown that the Indians had revolvers, and did more or less throwing of stones, and that there was not only a possibility but a strong probability that Optegezic was killed by the other Indians in one of their drunken fights. The defense was conducted by Cruickshank & Grier, F. W. Mayne, and H. A. Jersey.

The jury were out about an hour and returned a verdict of manslaughter. Judge Ramsdell sentenced Barry to three years hard labor at the Ionia reformatory.

Durga, Graham, and Moore were admitted to bail in the sum of $300 to appear for trial at the next term of court, which was at once procured, and the boys are at liberty.

Barry was taken to Ionia by Sheriff Berdan on Tuesday.

Free Reading Rooms.

The board of school inspectors have established free reading rooms in the village hall, in the rooms now occupied by the township library. The rooms are to be well lighted and heated, and will be open from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., under the management of Miss Effie Berdan, librarian. This will make a pleasant and profitable place to spend stormy days and long winter evenings, and we have no doubt many of our young people will take advantage of the opportunity. This arrangement will go into effect the first Monday in January.

The following new books were added to the township library last week:

439—The Hoosier Schoolmaster.
440—Bay Path.
441—Seven Spanish Cities.
442—Roxy.
443—Alfrada.
444—The Three Guardsmen.
445, 446, 447, and 448—Rollin's Ancient History.
449—Gunnar.
450—Within the Shadow.
451—One Commonplace Day.
452—Miss Gilbert's Career.
453—A Family Flight Through Mexico.
454—The Silver City.

Obituary.

Deacon M. F. Norton died at the residence of his son-in-law, A. J. Stroud, of Horton's Bay, on Friday, Dec. 18th, in the 76th year of his age. Mr. Norton has lived at Horton's Bay for a number of years, and was well known all over the Pine Lake region. He was a consistent hard-working member of the Baptist church, and was loved by all who knew him. His funeral was held on Sunday, and was attended by a large number of friends,—among them four ministers: Revs. C. F. VanAuken, and A. M. Parmenter of Charlevoix, Mr. Crane of Horton's Bay, and W. R. Norton, of Boyne City. He leaves a daughter—Mrs. Stroud—to mourn his death.

Perry Hannah to the Press.

Perry Hannah has addressed the following letter of acknowledgment to the Western Michigan Press Association who presented him the badge recently mentioned in these columns:

GENTLEMEN: I have your very kind communication on behalf of the Mich. State Press and Western Mich. Press Associations, transmitting to me by express a most beautiful emblem of their friendship in commemoration of their pleasant visit to Traverse City in July last. Allow me to say, gentlemen, that I receive this valuable present, on behalf of our citizens and myself, as one of the most pleasant events in our history; and I desire to thank you sincerely and assure you that we shall ever cherish it in remembrance as of one of the sunny days that come to all seldom in our busy lives and are so much needed to mould and elevate men to the position of dignity for them by "Him who doeth all things well". If we were instrumental in making your visit at Traverse City enjoyable, we are more than well repaid. I am proud to say that whatever success I have attained in life is very largely owing to the Michigan Press; and in my opinion there is no class who give more of honest labor, or, as much "value received" for services rendered than as your profession. I believe that next to the common schools the journals of our country are the best educators, and are most necessary to the safety of republican forms of government. Whenever you again feel that recreation in the cool air of our north country would be pleasant, you have only to intimate the thought, for our latch strings will ever be out to you.

Very respectfully yours,
PERRY HANNAH.

The oldest white ribbon woman in the world, now in her 98th year, is Auntie Jones, of Smyrna, Delaware.

Our beloved Frances Willard said: "I doubt if there are a score of women in our work who know the origin of the term white ribbon. I am really almost ashamed to confess my own ignorance on that important question, until, at the Massachusetts convention, I met the delegation from Waltham who informed me that Dr. Henry A. Reynolds, the red ribbon reformer, about the year 1876 when working in their town, called the ladies together, as his custom has always been, to organize a Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It seemed to occur to him then that a badge was desirable for the ladies, and as his men wore the red ribbon, and the Murphy movement had adopted the blue ribbon, he suggested the remaining national color, white, for the ladies, calling attention to its significance of purity and peace. This Union claims the honor of being the first to adopt the color, and if we can but remember when we see our ribbons, which I earnestly wish we might wear at all times, that at Waltham, that famous watch making town, to watch out more carefully for twelve o'clock, our noontide time of prayer. The following autumn, under the inspiration of a memorable speech by Margaret Winslow, of Brooklyn, at the fourht national convention, at Chicago, the white ribbon became our national badge. Let us here covenant together that we will wear it constantly and induce all good women everywhere who belong to us to do the same, as far as is possible, remembering as our dear Sister Barney, of Rhode Island, tells us 'The white ribbon stands for purity, consecration, helpfulness, and loyalty to each other and to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—the wearing of a badge that emblems God's white light of truth.' Happy is that brave and patient pioneer, who, on her lonely pilgrimage, unwinds the pure white ribbon that is to belt the globe! Women are born idealists, and respond to nothing so warmly as to an appeal for one who adventures on a noble mission into a territory not yet explored. Mary Clement Leavitt, our round-the-world embassador, is as dear to us as Othello to Desdemona, though in one trait only can they be likened. As Shakespeare says: 'She loved him for the danger he had dared.' Mrs. Leavitt is now in Sydney, Australia, and will remain there until next spring, sailing thence for Asia and slowly moving across the continent. We cannot tell when she may return, probably not for two or three years more, and she has already been two years from home. Sisters, what we can do to cheer her lonely pilgrimage, for such it is and must be in spite of all amelioration, and to assure her lonely daughters at home of our affectionate interest and and regard, will be done promptly and heartily I know. Your ready response with contributions to the 'Leavitt Fund,' the profound interest manifested by our members alike in city and village, in crowded mart and distant farm, the resolutions of loving remembrance adopted by conventions, the fervent prayers in which she is so tenderly remembered, all attest the hold her mission has on us already. I wish the sketch might be read aloud in every local Union that will soon be issued as a leaflet from the Union Signal office, written by Mrs. Mary A. Livermore. A noble tribute it is to Mrs. Leavitt, and will be kept on sale with her photograph at the Signal office, and all money thus gathered will be added to the 'Leavitt Fund.' Our work has proved to us not only that nothing succeeds like success, but that nothing works unity like united working."

Concise Record of the Week.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate on the 10th inst. for a postal telegraph, to relieve commercial travelers from license taxes, for an international tribunal of arbitration, to open to homestead settlement certain portions of Indian Territory, to transfer the barracks at Baton Rouge to Louisiana University, to prevent gambling in the army, and to repeal the law for the settlement of claims of officers and soldiers for the loss of private property. A joint resolution was presented from the Legislature of New Jersey for an inquiry into the fitness of Alaska for a penal colony. The President sent in to the Senate a very large number of nominations, including those of Ministers Lothrop, Curry, Denby, Stallo, Troy, Jacob, Winchester, Winston, Thompson, Zay, Hopkins, and Fearn, Postmasters Judd, of Chicago; Larkin, of Pittsburgh, Paul, of Milwaukee; and Speer, of Denver, and many Consuls, Secretaries of Legation, officials of the Interior Department, officials of the navy, and Postmasters whose appointments have already been published. The House was not in session.

THE Speaker laid before the House, at its session on the 12th inst., a large number of Executive communications, including the annual reports of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Controller of the Currency, and they were laid on the table for the present. Mr. Reed of Maine offered a resolution for the printing of the compilation of the revision of the rules of the House in the Thirty-sixth and Forty-sixth Congresses, stating that they would be of use in the discussion of the proposed change in the rules. The resolution was adopted. Mr. Buck of Connecticut presented a resolution from the Connecticut Legislature, asking that a by-law be passed for the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote. Laid on the table. There was no session of the Senate.

BILLS to suspend the coinage of the standard silver dollar, to make the postal rate on second-class mail 1 cent per pound, and for the erection of public buildings at Lafayette, Indiana, and Newport, Kentucky, were introduced in the Senate on the 13th inst. The chair presented a memorial from the Constitutional Convention of Dakota, with a draft of a constitution under which admission to the Union is asked. Mr. Harrison announced that he would at an early date introduce a bill to confer statehood on the territory. A message was received from the President transmitting the correspondence between the State Department and the Italian Government in regard to the appointment of A. M. Keiley as Minister to the latter country, and also the Austrian protests against receiving the would-be diplomat at Vienna. The correspondence with the Italian Government was brief. Objection was made to receiving Mr. Keiley as Minister to Rome on the ground of his utterances in condemnation of the Italian Government fourteen years previous. Mr. Bayard declined to recognize the force of these objections, and the Government refused to cancel Mr. Keiley's appointment, but the controversy was cut short by his resignation and the appointment of another Minister. He was then appointed Minister to Austria, whereupon Count Kalnoky protested on the ground that "the position of a foreign envoy wedded to a Jewess would be untenable and even impossible in Vienna." Secretary Bayard replied in a vigorous note, in which he declared that this Government could not investigate the religious faith of any citizen, or consider his creed, much less that of his wife, as having any bearing upon his fitness for official station. Count Kalnoky then shifted his position and declined to receive Mr. Keiley on the ground that Italy had objected to him. Secretary Bayard then wrote our Secretary of Legation at the Austrian Court as follows: "From the correspondence two facts appear: First, that the alleged race and religious faith of the wedded wife of an envoy of the United States is held a cause of his rejection; and, further, that objections by a third party—'a friendly power'—are necessary to be removed in order to allow a proper reception to be extended. These conditions are simply intolerable, and are, in the case of the United States, not only inhibited by the plain letter and underlying spirit of our constitution of government, but are inconsistent with that decent self-respect which forbids a nation of 60,000,000 of freemen to accept the position of a diplomatic dependency of 'the friendly power,' whose behests appear to have been acquiesced in and carried out by Austro-Hungary in the present instance."——The session of the House, on the 14th inst., lasted only thirty minutes. The Committee on Rules reported the Morrison code, with some amendments. Mr. Randall presented a minority report, which was in the nature of a protest against the action of the majority.

BILLS for the admission of a portion of the Territory of Dakota as a State, for a public building at Stillwater, Minnesota, for Government aid to the Atlantic and Pacific ship railway, a pension bill for the Mexican war, for the sale of the Kickapoo diminished reservation in Kansas, for a commission to report on a method of inoculation to prevent yellow fever, giving to Mrs. U. S. Grant a pension of $5,000 per annum and the franking privilege, and relieving from political disabilities Gen. Alexander R. Lawton, of Georgia, were introduced in the Senate on the 15th inst. Mr. Cockrell introduced an amendment to the joint code of rules, providing that no liquor be sold in the Capitol, and dismissing any officer or employe who violates or connives at such sale, and making any Senator or member of the House liable to expulsion for the violation of the rule, or for the connivance at it. In the debate that ensued some interesting facts as to the whisky-drinking capacity of the Senators were developed. The amendment was finally defeated by a vote of 38 nays to 28 yeas. The time of the House of Representatives was taken up in debating the revision of the rules of that body, speeches being made by Messrs. Morrison, Randall, Hammond, and others. The President transmitted to the House a report from the Secretary of the Interior upon the condition of the Northern Cheyenne Indians upon the Rosebud and Tongue Rivers, in Montana, the inadequacy of the appropriation made for their support, and requesting legislative authority for the use of certain funds indicated for their relief.

EASTERN.

The will of W. H. Vanderbilt gives to his widow the homestead and an annuity of $200,000. The eight children are to equally divide the sum of $40,000,000 in securities at par. Each daughter receives the house in which she resides, and, in addition to these bequests, the son George receives $2,000,000. The charitable bequests amount to nearly one million dollars, and the balance of the estate is bequeathed to the sons, Cornelius and William K. Estimating the residuary estate at $90,000,000, and computing the market value of the securities specified in the will, the eight children share the money and securities about as follows, the youngest daughter, Mrs. Webb, to receive her principal, $5,650,000, when she shall be thirty years old:

Name.	Absolutely.	For Life.	Total.
Cornelius	$2,650,000	$6,150,000	$8,800,000
William K.	50,650,000	6,150,000	56,800,000
Frederick W.	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
George W.	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
Mrs. Shepard	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
Mrs. Sloane	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
Mrs. Twombly	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
Mrs. Webb	5,650,000	6,150,000	11,800,000
			$182,400,000

An explosion of gas in the Mill Creek mine, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., injured twenty persons. One of the victims died after being taken out, and three others cannot survive. A driver boy had one of his eyes torn from its socket.

A movement has begun in England which, says a cable dispatch, "involves probably the most astounding scheme of political revenge and proscription in the history of this generation. The movement grew out of a meeting at the National Club of those Liberal members-elect whose majorities have been reduced by the casting of the Irish vote for the Tories and of those Liberal candidates for Parliamentary seats who had been defeated by the same tactics. The result of the meeting was the adoption, by a unanimous vote, of a resolution pledging each gentleman present not to employ Irish labor in the future, and to gradually, but as speedily as possible, discharge all Irish workmen now employed by them."

Fire at South Danville, Vermont, destroyed $75,000 worth of property.

A man named Onderdonk was fined at Paterson, New Jersey, for selling adulterated food. He had sold "fresh country eggs" at an unusually low figure, but it was discovered that they were a manufactured article, the shell being of a transparent composition, while the white portion was composed of albumen, and the yelk of ground carrots and saffron.

WESTERN.

Hon. B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri, died at his home near St. Louis, of heart disease. He was born in 1826 at Frankfort, Kentucky, and in 1856 became editor of the Missouri Democrat. He was wounded in a duel with Thomas C. Reynolds before the war. He was Senator in 1863, Governor in 1870, and a candidate for Vice President with Horace Greeley. He leaves nine unmarried children.

A fire at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, destroyed property to the value of $15,000.

Daniel Foley, an old resident of Sibley County, Minn., was murdered near Bella Plain.

Fire in Cincinnati destroyed property valued at $85,000, the principal sufferers being Ross, Robbins & George, paper manufacturers, and Jones Brothers, dealers in electrical supplies. The insurance is placed at $60,000.

The Farmers' Bank at Orrville, Ohio, holding the deposits of several adjacent townships, closed its doors.

A count of the grain elevators in the Northwest has been made by a St. Paul paper. The result is a total of 1,513 houses, with a total capacity of 54,000,000 bushels. Excluding those in Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth, which are counted in the statement of visible supply, the aggregate capacity is about 33,000,000 bushels. The country elevators are believed to contain not more than ten to twelve million bushels, but the number of the houses is much larger than had been supposed by parties in the trade.

In the Gunnison country in Colorado the snow is six feet deep, and at Silverton its depth is two feet.

Mueller's large saw-mill, at Davenport, Iowa, was burned, entailing a loss of $30,000.

The defalcation of J. B. Mannix as assignee of Archbishop Purcell's estate, at Cincinnati, has caused such a flurry that business men generally refuse to become bondsmen in any case. Judge Goebel says that unless confidence is restored the business of his court will come to a standstill.

SOUTHERN.

Gen. W. C. Wickham has succeeded Senator Mahone in the executive management of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad.

Mayor Reed, of Louisville, Ky., pleaded guilty to fighting in the street over an election bet, and was fined twenty dollars, which he paid.

Proceedings have been commenced to contest the recent elections at Atlanta, where the Prohibitionists carried the day. The saloon-keepers take the ground that the act adopted is unconstitutional in that it allows the sale of Georgia wine, and prohibits wine from other States; then, again, it is held to be unconstitutional because it allows elections in "wet" counties but not in "dry" counties, thus failing to be uniform throughout the State. Several days will be consumed in the arguments.

While attempting to ford the Chattanooga River, near Tallulah, Ga., Ernest Atwood and his bride, Miss Stella Wadsworth, were drowned.

Robert Toombs, whose prominence of late years has grown chiefly out of his refusal to recognize and acquiesce in the results of the war, died last week at his home in Washington, Ga., aged 76.

The Arlington Cotton Mills at Wilmington, Del., were destroyed by fire. The loss is between $75,000 and $100,000.

A Georgia Pacific Railway train, freight and passenger, stopped on a trestle fifteen miles from Atlanta, to obtain water. An East Tennessee train, going at the rate of thirty miles per hour, dashed into the standing train, telescoping the sleeper. The escaping steam and boiling water soon flooded the car, scalding to death ten persons. Six others were fatally scalded, portions of their bodies being literally boiled. About a dozen others were maimed or burned in a painful manner.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary of the Interior Lamar has requested the President to ask Congress for an appropriation of $12,500, out of which to aid Cheyenne Indians in Montana who are reported starving.

The Second Comptroller of the Treasury has given an opinion that pensioners living in the United States can not give to other persons the powers of attorney to receipt for their allowances, but agents must draw and forward checks to each pensioner.

The War Department refused to interfere with the Illinois Central Railroad Company building a pier in Lake Michigan, on the ground that it would do no damage to the harbor, and on the further ground that it was a matter properly within the jurisdiction of the State.

In the case of Angus Cannon, of Utah, indicted under the Edmunds act for unlawful cohabitation, the judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory has been affirmed by the Federal Supreme Bench.

Dr. C. V. Riley, Entomologist of the Department of Agriculture, and Honorary Curator of Insects in the National Museum, has donated to the National Museum his extensive private collection of North American insects, representing the fruits of his labors in collecting and study for over twenty-five years. His collection contains over 20,000 species, represented by over 115,000 pinned specimens, and much additional material preserved in alcohol or by other methods. It is estimated by those familiar with the collection to have a money value of at least $25,000. Professor Baird expresses his warmest appreciation for this generous gift, and his assurance that, both now and in the future, it will afford a valuable means of study for entomologists.

POLITICAL.

The resolution offered by Eugene Hale in the Senate, calling for a list of Postmasters removed and appointed in the State of Maine at the instance of National Committeeman Brown, is regarded as the preliminary attack which the Republicans propose making on the President's confirmations.

Senator Hale is said to favor confirming President Cleveland's good appointments and rejecting the bad ones. This, it is stated, expresses the attitude of many Republican Senators.

The President has appointed the following Postmasters:

John A. Barry, at Oswego, N. Y.; John G. Randall, at Doylestown, Pa.; George Shortall, at Norristown, Pa.; M. S. Longaker, at Pottstown Pa.; John Haviland, at Phœnixville, Pa.; W. B. Colston, at Martinsburg, W. Va.; Daniel J. Sherman, at Ashtabula, Ohio; Thomas Hubbard, at BeHefontaine, Ohio; Ringgold W. Meiley, at Lima, Ohio; R. B. Gordon, jr., at St. Marys, Ohio; James W. Talbot, at Middleport, Ohio; W. C. Clark, at Paducah, Ky.; Erastus P. McKinney at Lacon, Ill.; Henry E. Wadsworth, at Laporte, Ind.; Joseph Brelsford, at Onarga, Ill.; A. J. Weber, at Albia, Iowa; John H. Smith at Hedford, Iowa; A. C. Hutchinson at Burlington, Iowa; Clara W. Snyder at Racine, Wis.; Ransom Nutting at Decatur, Mich.; Angelo Tower at Ionia, Mich.; Charles R. Vaunn at St. Helena, Cal.

Hugh O'Brien was re-elected Mayor of Boston by a majority of 8,597 over J. M. Clark, Republican.

Gideon C. Moody and Alonzo J. Edgerton have been elected United States Senators from the proposed new State of Dakota.

Friends of George H. Pendleton send out from Cincinnati a denial of the rumor that he intends to resign the mission to Germany and return to the United States.

Mr. Peel will be retained as Speaker of the new House of Commons.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The forces of the Acting Governor of Nuevo Leon, Mexico, fired on General Reyes and party at Monterey, killing an officer and three privates, and wounding six men. General Reyes ordered out the Federal forces, and summoned 200 men from Lampazos by special train. General Reyes has been appointed by President Diaz Military Governor of the State.

The total number of failures reported in the United States for the week was 221, as against 247 the previous week. In the corresponding week of 1884 the failures amounted to 361; in 1883, 249; in 1882, 220; and in 1881, 169.

The funeral of Louis Riel took place at St. Boniface, Manitoba, with seven hundred half-breeds in attendance, six of whom bare the remains six miles on their shoulders. His mother trudged along in the procession until exhausted.

Colonel Gainda and 200 Mexican revolutionists had a battle with the municipal authorities of Linares, Mexico. On being repulsed, the former retired to the mountains to reorganize.

The American steel-rail companies have extended the maximum limit of production for 1886 to a million tons. Ninety per cent. of the syndicate coke-ovens in the Connellsville region of Pennsylvania are now in blast.

The New York Produce Exchange estimates the visible supply of grain as follows: Wheat, 58,149,517 bushels; corn, 5,955,728 bushels.

FOREIGN.

King Thebaw has been sent into exile at Arcot, near Madras.

The funeral of Herr Strassman, President of the Municipal Council of Berlin, a leading Hebrew, was made the occasion to rebuke Jew-baiters. The Emperor sent handsome wreaths of flowers to the funeral, and the car was followed by thirty thousand persons.

M. de Lesseps is said to be very indignant at the severe criticisms of various American papers of his Panama Canal, and reiterates that he expects to live to sail through the canal himself.

A bloody engagement took place between the Servians and Bulgarians, near the town of Veleki-Isoor, which was wrested from the Bulgarians. The Servians claim a brilliant victory. Great uneasiness is occasioned at Philippopolis by rumors concerning the menacing attitude of the Turkish troops on the frontier.
